GEORGE W. ALLEN, an exhibitor of New Bedford, Mass., is ill at St. Luke's Hospital of that city. Mr. Allen is suffering from appendicitis. A bunch of exhibitors, using General Film Service, collected a nice sum of money, and sent a very beautiful bouquet of flowers to Mr. Allen, with a card reading: "From the Bunch," all of which goes to show that exhibitors in this section have a real brotherly spirit to one another.

Moving Picture "fans" who seek wholesome amusement, and wish to see exciting incidents portrayed in the hunt of wild animals of the African jungle, as well as to gain a lesson in natural history, welcomed the return of the Paul J. Rainey African hunt reels, which returned to Tremont Temple, Boston, a week ago. These pictures had a long run at Tremont Temple last summer. Prices are up to 75 cents.

The late theater trains which were put on the Boston & Maine, New Haven, and Boston & Albany railroads last February, may be discontinued because of lack of patronage. Whether this will effect the business of Boston photoplay theaters is an open question. The Railroad Commission has the matter of continuance under advisement, and it is probable it will discontinue the service, although nothing definite has been decided upon.

A recent incorporation is Cubberly, Inc., of Malden, Mass. Messrs. Carle P. Cubberly, J. Frank Williams and Frank E. Drew, are the officers of the concern, which filed papers, with $5,000 paid in. A first class, modern theater will be built by Cubberly, Inc., to be devoted to vaudeville and photoplays.

The Star Picture Company, of Eastport, Me., filed its certificate of incorporation last week, with a capital of $10,000. The promoters are: William Hicks, of East Machais; William E. Buck, of Eastport, and A. D. McFaul, of Machais.

Plans were submitted to the inspector of buildings in Malden, Mass., last week, for a new theater, to cost approximately $55,000, and to be located on Main street, just north of City Hall. The plans have been carefully gone over by Mayor Schumakers and others. The building is to be of brick construction, and will be fireproof, and thoroughly modern in every respect. The cost of the building will be $40,000, in addition to the cost of the theater. Malden theater-goers usually avail themselves of the Malden Auditorium, which is one of the finest theaters in Massachusetts. Indeed the Auditorium was built too extravagantly for the size of Malden. The proposed theater will have to be particularly fine if it is to compete with the Auditorium.

The first motion pictures of the Boston Chamber of Commerce party sailing for South America were exhibited at B. F. Keith's Theater, Boston, last week. Many members, prominent Boston business men, are easily recognized in the reel, which made it of much local interest.

James E. Moore, who formerly managed B. F. Keith's Theater, Portland, Me., is no longer operating his moving picture theater at Biddeford, Me. Mr. Moore was anxious to leave Biddeford, and availed himself of an opportunity to give up the lease on the theater.

B. F. Keith's Hippodrome Theater, Portland, Me., now playing programs of vaudeville and pictures, will start on its summer policy of stock-company attractions on June 2. The Hippodrome will return to the regular policy in the fall.

Messrs. Gray and MacDonald, of Lewiston, Me., have secured a lease on the Cape Theater, and will start to give programs of vaudeville and pictures, on June 23. The Cape Theater had formerly been devoted to dramatic and stock company attractions, but there is no reason why a success cannot be made with photoplay programs, as the Cape is well located and of modern construction.

There's romance in the Salem, Mass., moving picture theaters! The local dailies told this week how D. F. Healy, of 277 West 128th Street, New York, and Grace F. Hartnett, of Salem, became acquainted while the latter was singing in a Salem photoplay house, and were married in New York last week.

Matt Saunders, formerly in charge of S. Z. Poli's Wilkesbarre, Pa., theater, and also of the Poli Theater, New Haven, Conn., is now in charge of Poli's new theater at Bridgeport, Conn. This is somewhat in the nature of an honor for Mr. Saunders, as Mr. Poli's Bridgeport theater is considered the finest and most modern house on this circuit, with a seating capacity of 3,300. The new Poli is doing a capacity business with vaudeville and picture programs. The Plaza Theater, of Bridgeport, is now managed by Mr. H. Reichenbach, as Mr. Saunders cared for this house until recently.

Salem, Mass., is getting loads of free publicity, and Mayor John F. Hurley (plus moving pictures), is the cause. The Mayor claims he put the "Sale" in Salem, and asserts he played before the moving picture camera for the purpose of boosting Salem; and at the request and suggestion of the Board of Trade. There is some talk of "recall" for the mayor, and whether an attempt will be made to recall Mr. Hurley or not, his action in rescuing his high silk hat from his own "burning house," for the edification of moving picture patrons, has made staid, old, Puritanical Salem sit up and take notice.

The Columbia Theater, Bath, Maine, has been leased by the Burt & Burt Company. Some needed alterations and improvements are contemplated by the new owners, after which the Columbia will be operated as a photoplay house, no vaudeville being used according to present plans.

Adams, Mass., is not a particularly large city, but it is assured of having a large and up-to-date theater in the near future, to be devoted to vaudeville and photoplays. E. K. Peck, a local attorney, and Mr. William B. Plunkett, a prominent manufacturer of cotton goods, are behind this new project. Plans are now being made by E. S. Osteyee, of Pittsfield, Mass., calling for a theater to seat 800 persons. The new theater will be along the same general lines as the Union Square Theater, Pittsfield, Mass., which was designed by Mr. Osteyee. The new theater should do very well, provided the right sort of programs are given. The house will probably be ready for its opening by early fall.

Richard E. Henderson, of Wells River, Vermont, has just purchased the Pavilion Theater at Barre Vt. Mr. Henderson now owns five theaters, and operates three others under lease. The Pavilion Theater is a first class, modern house, in every way, and is counted as about the best playhouse at Barre. Mr. Henderson will give vaudeville and picture programs, and it is safe to predict will do a paying business, as all the Henderson houses are winners, due to efficient management.

Manager H. A. Chenoweth, of the Shawmut Theater, Blue Hill avenue, near Grove Hall, Boston, is making a distinct success of his work. The Shawmut is doing a capacity business, due to the able direction of "Chene." Feature pictures, such as Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," and unusually good vaudeville acts, are turning the trick. Manager Chenoweth has inaugurated song demonstrators' contests, which are proving very interesting to the audiences. One would have to go far before finding a better conducted house than the Shawmut.

Gordon's Olympia Theater, Boston, has finished its first year, and it was a mighty successful one, without any question. Vaudeville and licensed pictures have done very well by the beautiful Washington street theater, which is one of the finest and most luxurious theaters in the country. On anniversary week an unusually large program was offered, and, as a special attraction, the unique lecturer, Geoffrey L. Whalen, gave a most interesting discourse on the feature picture, "A Tale of Two Cities." Manager Commerford is greatly pleased with the Olympia's showing in its first year, and remarks that he intends to keep things up to their present high standing at his house.

William H. Stevens, manager of Keith's Theater, Lowell, Mass., for the last two seasons, has resigned to accept a position as manager of the Thurston-McCormick Company, which is playing in New England. Manager Stevens is a great favorite with the trade in this section, and carries with him the best wishes of his many friends in his new venture.

S. Z. Poli, the head of the large string of New England theaters, playing vaudeville and picture programs, together with Mrs. Poli, has started on a pleasure trip to Mt. Clements, Michigan, making the journey by automobile.

William Rohan will again be seen as manager of Forrest Lake at Palmer, Mass., which will open on May 30, after which the theater will remain closed until June 16, the start of the regular summer season.

The New Broadway Theater, which opened last week at Springfield, Mass., is playing stock company attractions, but it is expected that vaudeville and picture programs will be in order by early fall. H. I. Dillenback is general manager of the Broadway, and Daniel D. Scullen is manager. The Broadway is a large, modern and thoroughly fireproof theater, and is in opposition to the local Poli Theater, at Springfield.

Ralph Ward, manager of the Opera House, Lowell, Mass., reports that the Kinemacolor pictures of the Panama Canal, and Balkan War, did a very satisfactory business for him the week of May 5.

On May 1, Manager L. V. Colby opened the Columbia Theater, Taunton, Mass., to the public with a program of vaudeville and pictures. The Columbia has been very carefully altered and redecorated. No expense has been spared to put the Columbia in the class of modern theaters. A stage and balcony were added. Manager Colby reports that business has picked up greatly, and he feels that the new Columbia will easily be able to secure its share of the trade.

New Hampshire and Vermont exhibitors, attention! President Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, would like to hear from you if you are a live-wire, progressive moving picture exhibitor.

The Scenic Temple, Boston, continues to do its share of the business, month in and month out. Just now, the Scenic presents an appearance of general attractiveness, with its potted plants and ferns, and Springtime decorations. With competition very keen, the Scenic does as well as ever, and its high class appearance unquestionably accounts in good measure for its well sustained patronage.

The Globe Theater, Boston, playing vaudeville and picture programs, has inaugurated its regular summer season prices of 10 and 15 cents. The Globe does a very nice business.

On May 14, Massachusetts exhibitors saw their pet "hour bill" go down to defeat at the hands of the Senate. This body spent the last part of the day on the bill to extend the time of exhibiting films from 20 minutes to one hour, and to limit the projection of kinemacolor films to 20 minutes, which was defeated two weeks ago. By a vote of 14 to 7, reconsideration prevailed. Senator Blanchard, of Somerville, Mass., moved the reconsideration of the vote, whereby the Senate on April 24, amended the bill to substitute 45 minutes for one hour. A spirited debate ensued, with the result that the "hour bill" championed by the Massachusetts branch of the Exhibitors' League, was again rejected by voice vote. The Senate claims that it is against public health as well, perhaps, as public morals, for the films to run longer than 20 minutes, without five minutes of some other form of amusement being given. This law practically kills the multiple reel for the State, and, of course, the possibility of feature pictures is greatly lessened by the enforced five minute wait, between reels. The exhibitors have Senator Horgan, of Boston, to thank, in great measure for the death of the bill. The Senator waxed unusually eloquent, and made an impassioned (and absurd) plea for the retention of the present 20 minute law. The Senator's arguments fell on favorable ears, which tells the story in a nut shell.

Manager Frank, of Marcus Loew's latest Boston theater, the St. James, states that he now has the trade coming his way, and that good programs of vaudeville and photoplays are all that is needed to make this house a money-maker.

F. G. Spencer, an amusement promoter of Canada, and controlling a string of thirteen theaters devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures, is about to renovate his St. John theater. Mr. Spencer is to build an entirely new front for this house, and expects to get his plans made by a Boston, Mass., concern. B. F. Keith is soon to open a theater, nearby to Mr. Spencer's house, and the latter is now preparing for the new competition.

It is rumored that the Globe theater, Boston, is on the market, but the report has not been verified, although it come from a reliable source. The Globe formerly was a "legitimate" theater, but for many months has been offering vaudeville and photoplay programs. It is considered to be doing a satisfactory business, but trade is not as brisk there as it was before the Olympia opened nearby.

A license for a moving picture theater has again been granted at Woburn, Mass. Mr. John Finn managed to have the license granted, but not until he had worked on it for some time. Lyceum Hall has been secured by Mr. Finn. Woburn has had no photoplay theaters recently, owing to the action of the mayor, who suddenly cancelled the licenses, which the theater owners could not get re-instated although they went to court over the matter.

A recent incorporation is Koen Brothers, Inc., of Salem, Mass., of which John E. Koen, William H. Koen and Joshua B. Merrill, are the officers. Koen Brothers are very widely known in this territory, and operate the new Federal Theater at Salem. The concern is incorporated for $65,000.

Presbyterian churches in New England have announced that the Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sunday School Work is prepared to introduce moving picture machine into Sunday schools. This is a very pleasing piece of news, and shows that the Board realizes the moving pictures can become a powerful ally in teaching the story of the Bible.

With the opening of the Broadway theater, in Springfield, Mass., the Goldstein Brothers' Amusement Company, added another theater to their long chain of houses in this territory. Besides the new Broadway theater, this enterprising concern controls and operates the Plaza theater, Springfield, Bijou theater, North Adams, Mass., the Plaza theater, Northampton, Mass. New Opera House Westfield Mass., New Opera House, Exeter, N. H., and the Bijou theater Hampton Beach. The firm also runs park resorts at Mountain Park, Holyoke, Mass., and Hampton Beach, Hampton, N. H. In addition to all these houses, Goldstein Brothers own a number of small theaters, devoted to programs of photoplays and songs. At the head of the entire circuit, is H. I. Dillenbeck, a very capable and energetic executive, who knows his business thoroughly.

The Pastime theater, Lawrence, Mass., is closed and will not reopen until the middle of August. This is a picture house managed by William White. Manager White intends to keep his opera house, of that city open the entire summer, as this theater usually does a capacity business, with large programs of vaudeville and pictures.

Keith's theater, Lowell, Mass., has a new manager, in the person of Benjamin Pickett, who should make a good showing in his new position as he has been connected with Keith's for the past two seasons.

Manager Mosher of Keith's Hippodrome theater, Portland, Me., has made arrangements to offer stock company attractions starting June 2. The Hippodrome will continue to play vaudeville and pictures, as soon as the hot weather is over.

The Gaiety theater, Springfield, Mass., reopened to the public on May 5, after having been closed, while it was thoroughly overhauled and generally improved. Reports state that business has improved greatly since its opening. The Gaiety now presents a modern appearance and should get its share of the trade.

Messrs. Fisher & Reed, proprietors of the Opera House, Newton, Mass., celebrated the anniversary of the opening of their theater on May 14, in a highly fitting manner. The Newton Hospital was given the entire receipts on that day and this action of Fisher & Reed created any amount of favorable comment. The mayor of Newton, Charles E. Hatfield, publicly thanked the concern for its generosity. The Newton Opera House, as a general thing, plays to capacity business, with vaudeville and picture programs and this anniversary week was no exception to the general rule. The house is well managed, and is conducted along up-to-date lines. It is always a mighty good plan to give a day's receipts to some charitable institution, on a special occasion, like this one, as the results in the good will secured are of great value to a moving picture theater, especially if situated in the smaller towns.

It looks very much as if Springfield, Mass., is to have another theater, in the near future. The Hampden Realty Company has about decided to erect a large theater at the corner of Bliss and Main Streets, and plans are now being made which call for a modern and thoroughly fireprof theater to seat 1,500 persons. The new house will be devoted to the exploitation of vaudeville and pictures. Although Springfield has a number of photoplay houses, yet the proposed theater has an unusually good location, and should get its share of the available trade.

S. Z. Poli has leased the new theater which P. D'Esopo is about to build on the old City Hotel property, in Hartford, Conn. The theater will be a vaudeville and photoplay house, and will be one of the finest theaters in Connecticut. Mr. Poli's chain of New England theaters is growing steadily, with a new addition almost each month.

The Globe theater, Boston, playing vaudeville and picture programs, has inaugurated its "summer prices," which are: 10 cents for all seats from 10 in the morning, until 6 at night, and 10 and 15 cents for all seats after 6.

The National theater, Boston, a Keith house, playing vaudeville and pictures, has started on its summer schedule, which calls for three shows daily. The National expects to remain open during the entire summer, as business is holding up in good shape.

The regular monthly meeting of the Massachusetts branch of the Exhibitors' League, which was postponed twice, is now definitely called for Tuesday, May 20, at Lagrange Street "Headquarters" It is believed that some important matters will be given attention at this meeting, which will be reported in these columns, next week.

The Mutual Film Corporation's Boston offices sent exhibitors in this section a special invitation to an advance showing of the New York Motion Picture Company's "Battle of Gettysburg," at the Back Bay theater, Dartmouth and Columbus Avenue, Boston, on May 20, at 2 p.m. The Mutual folks confidently expect that the "great $75,000 production" will create a real sensation among exhibitors.

Starting Monday, May 19, the Gaiety Theater, Washington Street, Boston, a burlesque house, inaugurated a supplementary season of moving pictures. The Gaiety plans to show only exclusive feature subjects and a real "thriller" was secured for opening week, "The Gunmen of New York." Four shows will be given daily, two shows each afternoon from 1 o'clock till 5, and 2 in the evening from 7 o'clock till 10.30. The Gaiety has played picture programs during several summer seasons, and usualy did well, as the theater is one of the best appointed houses in Boston and has a good location. "Capturing Wild Animals" was another feature for opening week.

Theatrical employes from all over New England convened at Lincoln Hall, Fitchburg, last week to attend the semi-annual convention of the New England district of the International Theatrical Employes. F. H. Abbott, president of the Fitchburg organization, extended the address of welcome. Charles T. Shea, of New York, international president. George E. Rock, of Worcester, Mass., international vice-president; John J. Barry, of Boston, state president, all made addresses. International President Shea presided, and W. W. Dillon of Fall River acted as secretary. The convention was attended by 47 delegates, representing 31 lodges. On the second day of the convention, managers of theaters were admitted at a smoke-talk.

James P. Baxter, of Portland, Me., has returned to that city, after a trip through Japan, and denies that he intends to erect a new theater to be devoted to vaudeville and picures, on the corner of Congress and High Streets. The rumor still persists, however.

Manager George A. Wardwell, of the Kincaide Theater, Quincy, Mass., reports excellent business, with programs of Mutual films. Mr. Wardwell intends to keep his theater open all summer, unless trade should take an unexpected slump, which is unlikely, to judge from present business.

Moving picture theaters are open on Sundays at Lawrence, Mass., in spite of the efforts of a number of local clergymen, who did their level best to have the theaters closed. The "Lawrance Critic," in an extremely able article does not mince words and remarked that the clergymen did not give the matter thorough consideration. It is certainly going beyond the line of religious duty to deprive the public of its Sunday relaxation and amusement. The "Critic" also remarks that the moving picture films and theaters are amply regulated by strict State law. "The liberty of the residents of Lawrence to go where they will on any day within the law, may be placed in jeopardy, if the clergymen persevere in their efforts," says the "Critic." The moving picture interests of Lawrence recently held an important conference with Mayor Scanlon, when the latter outlined the situation regarding Sunday shows, and urged the moving picture exhibitors to co-operate with him, and the ministers' association in elevating the industry to the highest possible plane in Lawrence. The mayor suggested at this meeting, that the large signs outside the theaters be taken in on Sundays, and also put it up to the managers to be unusually careful in the selection of subjects for Sunday exhibition. To all this, Lawrence moving picture exhibitors heartily agreed, and now everything is going smoothly in Lawrence, as far as motion pictures are concerned. Mayor Scanlon deserves the sincere respect of moving picture interests for his manly and sensible stand on this question of Sunday shows, as the clergy were particularly active, using every means at their command, to force His Honor to close the photoplay houses on the Sabbath. The "Lawrence Critic" also did much to help the exhibitors gain their point.

The G. W. Trainer Manufacturing Company, with offices at 39 Pearl Street, Boston, reports that they have installed a number of asbestos curtains and operators' booths, in the New England territory during the last month. The concern, has issued a very instructive booklet for any house thinking of having any work done, requiring asbestos.

The R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, Boston, reports that it has installed a Power's Cameragraph No. 6A, in the Casino theater, New Bedford, Mass.

Manager Eslow, of the Boston offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, opened headquarters at Waterville, Me., to take care of his growing trade in that section, only to be closely followed by the General Film Company, which is now opening an office at Bangor, Me., as a distributing depot for licensed exhibitors in that state. Suitable quarters have been secured at 123 Franklin Street, from John R. Graham. G. N. Sporcey, of Boston, has been delegated to take charge of the Bangor office. The writer understands that the building is fireproof and well adpated to the needs of a film exchange.

HENRY.

LOUISVILLE.

THE National Picture Company, of Louisville, has begun work on its new moving picture house in Crescent Hill, residents of that section having withdrawn their objections. The "Crescent," as the new house is to be known, will contain 600 seats. A feature of the theater will be a pipe organ. The Novelty Theater, of Louisville, is the only one now in existence in the Kentucky metropolis which uses a pipe organ, and this feature has been largely responsible for the success of that house. Daniel L. Martin, who is well known in theatrical circles through his connection with the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers, has been secured as manager of the National Moving Picture Company, and will make his headquarters in Louisville, after June 1. Mr. Martin is credited with the first production of "Parsifal" in English. The National is now negotiating with a property-owner for a new motion picture house on Fourth avenue. The National will probably either build the house itself or secure a long lease on the structure. Plans are under way for securing a theater in Owensboro, Ky. A theater now in operation will be taken over, or a new house erected, according to officers of the National.

Several representatives of film-producing companies were in Louisville on Derby Day, May 10, and took motion pictures of the thirty-ninth running of that turf classic.

H. S. Gilbert, who will manage the new airdome at Shelbyville, Ky., was a recent visitor in Louisville. Mr. Gilbert announced that the airdome, located at Seventh and Washington streets, would be in operation about June 1. The Shelbyville Airdome Company recently was incorporated to operate the house. A seating capacity of 500 will be had by the amusement men. Moving pictures will form the program. Only six days of the week are to be used, the company having decided to remain closed on Sundays.

The palace theater, owned by Simon Switow, is to be sold by that exhibitor, who shortly will leave for Richmond and French Lick, Ind., where his uncle, M. Switow, now is erecting houses. Each of the new theaters will have a seating capacity of about 500. Simon Switow will have the management of both. The palace, located at Shelby and Rupp streets, was purchased by Mr. Switow only about three months ago. It has a seating capacity of 320.

Miss Ophelia Cummins, the popular cashier at the Majestic theater, is back at the window after spending a couple of weeks on her vacation.

A presentation of "Cleopatra," at the Novelty theater, attracted big crowds recently, the regular admission price of ten cents being in force for the five-reel Vitagraph feature.

Fred Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, of Louisville, has been besieged by inquiries since the appearance of the picture of the Ideal theater in the Moving Picture World. Many exhibitors throughout the country are considering the erection of new houses, and the Ideal made such a favorable impression that the prospective builders are seeking inquiries from associates with experience. The Louisville man was deeply impressed with the results of the description and photograph of the Ideal, which indicated that the World goes into the hands of exhibitors everywhere.

Caufield & Shook, Louisville photographers, who recently entered the motion picture field, recently have taken a number of pictures of interest. All of the productions of Caufield & Shook are incorporated in the Mutual weekly. The sinking of the steamer "Sam Brown," in the Ohio river, near Louisville, was recorded by Canfield & Shook, as were flood scenes around Louisville in April. The photographers, however, were unable to get views of the Derby, another company having that privilege tied up.

The opening of Fontaine Ferry, Louisville, a summer park, on May 11, produced no visible decrease in attendance at moving picture theaters. With thousands of visitors in the Kentucky metropolis for the races, business was rather better than otherwise, and exhibitors are not alarmed over the advent of the park season.

Arch Smith will open his airdome in Owensboro, Ky., in a few days, being engaged in reconstructing the theater. Independent service is to be used, four reels a day being the program. Mr. Smith will close the Novelty theater, which he also owns, as soon as the airdome is ready for business. A new front and other changes have been made in the house.

George A. Bleich, a well known Kentucky exhibitor and one of the officers of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, will shortly open a new house, the "Princess," at Owensboro, Ky. Mr. Bleich has leased a room hitherto used as a pool hall and has begun improvements. The Princess will be ready for business early in June, according to present plans. It will seat about 400 people and cater especially to shoppers, being located in the business district.

The Rex theater, of Princeton, Ky., has been moved several doors south. Owner R. M. Dunn secured a lease on a larger building and has transferred all equipment. The change was made without loss of time, continuous performances being given.

The South Broadway Amusement Company has been incorporated at Lexington, Ky., with a capitalization of $2,000. The incorporators are B. P. Anderson, W. E. Bass, L. M. Land, and others. The company will operate a moving picture house.

Joseph & Joseph, Louisville architects, are now receiving bids for a new ventilating system to be installed in the Majestic theater. Work will begin as soon as the contract is awarded. The Majestic will operate without cessation during the work.

The old project of erecting a moving picture or vaudeville theater in the rear of the Atherton building, at Fourth and Chestnut Streets, Louisville, has bobbed up again, and those interested are trying to sell stock for the purpose. The venture is not looked on with favor by many amusement men because of the big price asked for the property by the present owners. It is planned to buy the site outright and erect a theater, with the entrance through a Fourth Avenue store, now vacant. The same proposition has been put forward several times in the past by various persons, but has never gained any great impetus.

The Avenue theater will be closed shortly to make way for a new five-and-ten-cent store. Morton Shaw, who has operated the Avenue as a moving picture theater, is now contemplating the opening of another house. He is looking over a number of sites and will probably open another theater shortly after the Avenue is turned over to the new lessees.

The opening of B. F. Keith's Louisville theater as a summer house, with an admission price of ten cents, has been so successful that the policy will probably be maintained for the remainder of the summer. Three performances are given daily, including one matinee and two evening performances. Moving pictures and vaudeville form the program, and the Keith theater has played to good crowds.

“A REGIMENT OF TWO”

TWO gay husbands enlist in the 13th Regiment to be sure of “a night off” once a week. Two or three people are let into the secret, the daughter of one and her fiance. Jack Brent, the latter being a genuine member of the 13th. All goes well until the regiment is ordered to the front. Although they march away with the others, the husbands go on a fishing tour. Later, they learn through a newspaper report that the regiment has been wiped out in battle. The plot thickens. Home they go, changing their fishing clothes for regimentals, and before their respective wives, pose as the sole survivors. The report proves to be false, and there are further complications when Brent and the cook’s sweetheart, Conrad, also a member of the 13th, return from the front. Quick wit on the part of the husbands saves the day.

Vitagraph, Two Reels. Released June 11th, 1913.

“THE FINAL JUDGMENT”

THE story opens in the Klondike. Two young men from the East are in love with Edna Wallace. She accepts Brandon. A few years go by and we see McCormack, the friend and rejected suitor, attempting to rescue Brandon from drink and ruin. They quarrel and McCormick is wounded in a pistol fight. Brandon escapes to New York with his child. His wife follows.

The scene then shifts to the Metropolis. McCormack is now a newspaper editor. One morning he confronts Brandon robbing his apartment. The latter dies of heart failure from shock. He leaves behind a letter which enables McCormack to locate the missing son. In the role of a “Cub” reporter he covers a big fire and rescues his mother from the burning building. The reunion in the hospital later, with McCormack present, is as touching as it is beautiful.

Essanay, Two parts. Released June 9th, 1913.

SPEAKING ABOUT MULTIPLE-REEL FEATURES

THERE is a special reason why every multiple-reel feature in General Film Service is released as such. Some so-called features are merely single reel stories “padded” to fill more than a thousand feet of film. Not so, however, with General Film features. In every case the story must require more than a thousand feet to tell clearly or it is not accepted in the form of a multiple-reel. A favorite trick with some producers of features ? is to use certain big scenes, as for example, a battle in a war drama, in several different pictures. Such films don’t appear in General Film Service. Every scene is made especially for the feature of which it is a part and is used for that feature alone.

Making superior features takes time, patience, hard work and money. At present the manufacturers represented in General Film Service are producing all they can handle without bringing down their standard of quality, and this they are not willing to do nor are we anxious that they should. Patience and care are the watch words in their studios. To produce a certain film which will be released soon over 23,000 feet of negative stock were consumed, and yet the finished product is just under 2,000 feet in length ! The features illustrated on this and the opposite page represent an average General Film Service multiple-reel program for a week. Every one of the four is a sure enough “hit”—easily worth twice

"THE GOVERNOR'S DOUBLE"

GOVERNOR Walter Garland decides to investigate the report that the convicts in the State prison are subjected to inhuman treatment. His friend, Judge Howe, arranges to sentence him to prison with the understanding that he is to be released in thirty days. The judge is stricken with apoplexy and dies. Meanwhile Pete Brown, a convict, the governor's double, who has been pardoned, takes his place in the executive office. The deception is continued right up to the eve of the day when Garland was to marry. The latter, learning of the judge's death, tries to convince the warden that he is the governor. Failing, he manages to escape.

Making his way to the church, he halts the ceremony that would have united his sweetheart and Pete Brown. Explanations are hastily made and the true lovers are made man and wife.

Patheplay, Two Reels. Released June 13th, 1913.

"The Tragedy of Big Eagle Mine"

MORTON, a lone settler, meets with an accident and is nursed back to life by Laughing Water, an Indian girl, whom he later marries. Five years pass and a child comes to brighten the primitive home. Morton forsakes his wife, taking the child East with him. Laughing Water is ostracized by her tribe and becomes a wanderer.

Twenty years later, Morton and his son, now a successful engineer, are in the West. Laughing Water's father, Big Eagle, thirsting through the years for revenge, dynamites the mine which the Morton party is exploring and all lose their lives. Laughing Water begs for the body of her son, which she carries to the rude cabin where he was born.

Kalem, Two Parts. Released June 7th, 1913.

as much as the amount you are asked to recognize as "just as good." Don't take our word for it that General Film features are better—make your own comparisons, bearing in mind while doing so that you can get them in regular service with single reels of the same age—no extra charge.

To be released immediately after the four features illustrated are the following:

June 14—"Alone in the Jungle"—Selig—2 reels
June 16—"The Rival Engineers"—Cines-Kleine—2 reels
June 18—"The Weaker Mind"—Lubin—2 reels
June 20—"A Brother's Loyalty"—Essanay—2 reels
June 21—"Mary Stuart"—Edison—3 reels

The superiority of General Film features is reflected in General Film Service single reels—another condition which has contributed so largely to the success of the General Film Company. A complete list of current single reels will be found on another page of this issue, under the heading "Calendar of Licensed Releases."

The Wife of Cain

An Original Romance of the Primal

In Three Parts
Written and Directed by Charles L. Gaskill

Ready for Delivery not later than June 10

(Excerpt from Genesis, Chap. IV.)
13 And Cain said unto the LORD,
My punishment is greater than I can bear.
14 Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me.
15 And the LORD said unto him,
Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the LORD set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.
16 ¶ And Cain went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.
17 And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived, and bare Enoch: and he builded a city, and called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

CINES.

INTERESTING SCENES ABROAD—Lararello (Boric Acid Works)—(May 31).—First a panoramic view of the works is displayed showing the perforation of the ground in order that vapor containing boric acid may escape. To illustrate the force by which the vapor escapes a basket placed at the mouth of one of the pipes is thrown to a height of 200 yards. The process of evaporation and condensation follows and is concluded by disclosing the method of measuring its pressure under various conditions.

Volterra.—Many views of this picturesque little town are displayed. The ancient Etruscan walls which surround the town are first shown. The Gate la Porte de l'Arc which is the most ancient follows. Monuments and edifices of the Medieaval Period come next, including the Cathedral consecrated by Pope Callistee 11, in A. D. 1120. This town is noted for its industry of working alabaster which process is fully illustrated.

The River Giuba.—This river whose beauty has made it famous has again been chosen for a series of beautiful views along its banks. They are in colors and as you travel along you are enchanted by the beauties of nature which meet your eye.

WHEN A WOMAN LOVES (Special—3 parts—June 2).—This story involves two political factions, one of which is led by the Duchess Charlotte. She is greatly beloved by Count Hubert, one of the constituents of her party.

Marco Flamma, also a young enthusiast of the cause, while publicly addressing a street crowd, is arrested. Shortly afterwards, Flamma is placed on trial and among sympathetic spectators the Duchess is found conspicuously interested in his case. As Flamma makes his impassioned plea from his cell inside the court room, Charlotte becomes so enraptured with his speech and personality that she falls in love with him and determines to secure his release. In this she is successful and later requests him by letter to call upon her. Marco complies and during his visit, she proclaims her love for him and is very demonstrative in her explanation. He resents her advances, whereupon she dismisses him from the house.

In the meantime the Duchess scorns Hubert's love. Through a clever ruse she obtains a letter from Hubert showing Flamma had sworn to put to death the Prime Minister. Immediately the Duchess enlists the services of one of her male attendants, who, about the hour when the murder is to take place, approaches Flamma from behind, and kidnapping him, brings him to the palace of the Duchess, where he is confronted with the Duchess and Luciana, his charming fiancee.

The story ends by the Duchesa committing suicide with the dagger with which Marco Flamma had intended to put to death the Prime Minister and the uniting of the hands of Marco Flamma and Luciana.

THE IRONY OF FATE (June 3).—Hubert loves Blanche, the daughter of the Duke of Monterbo, and for sometime their wedding has been looked forward to by intimate friends. But Hubert meets Helen, a beautiful sister of one of his friends, and she immediately supplants Blanche in Hubert's affection. Reluctantly he writes a letter to Blanche, telling her that it is best that they break their engagement. Blanche receives the letter and is heartbroken.

About this time Jules Card, an artist, arrives at the villa of the Duke for a visit. He and Blanche are often seen together and she confides her story to him. Their continued friendship ripens into love on Jule's part and he asks her to be his wife. Sending him a note, Blanche explains that she has for him nothing more than the highest respect, but if he is satisfied with that, she would accept him. They are married, and although apparently happy, Blanche cannot forget her former love.

Hubert now married to Helen, is out for a climb in the Alps when he becomes afflicted with mountain sickness and falls over the cliff. Blanche and Jules passing in that vicinity hear his cry and rush to his aid. He is found in a critical condition and at her request is brought to their home. Here figuratively speaking, Hubert is cast at the feet of the girl he cast off. Helen, anxious about her husband's absence, goes in search of him and is met by Blanche who brings her to Hubert's bedside. Jules does not learn of Hubert's identity and Blanche promises Hubert that she will say nothing of their former love affair for the sake of Helen. However, Helen tells Blanche how happy she is with Hubert and the picture closes as we see the supreme happiness of one girl and the dejection of the other.

THE RING.—(June 7).—Gaston, bidding good-bye and pledging eternal fidelity to his wife, leaves her and his child for another country of greater opportunities. Gaston almost immediately succeeds to the road of fortune. Back home his daughter is seriously ill and his poor wife, reduced to meager circumstances, is obliged to toil hard for a livelihood.

After some years Gaston returns to his native land, but cannot find any trace of his wife, poverty having driven them out of the old home. Established in business, he employs a secretary who is engaged to a poor, but charming young girl. Gaston, one day, sees this girl leaving a pawnshop, and compelled by curiosity he stops and inquires what she has disposed of. To his great surprise he finds it is the ring he had given to his wife as a parting gift. He escorts her to her home where he is once more with his wife and daughter, and where supreme happiness thereafter reigns.

ORBETELLO AND ENVIRONS (June 7).—Here you are shown panoramic views of the towns and embankments, the ancient walls which surround them, and the Port of Ercole with Mount Afgantaria in the background. It is altogether a most interesting series of landscapes.

ECLIPSE.

THE INDELIBLE STAIN (May 28)—Florence is a charming young girl, who, through her own discretion, falls under the influence of a gang of marauders and thieves. While she is sitting at a table with a friend in the Imperial Hotel, she becomes involved in a discussion and is requested by the proprietor to leave. Lord Ellis comes to her assistance and afterwards escorts her to her hotel.

That night Florence receives a letter from Sharpe, one of the gang, instructing her to join them at the Four Oaks, as she is wanted to assist in a new scheme. Creeping down the stairs about one o'clock, she is detected by a bellboy who demands the payment of her bill. Lord Ellis coming in at that hour agrees to pay it for her and she leaves. She meets the gang and at first opposed to their plans, is finally persuaded to take part in it.

Lord Ellis next day proceeds to his country home. Unbeknowing to her, the residence which they are about to rob is that of Lord Ellis', and as he sits and thinks of the beautiful young girl he is greatly surprised at finding her in his garden. Mistaking her object in coming for that of thanking him for his assistance or perhaps for a love adventure, he asks her in. Florence does not dare to tell him the truth and while they are talking a noise is heard and Ellis drawing a revolver goes to investigate. The robbers are frightened by the shots and take flight.

Falling in love with each other, Lord Ellis and Florence are happily married. However, their honeymoon is short-lived, for again the grim spector of the past appears, when one of the gang threatens her with exposure providing she does not leave. Rather than return to the other life again she prefers death, and throws herself over the cliff where her heartbroken Lord finds her lifeless.

DELIVERING THE GOODS (June 4).—Percy volunteers his services to an aged couple to deliver a piano, which they had purchased, to their home. He enlists the aid of a helper and they set themselves to the task. The piano experiences many mishaps before its arrival, and ludicrously falls apart from its rough treatment as the picture closes.

THE ARMADILLO (June 4).—The armadillo is a queer little animal in South America. Its body is covered with a bony flexible shell, and in many respects resemble animals of other species. Its nose resembles that of a rhinoceros, and its mouth that of a pig; its claws are long and powerful and by their aid it can bury itself in a few minutes. Being a nocturnal animal, the Armadillo searches for food at twilight and feeds principally on worms, insects and roots. Sometimes digging its home in an anthill, it does not stop until the ant hill is completely destroyed. Some species are more carnivorous than others and devour the semi-putrid carcasses of wild animals. It is naturally a timid animal, but it is not difficult to catch, and although becoming accustomed to captivity very quickly it takes advantage of the first opportunity to gain its liberty.

BEHIND A MASK (June 11).—Jack North, a young artist, while touring South America, meets with a queer experience while out sketching. An apparition appears to him of a beautiful young girl in a reclining position, and he is about to sketch her when a man emerges and draws her away. He is Don Ramon Valdez, her guardian and tutor, who afterwards reproaches the Indian servant for allowing Lola to leave the villa. Jack having become curious, returns the next day and he and Lola are about to engage in a conversation when Valdez again appears and removing Lola's veil shows Jack a horrible face disfigured with black marks.

Disappointed the artist goes back to his hotel and soon afterwards received a mysterious letter, asking him to save a woman from distraction by being present at the Governor's Ball. Attracted by the mystery of the adventure, Jack accepts the invitation and disguised under a domino meets Lola, who to his surprise is now a beautiful woman. In fact, to avenge herself from her master's brutal treatments, the Indian girl who had disfigured Lola on Don Ramon's orders years before, had used artifices only known to her to restore the girl's beauty.

Valdez infuriated at not finding Lola at home rushes to the ball, but during the while, Jack has wrapped himself in Lola's domino, and when the tutor arrives he mistakes the painter for his pupil and drags him home. There the tables are turned. Valdez asks the supposed Lola to sign a schedule bequeathing all her fortune to him and Jack signs the paper. Seeing the young man's name, Valdez unmasks him, but Jack draws a revolver and keeps the scoundrel at bay until Lola and friends of the artist arrive and overpower Valdez. Thus saved by Jack's courage, Lola warmly thanks him with a kiss.

THE LEGEND OF LOVERS LEAP (June 9).—Fleet Wing, the flower of the Huachos, is loved by Wambau, a warrior of the same tribe. Although a mighty warrior, Wambau is rejected by the chief when he asks for the hand of his daughter, Pakeau's reason for refusing being that Wambau is poor and the chief wishes to marry his daughter to a rich suitor. In the meantime Wolf Fang, the wealthy chief of the Crow Tribe, comes into the neighborhood to visit Wickuama, the great medicine man, to have him make medicine to bring the game back which has disappeared from his tribal hunting grounds. Wolf Fang, while at the medicine man's lodge, meets and is infatuated with Fleet Wing; he determines to possess her, and, going to the village of the Huacho chief, induces him to accept ponies and blankets in exchange for the hand of his daughter. Wambau and Fleet Wing call on the medicine man to aid them; he proposes a horse race, the winner to possess Fleet Wing. Wolf Fang wins the race and takes Fleet Wing away to his tribe. Finding that her heart is still with Wambau, Wolf Fang visits the medicine man for medicine to make him invincible. Wambau influences the medicine man and Wolf Fang is given a sleeping draught. Wambau accepting this opportunity and tying the love token of Fleet Wing on his arrow, shoots it into the tepee where she is held prisoner. While the spell still holds Wolf Fang, Fleet Wing escapes with Wambau and when recovering from the drug Wolf Fang finds her gone. He declares war on the peaceful Huachos, exterminating the tribe, driving Wambau and Fleet Wing before him to the brink of a precipice where rather than fall into the hands of Wolf Fang, Fleet Wing and Wambau cheat him by leaping to their death.

VIOLET DARE, DETECTIVE (June 10).—The local police and detective forces are completely baffled by a daring cracksman, who, seeming to possess accurate knowledge of the officer's plans, evades with ease all traps set for him. The chief of police enlists the aid of Violet Dare, an expert amateur, who will take up interesting cases for love of the game. She decides that the cracksman is too clever to be caught by any ordinary means, as he leaves no clue whatever. It is therefore necessary to invent some novel method against which he will not be on guard. It happens that Violet's sweetheart, a secret service officer, captures a lot of excellent counterfeit dollar bills. Violet induces him to loan her the bills and to keep secret the news of the capture. She says nothing to the police of her plans. She arranges with a merchant, her uncle, to make a window display of the $5,000 in counterfeit money, and this display attracts much attention. The counterfeit bills, and no other money, are placed in the safe at night and no watch is kept on the place. As Violet calculated, the safe is robbed that night. The robbery is reported to the police, but the fact that the bills were counterfeit is not disclosed. The counterfeit bills are deposited in a bank by the thief. The cracksman, not suspecting the genuineness of the bills and not dreaming that they could form a clue, makes no efforts to cover his tracks. Violet soon has the man "wanted" for burglary. The finding in his possession of all the remaining counterfeit bills proves his guilt. The thief's success in evading the regular police traps is explained by the fact that he is a civilian clerk at police headquarters, and has been familiar with all the police plans to catch him. Violet is duly congratulated and rewarded. The following day all the credit is given the police department much to Violet's amazement.

NEARLY IN MOURNING (June 12).—Clarence Kelly, a young business man, arrives home one night with a terrible jag on. His wife scolds him severely and Clarence leaves in a huff and resolves to go to a Turkish bath to spend the night. He gathers a bunch of his chums and they all agree to the proposition and figure out a good time. During the night Kelly's office building is burned down and Mollie, reading of the fire in the morning paper, hurries to the scene, where she hears that Clarence has probably perished. Her agony is awful and returning home, she immediately proceeds to adopt mourning. She drapes her beloved husband's picture with black ribbon, and digging out all the black articles of dress she can find, proceeds to make herself up as near like a widow as possible. Clarence, having spent a glorious night with his friends at the bath, pulls himself together and goes home to make up with wifey. The evidence of mourning startles him, and when Mollie sees him enter she thinks that it is a ghost. Explanations follow and the cloud of mourning passes away and gives place to the sunshine of a happy future, as Clarence resolves "Never again."

THE PROFESSOR'S PREDICAMENT (June 12).—Professor Silas Bingle, a staunch temperance advocate, starts out on a crusade against the demon "drink." He stops in front of a saloon and the first to emerge therefrom is a son of Erin, Pat Lafferty, with a kettle of beer. Bingle follows him and takes the can of foaming beverage away from him and dumps it over the fence, where it falls accidentally in the hat of Dusty Dawkins. Dusty is about to drink when the temperance lecturer reaches over the fence with his cane and upsets the beer all over him. He again stations himself in front of the saloon, where a young fellow coming out bumps against him and knocks him down. He loses his eye glasses in the altercation which follows, and, being very nearsighted, meets with several unpleasant happenings. But in the end virtue triumphs and receives its reward.

PAPITA'S DESTINY (June 13).—About the year 1830, there lived in a small village in Southern California, Papita, daughter of the widow Francesca. They were very poor and when Papita fell in love with Pedro, a handsome but equally poor young man, Francesca took matters into her own hands, and, without even consulting Papita, gave her consent to a marriage contract between her daughter and Alvarez, the wealthiest man in the village. Manuel, a crippled saddler, also loved Papita. He had loved her since she was a child when he had danced her on his knee. His love was that of an elder brother, and Papita, still scarcely more than a child, confided everything to him. To pacify her mother, Papita married Alvarez, and, before very long, his cruel nature asserted itself. Despairing for her child's future, Francesca realized, too late, the mistake she had made, and one night, after Alvarez had been particularly cruel to Papita, both Pedro and Manuel visited Francesca; and, as Papita entered her mother's house, she said, in a burst of passion, "Oh, I wish he were dead." Both Pedro and Manuel decided that one of them must relieve Papita from the cruelty of Alvarez, but Pedro's strength of will was not equal to the task. Manuel, however, with the almost fanatical love for Papita burning within him, decided to secure her freedom, and later that night, he accomplished his purpose. When Papita returned to her home, she found Alvarez dead. Believing Pedro had committed the act, she took the blame upon herself and was taken to prison. Manuel learned of her arrest and sent word to the padre, declaring himself guilty of the crime. On the strength of his confession, Papita was set free and a search made for Manuel, who, in the meantime, had attempted to cross the desert without water. His weak body could not stand the strain, and he passed on to a higher judge to answer for his earthly sins.

THE WINE OF MADNESS (June 14).—Failing to find a position, Walter Darrell complains to his wife about the condition of affairs. In looking over a newspaper he reads an advertisement of cheap farm land in the South, and decides to investigate. The following morning he bids his wife good-bye and upon his arrival at the office of the real estate, the agent meets him, and a lease is signed for a farm.

Some time later, in clearing the place, he is hurt by a tree stump which he had just set off by a blast. Juan and Corella, two wandering folks of a tribe of the Spanish type, are nearby. Corella is rejecting Juan's love as they witness the accident. Leaving Juan hurriedly, Corella rushes to the stranger. Helping Walter to his feet she brings him to her mother's shack, where the two women treat him kindly. Juan is aroused to a fit of jealousy and confronts Corella with reproaches for the kindness shown Walter. Turning a deaf ear upon him, she enters the shack again and resumes her talk with Walter. Leading him out, they sit on a bench where Corella pours forth her love for him, which Walter repulses; but he is yet helpless and unable to communicate with his wife. In the interval, the chief of police receives a letter from Walter's wife asking information. Calling an officer, he goes to hunt up the man. The officer happens on Corella's shack and she informs the officer that Walter is somewhere about working. Corella, feeling she is about to lose Walter, returns to the shack and once again pleads her love. Turning her away gently, he tells her of his intention to leave shortly and go to his wife. Shortly afterward she is talking to her mother and sends her off to gather some loco weed. Mrs. Darrell calls on the chief, and, with the officer, is sent to the shack. The old mother, having gathered the weeds, is brewing them as Juan rushes in and notifies Corella of Walter's wife and the officer's approach. This inspires her to give Walter the loco in a glass of wine, and she begs him to take it as a last farewell. As he finishes drinking, Walter dashes out of the shack and rushing wildly down the road, sees the officer and his wife. He lunges forward to grab his wife as the officer, receiving a blow from Walter, is thrown to the ground, stunned. Juan is attacked, and in the scuffle Walter extracts the dagger from Juan's belt. He once more makes an attack upon his wife, but weakening, as the effect of the weed is now losing its influence, and dropping the dagger, he stands bewildered. Juan, who has recovered, picks up the dagger and in rage is about to strike at Walter, when Corella, who had followed, rushes in, and in warding off the blow Juan intends for Walter, receives it herself, falling dead. Juan rushes off, crazed with grief. Walter, who has aimlessly wandered away, is brought back by his wife. Mrs. Darrell having witnessed the scene, directs the officer after Juan. That night Juan, who is frightened and crazed, is finally rounded up in front of Corella's shack where he is begging admittance and crouching in the doorway in prayer.

SWEENEY AND THE FAIRY (June 9).—Sweeney, the hod-carrier, having disposed of the contents of his dinner pail, sits down in the shade to doze away the remainder of the noon-hour. When he sleeps, a fairy appears and touches him with her wand. In a transformation he awakens in affluence, and in a dress-suit as he appears in "Sweeney and the Million." The fairy disappears and Sweeney swaggers down to his swell residence and is met by the letter-carrier, who gives him a large bundle of important-looking letters. The first one he opens informs him that the million dollars lost in the poker-game is coming back to him by parcel post. It requires a strong man to deliver this package. Mrs. Sweeney, "all dolled-up," meets him at the door. He fires out the footman and the other servants. They open the package and are flooded with bank notes of large denominations, and they proceed to hide it in bundles all over the place. Their next appearance is at the function in Mrs. Gandergilt's palatial drawing-rooms. The guests are playing bridge, and when Sweeney comes in on the arm of his friend patrolman McGlone, it raises a commotion, as they fear a "pull." Sweeney calms their fears by giving his guardian a large roll and sends him on his way. Mrs. Sweeney takes a hand in "bridge," and her consort invites all the non-playing men to the buffet. Sweeney gets drinks on a table and falls off. Whereat he is exceedingly angry and swashes everything in range, including a waiter carrying a large tray of glasses. In the interim Mrs. Sweeney has an altercation with the hostess and upsets a card table. The Sweeneys indignantly take to their automobile, visit flower shops and purchase millinery. In the latter place she buys a $250 hat that looks like a floating island, and shuts out all the lines of sight in the cabaret. Sweeney goes to sleep in spite of the commotion, and then is awakened from his dream by the cry for "mortar, mortar"—with the blowing of the whistle.

DAD'S LITTLE GIRL (June 10).—The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond, against the wishes of her parents, marries John Morton. They disown her and she drops out of their lives. The Mortons do not prosper in a worldly way, but a daughter is born to them and they are happy until death invades the home and takes the mother. John Morton continues the struggle alone, caring for his daughter. The wealthy Raymonds finally learn of the existence of the child, and become obsessed with a desire to possess her, and bring her up as a lady. They advertise to learn of her whereabouts, and this comes to the attention of Morton. In the depths of despondency he consents to the sacrifice, as an opportunity for the girl. Their lawyer prevails upon him to make the change. Rose Morton, when in her new and luxurious surroundings, pines for her dear old dad. Good luck favors Morton and an invention suddenly brings him a fortune. His first thought is to get possession of his beloved child. At this time he receives a telegram announcing her illness. The attendant physician announces the only thing that will save her life to be the presence The sight of him restores the ailing girl and the of her father. John Morton arrives just in time. Raymonds are reconciled to him.

THE ROSE OF MAY (June 11).—A romantic young author, wearied with the rush of a prosaic age, who loves the open, accompanied only by his flute, starts on a spring tour through the rural regions. In his wanderings, disguised as a gypsy fortune teller, he sees a lovely girl and makes her acquaintance. In reading her happiness, he mentions the rover with the magic flute, to quicken her interest. Having inspired the thought, he goes on his way, discarding his disguise. The next day the fair one hears the luring love note of the flute, and follows it to the forest. There she finds a dark, handsome young stranger sleeping. She gazes a moment, spell-bound, then flees. The sleeper is awakened and follows her. Eventually they become lovers; but the maid's father will have nothing to do with a flute player. Strangely enough this newspaper man is a publisher, and in financial trouble. A wealthy friend comes to his relief, who seeks in marriage the hand of his daughter. The young author betakes him to his desk and writes a romance entitled, "The Rose of May." He offers it anonymously to the publisher, and it becomes top-listed as "a best seller." A year passes, the girl, stung by his seeming forgetfulness, is about to accept the elderly suitor, when she hears the sound of a distant flute. Again the lovers meet, but this time to part no more, for the proud parent, now made wealthy by the man who plays with a pen as potentially as he does skillfully with a flute, is very desirable.

THE FATE OF ELIZABETH (June 12).—Amy Tucker is discovered by her parents reading an advertised novel called "The Fate of Elizabeth." Her father appropriates it, and a few days later, when detained at home by a cold, he picks up the book and finds it so interesting he hides it under his pillow for further reference. His wife finds it there, is duly shocked and conceals it in another place. Bridget, the cook, observing her mistress' interest in the book, takes it up and hides it in a place she knows about. She is so interested that she tears out pages and conceals them in her dress. Indeed she becomes so absorbed that she breaks a lot of crockery, and finally drops the book on the head of a passing tramp to escape discovery by her mistress. The various members of the Tucker family, observing that a dramatization of the novel is to be presented at a neighboring theater, all prepare to take in the opening night, each trying to keep it secret from the other. The various parties are horrified and astonished in turn to see the others while trying to conceal their own identity. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker make such a commotion at meeting that the policeman takes them to the station to explain before they are allowed to return home. Amy, the daughter, who saw the play, is at home asleep when her parents arrive.

THE JEALOUSY OF MIGUEL AND ISABELLA (June 13).—Husky Jack Walters loves Vira Greenley, but she has a secret admirer in the fiery Mexican, Miguel. She, Vira, has not encouraged this dark and passionate gallant, but he seems to be keeping constant company with the green-eyed monster. His sweetheart, Isabella, is so vexed over his infatuation that she, being equally jealous, arranges with her father, Pedro, a Mexican outlaw, to get Vira out of the way. This redoubtable terror never does things by halves, and gets both Jack and Vira in his power, locks them in a hut and sets it on fire. Miguel puts in an appearance and rescues Vira, leaving Jack to the mercy of the flames, and, with a woman's change of heart, Isabella drags the unconscious Jack out of the burning hut to spite Miguel. Jack finally captures the outlaw and wins a large reward..

THE BACHELOR'S BABY; or HOW IT ALL HAPPENED (June 9).—Left destitute by the death of her young husband, Ethel Wynne lives with her old nurse, Hester O'Brien, a laundress. During the day Ethel works as a clerk in a toy store, leaving her babies in the care of Hester, and in the evenings, helps out by doing ironing and housework. One day, while she is at the store, Harley Clarke, a wealthy bachelor, comes in with a group of boys and lets them select whatever toys they fancy. It is his birthday, and, seeing the children hungrily eyeing the window display, he has decided to celebrate the day by treating them. Ethel is very much impressed by Mr. Clarke's evident kindliness, and after he has left the shop, she gets his name and address from Mayme, the girl who waits on him. When she arrives home, she finds Hester very sick and is obliged to call a doctor, who has her taken to the hospital. Ethel is now in a sorry plight. She has no one to take care of the baby while she is away at work, and no means of supporting herself at home. Having just paid Hester her week's board, she has no money whatever, and is in despair.

Noticing a batch of curtains addressed to Harley Clarke, who is one of Hester's customers, Ethel decides to place the baby in with them, thinking that such a kind-hearted man will surely look after the little child. She does this and the bundle is accepted at the house without question.

AN INDIAN'S GRATITUDE

One reel, June 11

A One-Reel Subject Which Could Easily Have Been Made a Two-Reel Feature. A Thrilling Indian Drama, with Big Battle Scenes and Sensational and Dramatic Incidents.

Through trickery and cunning, the Sioux chief gets a herd of ponies from the Cheyenne brave, on promise of his daughter's hand. Protesting, the Cheyenne is attacked, and is saved from death by Lieut. Randall, after he has been thrown over a cliff. The Indian is deeply grateful, and later, after his tribe have wiped out the Sioux in a sensational battle, he saves the life of the Lieutenant's sweetheart when her stage coach is attacked, and is shot by mistake by the Lieutenant as he is carrying the girl to safety. The death scene of the Indian is pathetic.

THE HANSOM DRIVER

June 9

Mabel's husband is a hansom-cab driver. She imagines herself neglected, and listens to the honeyed words of a tempter, and finally agrees to elope with him. A boy is sent for a cab, and innocently gets the husband. The elopers rush into the cab without noticing the driver, and he is unaware of the identity of the passengers until he glances in the mirror and sees what is going on. The tempter receives a good beating, and Mabel repents of her action.

On the same reel is a short educational subject showing the feeding time of alligators.

THE SPEED QUEEN

One reel, June 12

Nellie's father is a judge, afflicted with a sort of St. Vitus dance. He forgets his medicine, and feels an attack coming. Nellie drives to the far-off country home in her auto to get the medicine, pursued by her two lovers —bicycle cops—one, a vengeful suitor, and the other hoping to save her. Terrific speed is shown by the daring trio, together with laughable comedy incidents.

THE BOOMERANG

Three reels, June 13

A Wonderful War Drama, with Awe-Inspiring and Sensational Scenes of Battle, Showing How a Man's Perfidy Caused His Undoing at the Crisis of His Life.

Lieut. Calhoun wins the love of Virginia Chester, and persuades her to marry him secretly. His command is sent to a distant post, and the Colonel's daughter falls in love with him. He sacrifices Virginia on the altar of his ambition, and advises her to get a divorce. This letter reaches her as she has given birth to a boy, and the shock kills her. The boy grows up and is sent to a military academy. During the Civil War Calhoun has become a General, and the boy remains in the Northern army awaiting an opportunity to wreak his vengeance upon the man who so cruelly treated his mother. The opportunity comes on the eve of a great battle, and the boy keeps the Confederate army advised of every move the Northern officers make, with the result that the Confederates win a great victory. Calhoun is captured, but his release is secured by Colonel Chester, Virginia's father, who then compels Calhoun to fight a duel, in which the latter is killed.

The next day, while looking through the paper, Ethel notices an advertisement for a nurse, inserted by Clarke. She answers it and gets the place, thus becoming foster-mother to her own baby. All goes smoothly in the Clarke household until the suspicions of Sarah, Clarke's housekeeper, are aroused, and she goes with the tale to her master. Clarke does not believe the story, but goes straight to Ethel and asks her for the truth. Ethel, who has fallen deeply in love with Clarke, fears that her disclosure will separate her from her baby, but none the less she tells him everything.

Her pitiful tale touches the heart of Clarke, already strongly drawn to her, and he will not let her go away. He insists that the baby now belongs to him, she shall belong to him also, and become his wife and mistress of his household.

CUTEY TRIES REPORTING (June 10).—Small brothers are the bane of love affairs. The inimitable Cutey, reporter on a country paper, is courting Ethel Clark, the daughter of the editor. He has a lively time with her small brother, Tommy, who insists on queering him. The editor declares that unless Cutey brings in some live news he will be fired, and, furthermore, will not be allowed to call on Ethel. Cutey is at first despondent, but eventually decides that it is up to him to manufacture some live stuff. One night he robs a country bank, and next day, when a reward is offered for the recovery of the money, he announces his intention of winning it. He goes out into the country and daubs his clothes with dirt. Then he returns and tells a tale of terrific conflict with a burly burglar in a cave, and how he forced the thief to give up the money. Cutey is given the reward.

Tommy, who had seen the little performance in the fields, comes along and claims a share in the proceeds. He is given 25c on condition that he holds his tongue. Cutey is fearfully disgusted when Mr. Clark declares that the affair was a matter of luck, and tells him to do something better. This time Cutey decides on a bomb outrage. He manufactures a dummy bomb from a basket ball, and throws it into a grocery store. Then he rushes in, bravely seizes the flaming bomb and bears it off to a place of safety. Tommy, however, is watching him and follows him. He sees Cutey cut and burn his coat, fire a gun to simulate the supposed explosion of the bomb, and return limping to the store, where he is greeted as a hero. Mr. Clark greets Cutey kindly and takes him in to Ethel, who clasps her brave boy to her heart.

Tommy comes along presently, and demands hush money. Cutey, believing that he is now quite safe, declines to give anything to the boy, so he rushes off to his father. He promises to expose Cutey's bluff for a consideration of fifty cents, which he gets, and then tells the whole story. Mr. Clark is at first furiously angry with Cutey, but at last decides that, anyway, the young man has an inventive turn of mind and so offers him another chance. Tommy, who thinks he has landed a nice little graft, beats it to the nearest soda-fountain.

HIS HOUSE IN ORDER; or THE WIDOWER'S QUEST (June 11).—The house of Charles Duckworth, a widower, has long been kept by his sister, Florence, who comes to him one day and tells of her engagement to Jack Manning, an old friend of her brother's. Florence advises him to marry again, and, after giving him excellent reasons why he should do so, tells him of several girls that might make him a suitable wife.

When his little daughter, Nell, is brought in later by her governess, Alice Harding, he asks her how she would like a new mother. Nell is enthusiastic and leads forward the governess, suggesting that she would make the best mother in the world. Alice is very much embarrassed, but laughs off the affair. The widower goes out to make a series of calls upon various young ladies, looking for one that would make a suitable mother for little Nell. As he passes out he notices Alice sitting by the fire with Nell, telling her some pretty bed-time stories. As soon as he has gone, the servants prepare to spend a jolly evening, dressing up in the clothes of their master and his sister, and organizing an impromptu dance in the hallway.

Duckworth calls first upon Kate Barnes, but does not stay long at that house; the young lady is altogether too lively and skittish to suit his taste. Then he calls on May Holmes, but finds her far too languid. Gladys Phillips, another girl, is bookishly inclined, and lacks an affectionate nature, while Margaret Cummins, upon whom he calls last, absolutely lacks culture, smokes cigarettes and generally shows that all she wants is a good time. Duckworth thinks of little Nell by the fireside with her governess and hurries away home.

The servants are enjoying a regular carousal, and make so much noise that they wake Nell and her governess, who is sleeping in a chair beside her. Alice goes downstairs and attempts to stop the racket, but they tell her to mind her own business. In the midst of it all, Duckworth enters.

The servants all rush downstairs, leaving the widower with his daughter and her little governess. Duckworth sees how Nell and Alice love one another, and takes them both in his arms. He has found the right mother for his child. His quest is ended.

HIS TIRED UNCLE (June 12).—Hearing that his nephew, Fred Nolan, is engaged to marry a widow, Uncle John Bunny sends for him and declares that if he does not give her up he will not get a cent of his uncle's money. Bunny's prejudice is simply against widows in general, as he has not met the lady in question, but none the less, he quite means what he says. Fred confides with his chum, Joe Tripp, and together they plan to put one over on the obstinate old gentleman. Tripp invites a crowd of people to a week-end party, among them, John Bunny, and, unknown to him, also the widow. Bunny and the widow are thrown together, but he does not seem very susceptible to her charms. He is tired and sleepy and would much prefer taking a nap to talking with the most charming lady in existence. After a while, he gets away from her and tries to snatch forty winks in the conservatory. It is no use, the young folks soon drive him out of there. He tries the drawing-room and is again obliged to decamp. At last, in desperation, he goes upstairs, and entering the first bedroom he reaches, which happens to be the widow's, he throws himself down and at once enters the land of nod.

Seeing him when she enters the room, the widow rushes off in consternation and calls to Fred and Joe to turn him out. An idea strikes them. Waking Uncle John they tell him that he has compromised himself and must at once marry the lody. Bunny is very much disturbed, but cheers up considerably when his nephew offers to take his place and so save him from a disagreeable situation. Hastily giving Fred and the widow his heartfelt blessings, he rushes away, to everyone's amusement, and resumes once more his interrupted slumbers.

THE CAPERS OF CUPID (June 12).—The shortsightedness of two swains and the coyness of their lady partners is the means of bringing them all into trouble. The four people, two of whom are black and two white, get mixed up and in the resultant trouble, all are hauled to the police station. Their amusing adventure binds their hearts closely together and the maids become quite willing to accept the kisses they had refused.

AN INFERNAL TANGLE (June 13).—Coming home to supper one evening, Luigi tells his wife that a new couple is moving into the same tenement house that they live in. Vincenza greatly admires the moustache of her new neighbor and speaks of this to her husband, who laughs at her scornfully, but becomes very jealous of the man, Biaggio. Later in the day, when Vincenza is coming home with the groceries, she meets Biaggio on the steps of the house, and speaks to him for a few moments. Angelica, the wife of Biaggio, is looking out of the window and sees her husband talking with this strange woman, and she, in turn, also becomes jealous. The talk is rudely interrupted by Luigi, who returns home and angrily orders his wife into the house. There is quite a lively time in both apartments, as a result of the little meeting on the doorstep.

Owing to his hasty temper, Luigi loses his job and is unable to find another. He and his wife are almost on the point of starvation when Mrs. Thomas, a wealthy district visitor, comes to the house. She finds Vincenza alone, and, after hearing her story, leaves her some money, which is placed on the table. A sneak-thief, passing up the stairway, sees the money through the open door, and steals it after Mrs. Thomas leaves. Vincenza screams for help and is heard by Biaggio, who is coming up the stairs. He rushes to her aid. He struggles with the thief and obtains the money, which he returns to Vincenza. As he leaves the room he is seen by Luigi, who follows him upstairs and accuses him of an intrigue with his wife. Angelica overhears the accusation and rushes down to the room of Vincenza, of whom she is insanely jealous. In each apartment a terrific struggle takes place, in the one between the two men, and in the other between the two women.

In the midst of it all, Mrs. Thomas enters. She has lost a ring and has returned to see if she had dropped it there. She soon explains the true state of affairs and the two families agree to forget their disputes and become the best of neighbors.

DOES ADVERTISING PAY? (June 14).—Financially, the firm of Montague & Pipps, lawyers, is not a success. The two young men have but three dollars between them and are in despair. Suddenly Montague gets an idea. "What the firm needs," he declares, "is advertising." He goes out and returns later with a huge wad of bills, which he shows to his astounded partner. Most of it, he explains, is stage money. There is only eight real dollars in the lot, the three that he started out with and a five-spot that he has borrowed. They go out and commence to flash their roll in restaurants and cigar stores. The business men who see it are convinced that the two young lawyers must be doing well and consequently are worthy of their business. In this way, Montague & Pipps become the legal agents of two real estate brokers and a member of the stock exchange, Mr. Silas Whipple, whose daughters the two young fellows have long admired from a distance. Later, they meet the two girls in the park and a miracle is again performed by the roll. The girls change their haughty attitude to one of extreme affability and the two boys have a great time with them.

On one occasion, when Montague is out collecting money for one of the firms for whom he is doing business, he is set upon by an indignant man who gives him the credit of a foolish prank really played by a mischievous schoolboy. He has his hat smashed in, his eyes blackened and looks a dreadful sight. Instead of mourning his misfortune, however, he sees the chance for getting some more free advertising. He claims that he has been set upon by thugs and robbed of three thousand dollars and some loose change that he was carrying to the bank. The newspapers are full of the case, and seeing the account, the Whipple girls visit him at the hospital and bring him flowers.

A REGIMENT OF TWO (Special, 2 parts, June 11).—Ira Wilton and his son-in-law, Harry Bennet, resort to the subterfuge of telling their wives that they are members of the Thirteenth Regiment in order to be sure of having a night off each week, that night being Friday night, for then the regiment drills. They substantiate their deception by bringing into their little game Laura, Ira's daughter, and her fiancé, Jack Brent, a genuine member of the Thirteenth. Their deception runs along nicely until one Friday night, when the men have gone to the club, their wives find the invitation, and are just about to start out when they discover that the water pipe has burst. Laura informs the men by telephone what is discovered, and warns them to come home. They arrive and find that the kitchen and dining room are flooded, and, after all has been given a good soaking, Lord Dudley, an admirer of Laura, manages to stop the flow of water. Just as the trouble concerning the flood has subsided, Jack Brent arrives home and tells the men that the Thirteenth has been ordered to the front. The husbands, seeing a good chance to take a little vacation, purchase soldiers' clothing and fall in behind the Thirteenth Regiment as it passes their wives, but slip out as soon as it is out of sight. They then go to the barn, where they substitute their soldiers' habilaments for civilian clothes and then make all possible haste to the lake, where they intend to spend a little vacation. But their vacation is short-lived, for one day they see in the newspapers that the entire Thirteenth regiment has been wiped out. They hurry home to the old barn, where they get into their regimentals as quickly as possible, not forgetting, however, to add a few rents here and there, to make it appear as if they have had a terrible struggle at the front and in escaping. When they arrive home they observe that Mrs. Wilton's brother has returned from the West and had promised to take care of the "widows." In reply to Lena's (the fat cook's), question concerning her lover, Conrad, they were just about to tell her that he died with her name on his lips, when in come Conrad and Harry Brent, with the news that the newspaper report was all wrong. Ira and Harry fix it up with Conrad, and Jack, desiring to keep on the right side of the old man, tells the women that the men had a terrible fight, and brother Tom forgets about asking questions when a couple of good cigars are shoved into his mit.

KALEM

THE BANDIT'S CHILD (June 2).—Bob North spends his last cent to reach the Bar X ranch, where he expects to find work and when he learns it is impossible to secure employment he becomes desperate. One misfortune follows another and Bob becomes an outlaw, while his wife, in a distant city, struggles to earn a living by sewing.

Mrs. North, unable to learn anything concerning her husband, suffers many vicissitudes and finally answers an advertisement for a school teacher in the West. By strange fate she makes her home at the same ranch where her husband applied for work.

A series of lawless acts attributed to the bandit, cause the authorities to become particularly vigilant and at length Bob's trail is discovered.

Mrs. North's little girl wanders away from the ranch and is lost in the mountains. In his flight Bob discovers the little one and carries her to his retreat. The child becomes ill and Bob determines to take her to a doctor at all hazards. He shaves off his beard, places the child in a sack and starts for the village. A deputy encountering Bob on the highway is suspicious and gives chase. Just as he is about to capture the outlaw, the wife, who has been searching for her child, sees the affair and through a subterfuge effects Bob's rescue.

Establishing a new home, Bob sets to work with a will and makes ample restitution for his unfortunate past.

WHEN FATE DECREES (June 4).—Dick Lowell, a young millionaire, proposes to Jane Hallowell, only to learn that she has given her promise to James Douglas. Unknown to Jane, Douglas is an adventurer and lives by his wits.

Brokenhearted, Lowell goes on a hunting trip and meets with a serious accident. He is brought home and the doctor informs him he has but a few days to live. Lowell sends for Jane and asks her to make his dying hours happy by becoming his wife. He explains that it is his last request and will enable her to enjoy his fortune when he has gone.

Jane, in perplexity, seeks the advice of Douglas, who, to her amazement, heartily agrees. The girl is blinded by the love she bears the adventurer and consents to the marriage, which takes place at the injured man's bedside.

In the meantime Lucy Randall, who has assisted Douglas in various enterprises, demands money. Douglas puts her off by assuring her that she shall want for nothing, once he gains control of Lowell's fortune.

Through Jane's tender care Lowell begins to improve and his recovery is assured. Instead of being glad, he is in despair. Jane appreciates his predicament and realizes the depth of his love. Finally she determines to renounce any allegiance to Douglas and her course is made easier when she sees further indications of his intimacy with Lucy.

THE TERROR OF CONSCIENCE (June 6).—Singing to the accompaniment of her uncle Pietro's street piano, Carmela, a beautiful Italian girl, attracts the attention of Paul Baron, a young actor. One day he befriends her when the domineering Pietro becomes vicious, and takes her in his automobile to a sanitarium, where she is tenderly cared for. The actor's frequent visits result in a romance and Carmela becomes his wife.

The next year Baron plays an engagement in the town where Pietro makes his home. The old Italian, abandoning the street piano after the loss of Carmela, has become a street peddler and when he discovers his niece with her husband, his crafty mind conceives a scheme to rob her of the jewels which she wears. He writes a pitiful note, stating that he is in ill health and wishes her forgiveness before he dies.

Carmela, suspecting nothing, falls into the trap and is decoyed to Pietro's cabin. When she discovers his plot a struggle ensues and she falls to the floor, unconscious. Thinking he has killed the girl, Pietro is conscience-stricken and wanders about the street.

It is a hot day and Baron, appearing in a matinee performance of Richelieu, steps to the stage door. The ignorant Italian passes the theater, and mistaking Baron for a priest, pours out his confession. The actor hastily changes his clothing, while an understudy prepares to take up the role of Richelieu. A police officer is summoned and Pietro conducts the party to his cottage, where it is discovered that Carmela has not been seriously injured.

WHEN WOMEN ARE POLICE (June 7).—Higgins, a young police officer, is suspended for sleeping while on duty, and Jennie Lee is sent to cover his beat. Jennie determines to make good and has a series of adventures which test her courage, but she comes out with flying colors. Fatty Jones, who has been celebrating with some friends, spies the young officer and asks her to assist him home. Jennie is inclined to protest, but Jones insists that it is her duty. Complications arise when Mrs. Jones sees the pretty young woman helping her husband to his residence.

Officer Higgins, plotting vengeance, is the means of Jennie's undoing by placing a mouse in her pathway. She blows her whistle and Higgins, who has been reinstated, hastens to her rescue. That evening, when both are off duty, Higgins proposes and Jennie decides to resign from the force.

PERCY'S WOOING (June 7).—Percy Rosebud, a dainty young creature, is an ardent suitor for the hand of Nellie Gray. In a very curt note Nellie informs him that she can only marry a "manly man," and Percy sets forth to establish a reputation for bravery. He notices a statement in the newspaper that a noted wrestler, "The Terrible Swede," is training for his match with Tabasco. For a liberal consideration the wrestler consents to a private exhibition in which Percy is to become the victor. The performance is given and Percy is acclaimed a hero. The scheming Swede decides to extort money from Percy by threatening to expose him, but Percy turns the tables and makes good his new reputation.

THE RUBE AND THE BOOB (June 9).—Bill, a stake-hand with a circus, is called upon to lead the parade when the drum-major is suddenly taken ill. He is equal to the task and as he struts down the street he fascinates Jennie, a country girl, who has come to town with her sweetheart, Bob, to see the show. Jennie insists upon following the parade to the show grounds, where Bill tells her he will meet her after the performance.

Jennie returns to her disconsolate lover, who states that he will secure some lemonade for their lunch. In making the purchase, Bob sees Bill carrying water for the elephants. He hastens back for Jennie, that she may see the roustabout in his true vocation. Bill flees in terror when the couple approaches, but he cannot escape the vengeance of the rube, who demonstrates that the boob makes a fine target at the "three-throws-for-five" stand.

THE SCHEME OF SHIFTLESS SAM SMITH (June 9).—Shiftless Sam Smith receives a shipment of potatoes, but is too lazy to plant them. A brilliant idea occurs to him and he scatters about the village, notes which read that a treasure is buried on his lot. Several husky individuals, full of greed for gold, visit Sam's place and dig up the ground.

Three months later the potatoes are flourishing. It happens that a gang of street laborers discaver one of Sam's old notes, which has been buried, and a second party of the avaricious wreck the shiftless one's crop before he can drive them away.

THE PAWNBROKER'S DAUGHTER (June 11).—Manuel Dreyfus, a dignified old pawnbroker, sends his daughter to college, where she meets Edward Marshall, a wealthy young Gentile. They become very fond of each other and Dreyfus is ill at ease when he sees that Aaron Stern, the young man whom he hopes will become Esther's husband, is disregarded.

Edward's mother loses heavily at the whist club and her husband refuses to pay her debts. She pawns her necklace with Dreyfus. Later Dreyfus receives a note from Edward, asking him to bring Esther and meet the family. He does not inform his daughter of the visit which Mrs. Marshall has paid his place, heavily veiled, but he recalls the address on the pawn ticket.

Dreyfus and Esther make the call and find the Marshalls rude and indifferent hosts. To relieve the embarrassment, Edward takes Esther for a walk. The girl realizes that she can never marry a Gentile and so informing Edward, she goes home to meet Aaron, to whom she has promised to give an answer.

Mrs. Marshall becomes so insulting that the old pawnbroker takes the necklace from his pocket and returns it to her. He then goes home and finds a note from his daughter, stating that she has gone

BROUGHT TO BAY (June 13).—Jim Madden, a young ranch owner, is sorely in need of funds. He attends a dance with his sister, May, and Steve Bonner, their manly young foreman, who is in love with May. Although Steve warns him against Pete Frawley and Joe Temple, horse rustlers, Jim insists upon associating with them, stating that he is old enough to take care of himself. The horse rustlers persuade him to assist them in stealing some horses from the Bar X ranch. He accepts a sum of money from the unscrupulous men and induces May and Steve to remain at the dance.

Jim and the rustlers steal five colts and brand them in his corral. They are forced to leave hastily and one of the horses is left behind. Steve returns from the dance and sees the freshly branded colt. He immediately suspects Jim, but determines to save him for his sister's sake. He heats a branding iron, and is changing the brand when the owner of the Bar X and his cowboys come upon him. They are about to deal roughly with him when Jim, stricken by remorse, confesses his part in the crime. During the excitement caused by this announcement Jim is shot and seriously wounded. May is attracted by the shot and bears him home on her horse, while the cowboys ride after the rustlers. After an exciting chase they overtake the two men and bring them to justice.

Later we see Jim well on the road to recovery and determined never again to wander from the straight and narrow path.

THE GYPSY'S BRAND (June 14).—Dr. Allen, spending his vacation at a summer hotel, wanders into the woods and meets Robar, a gypsy girl. They become very friendly and the intimacy which arises incurs the jealousy of Romaine, a gypsy, who hastens to inform the chief of the band. The chief spies upon the couple and later punishes Robar by branding her on the forehead. By the brand, Robar will always be held in disgrace and must be the servant of the band.

The doctor has arranged to elope with Robar and when she fails to appear, he steals to the camp and finds her sitting in the moonlight, suffering from the torture of the brand. He secretly conducts her to the hotel, where he discovers that he can remove the mark.

Allen and Robar are married and go to the city. Romaine follows, and forcing his way into the doctor's house, demands the young woman by right of the brand. When Robar appears, Ramaine finds to his amazement that the mark has disappeared.

Several years later the doctor and his wife, with their little boy, visit the country. It happens that the same band of gypsies is camping nearby. The mother and child walk through the woods and stop at a spring, where the boy plays in the mud. In his play he makes upon his mother's brow a mark similar to the old brand. Two gypsies pass and discover the apparently branded woman. They force Robar to accompany them to the camp and she is about to be dealt with severely, when the husband arrives on the scene and convinces the gypsies of their mistake.

ESSANAY.

THE FINAL JUDGMENT (Special—2 parts—June 9).—The first part of this photoplay opens in Klondike country, two years after the great gold rush of 1897. In one of the many little mining camps, which have sprung up, we find Frank McCormack, an ex-newspaper man, and his friend, Carl Brandon, a prospector. Knowing that Brandon has caught the gambling fever and fearing for the future of his friend, McCormack suggests that they invest their money in a small restaurant and lunch room, which they subsequently purchase from Edna Wallace. Ascertaining that the girl wants to return East, and knowing that McCormack loves the girl as much as he does, Brandon proposes and is accepted. Five years later we see that the demon, "Drink," has a firm grip on Brandon and he neglects his wife and business. McCormack endeavors to rescue him. Some time later Brandon has a serious quarrel with his wife and accuses her of trying to elope with McCormack. That night he steals his four-year-old son, William, but is overtaken in the wilderness the next day by McCormack, who had promised the hysterical wife that he would go and try to bring back the boy. The two men meet, and, in the struggle that follows, Brandon shoots McCormack. Believing that he has killed his friend, Brandon, with his son, makes all haste to Dawson. The wounded man is found by two prospectors, is cared for and two weeks later returns to the mining village only to learn that Mrs. Brandon has left for the United States in hopes of finding her husband and son.

Fifteen years later, McCormack, returning from his office in a large New York daily, of which he is the night city editor, has no sooner seated himself in the parlor of his home, when he hears a noise in the library. He investigates, armed with a revolver, and discovers Brandon, unkempt and ragged, who drops dead almost immediately, thinking that he had seen an apparition of McCormack. Through a letter in the dead man's pockets, McCormack learns that William Brandon is well cared for at a military academy. A month later William is apprised of his father's tragic death and given a place on the editorial staff as a reporter. He, however, fails to make good and is advised by McCormack to try some other means of livlihood. Just then the telephone bell rings and a reporter asks for assistance in order to get a good factory fire story where hundreds of women are imperiled. William is assigned and at the scene of the conflagration, he forgets his duty as a reporter and hurries to rescue a woman who has fainted on a fire-escape. Seeing that escape down the staircase and the elevator is impossible, they again resort to the fire-escape, which is now being licked by great tongues of flame. They are finally rescued by the firemen and rushed to a hospital. Several hours later McCormack comes to the hospital to see the young man and the woman he had rescued. When he sees the woman lying on the opposite cot, he draws back in bewilderment. It is Edna Brandon. The boy had rescued his mother and he did not know it. The story comes to an end with McCormack apprising the two of their relationship.

THE SHADOWGRAPH MESSAGE (June 10).—Yuma, a deaf and dumb Mexican, teaches Dan Morgan, a cowpuncher, the sign language. That night, Morgan wins several hundred dollars in a game. Hugh Haines follows Morgan to his home to secure the money. Yuma watches Haines. Haines enters Morgan's shack and hides behind the curtain. Morgan discovers the shadowgraph message on the window shade, which tells him that a man is hiding in the room. Morgan captures him, and takes him to the sheriff. Yuma is rewarded by Dan's gratitude.

THE STAR (June 11).—Pauline Deverau, a premier danseuse, gives her last performance in the ballet at the theater De Luxe. Clarence Inbad, a ballroom type, thinks he is in love with her, and tries to the best of his ability to meet her. The doorman at the stage entrance ousts him. Pauline later goes to work in a restaurant to get local color for a dramatic part she is to play the following season. Clarence Inbad frequents the restaurant, and finally persuades Pauline to keep an engagement with him. The funny and embarrassing situations that Clarence goes through, are exceedingly interesting. Just see it.

CINDERELLA'S GLOVES (June 12).—Millie Wilson, a simple country girl, comes to New York, with a valise, bird cage and a note for her aunt, asking her to take care of her, her mother having died. She reluctantly takes in the daughter of her sister, installing her in the kitchen. One night, Millie is hurriedly sent to the residence of a society woman with a Cinderella costume. The lady scolds Millie and sends her back with the dress. The girl sits on the adjoining stoop, afraid to go home. The husband of the society lady, sees Millie and pities her in her plight. He gives her the money for the dress, and tells her to go to the mask ball herself. Millie has a great time at the ball, where she meets her Prince Charming. At twelve o'clock Cinderella (Millie) flies from her lover. Prince Charming tries to find his Cinderella. The rest is too good to tell. Just see it.

THE MYSTERIOUS STRANGER (June 13).—Too much business worry makes Ralph Jones brutal to his wife. Dr. Frederick Chillbrook, a hypnotist, is called into consultation by Mrs. Jones. Chillbrook later hypnotizes Jones into thinking that his wife is fond of another man. Jones sees the vision of the man embracing his wife. Every place Jones goes, he sees this man, whether it is in his office, his home, in a taxicab, or elevator, this man haunts him. The mysterious stranger finally makes Jones promise to pay more attention to his wife and treat her civilly. The novel experiment proved to develop into happiness for Mrs. Jones.

THE RANCH FEUD (June 14).—Desperate tactics are usually used in a feud. Broncho Billy's father determined to soothe his passion with revenge, starts out after John Mackley. Broncho Billy persuades his father to keep cool. Mackley, however, gets his revenge by shooting his daughter's sweetheart, Broncho Billy. On his knees Broncho Billy crawls to his home, where his father takes him in, and sends for a doctor. The doctor informs the father that the only thing that will save his son is a reconciliation. Mackley is finally persuaded to allow his daughter to see Broncho Billy. Broncho Billy recognizes her. Both fathers agree to end the feud.

EDISON

PROFESSOR WILLIAM NUTT (June 2).—Professor William Nutt, a vegetarian, while lecturing on the evils of eating animal food, meets Mr. Hastings, an old schoolmate, who invites him home to dinner. It happens to be on a Monday, and Mrs. Hastings is obliged to do her own washing, the washerwoman having left in a huff. She is horrified when she sees her husband and the professor coming, and an accident happens which renders the little food she has left in the house unfit to eat. Not wanting to disappoint the professor at not having a good meal, the wife advises her husband of the accident and both, unknown to the professor, hurry from neighbor to neighbor getting eatables. They succeed in obtaining quite a nice menu, consisting of roast chicken, etc., but when the professor is escorted to the table he refuses everything and takes from his pockets his meal, which consists of six peanuts, Greek Tragedy and Sarah Bernhardt in the Movies.

The Detroit Opera House gave itself over to the "movies" Monday, presenting an elaborate picture version of "Oedipus Rex," the Greek tragedy, and Mme. Sarah Bernhardt in "The Romance of an Actress," a convenient name for the longer tragedy, "Adrienne Lecouvreur," one of her favorite vehicles. M, Mounet Sully appeared as Oedipus, so that the histrionic treat was a double one. How peculiarly fitted for camera acting is the work of the French school is forcefully impressed by these films. So accurate and careful is the pantomime that never does there seem to be any obscurity. The Greek tragedy is given on a scale impossible on the regular stage and for that reason is, perhaps, more effective visually than the stage revivals it has recently had. The films for these productions are particularly clear and do not annoy the eye with the cloudiness which is too often a characteristic of a "movie" drama.

Detroit—Bernhardt and M. Mounet Sully in Movies.

Detroiters are this week afforded an opportunity to enjoy the work of two of the foremost artists of the French stage. The assertion that the opportunity will prove a source of enjoyment is made unequivocally, for it is doubtful if ever in the history of photoplays has anything superior to the pictures being shown at the Detroit Opera House this week been seen locally. The films are remarkably clear, and in their presentation there is an agreeable absence of the blurring that so frequently mars attempts of this sort.

A double bill is the offering, with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, foremost tragedienne of her race of whom America has knowledge, and M. Mounet Sully, the great French tragedian, dividing the honors. Mme. Bernhardt presents, via the camera, an adaptation in abbreviated form of "Adrienne Lecouvreur," for convenience sake during the present tour entitled "The Romance of An Actress." Right here it may prove of passing interest to turn aside long enough to record the fact that it was this same play which Mme. Bernhardt chose to open her first American tour, which occurred at Booth's Theater, New York, in November, 1880.

Greek Tragedy in Fine Moving Pictures.

By Percy Hammond.

These moving pictures at the Studebaker are proud and patrician, representing the film aristocracy. Their dignified reels show Madame Sarah as Adrienne Lecouvreur in a drama of her own making, and M. Mounet Sully in "Oedipus Rex," both of them unusual subjects for the photographer. Nowadays at the theater one speaks of Essanay or Selig in discussing the production, instead of Belasco or Frohman, and, perhaps, comments critically about the steadiness, the sharpness, and the clarity of the representation. The Studebaker exhibit thus is a Hecla show, if that trademark signifies anything to the moving picture public, and it is wonderfully steady and clear. In fact, it is the best photography the drama can boast, so vivid and so substantial is its reproduction of the incidents involved.

Detroit Opera House.

The proverbial ability of the French people to use the motions of bodily activity as a secondary means of expression is developed to a high degree in their stage folk, making them ideal actors for photoplays of the best drama. Representations of the best that they can offer are being shown this week in the Detroit Opera House.

The first of two numbers on the program is a presentation of Mme Sarah Bernhardt's company in the unhappy romance of the famous actress, "Adrienne Lecouvreur," and the other is taken from the Comedie Francaise with M. Mounet Sully, the great French tragedian, taking the leading role in "Oedipus Rex."

Adrienne Lecouvreur, played by Mme Bernhardt, is the favored rival of the powerful Duchess de Bouillon for the love of Maurice de Saxe, and her struggles to escape the machinations of the duchess are graphically portrayed.

The death scene is the one which has made the play one of the most famous of the Bernhardt repertoire. It is said to be her favorite. From it she chose the fable of the two pigeons to speak when as a young and ambitious actress without backing except her ability she made application for admission to the conservatoire of the Comedie Francaise.

three walnuts, four prunes and a raw carrot. Husband and wife look at each other, unable to know whether they should swear or laugh.

RIGHT FOR RIGHT'S SAKE (June 3).—District Attorney Stanton is in serious danger of defeat in the impending election unless something happens to change the tide of public opinion. When things look blackest, his political manager, Boss O'Grady, discovers bribery in the ranks of the opposition.

Stanton devotes all his energies to the prosecution of the supposedly guilty Morton, who has been picked out as a scapegoat for his party. On the last day of the trial, evidence is placed in Stanton's hands absolutely proving Morton's innocence. Urged by ambition and the entreaties of Boss O'Grady, Stanton suppresses this evidence.

Nora, Morton's daughter, appeals to Stanton's wife, who is sympathetic but unmoved, until she accidentally stumbles on the suppressed evidence. Immediately she realizes that the whole fabric of her life's love has been shattered. The man she honored and respected has become degraded in her eyes, and when husband and wife confront each other with the truth, he tries to win back her respect and honor by paying Morton's fine out of his own pocket.

But how little he realizes that this makes no difference in the eyes of the woman who loves him. A great gulf looms between them. He tries to explain to her that it is only a part of the great political game, but it is something finer and bigger than that that stands between husband and wife.

The next morning they part, she to wait until the man she loves understands that respect is part of a true woman's love. Not until some time later do they meet again; the husband has made complete restitution and once again Alice stretches out her arms to the man she loves.

SOME SPOTS IN AND AROUND LOS ANGELES, CAL. (June 4).—In this picture we get some beautiful views of Los Angeles and its environs, principally among which is Pasadena, known as the city of flowers. Unique statues that represent familiar scenes in the old fairy tales, such as "Hansel and Gretel," and others, in Busch's Gardens at Pasadena, also come under the eye of the camera. We also get glimpses of natural history life.

DON'T WORRY (June 4).—Mr. Mortimer is detained at his office one evening, and his wife, one of the worrying kind, imagines that he has been set upon by desperadoes, struck down by an automobile and badly mangled and brought to a hospital, where they mistreat him. She again vainly tries to get him on the telephone, but as the repairman has the wires disconnected, she cannot reach him. She is about to let her mind launch off into another phantasy when her husband comes home safe and sound and tells her everything.

MERCY MERRICK (June 6).—When Mercy Merrick left the refuge in London, where she had heard words of comfort that put her again on the right path, she thought she had turned her back forever on the old life and all that might remind her of it.

From the refuge she had gone to South Africa as a nurse during the war and while there met Grace Rosebury, the daughter of General Rosebury, who had come for temporary shelter to one of the field hospitals. The general's daughter was wet and cold. Mercy loaned her a nurse's uniform. The two girls, during their brief acquaintance, became good friends, and Grace Rosebury told Mercy that she was going to England to stay with friends of her father, whom she had never seen, and that it had been arranged that she was to marry one of the nephews of the house.

Suddenly a shell hit the hospital and a flying splinter struck Grace Rosebury on the head. In the confusion that followed, the surgeon, seeing her in a nurse's uniform, mistook her for a nurse, and after a rapid examination, pronounced her dead. An opportunity had arisen and Mercy could not resist the temptation. She had never known happiness and Grace had never known misery.

She took Grace Rosebury's effects, and declared herself to be the general's daughter. She arrived safely in England, and was received with open arms by Lady Janet Roy and her nephew. She soon won her way into the hearts of all the family, but her happiness could not last. She must be found out sooner or later.

One of the first people she met at the house of Lady Janet Roy was Julian Grey, the pastor of the refuge. He remembered her at once, but she denied all knowledge of him. To make matters worse, she fell in love with him and he with her, despite her nominal engagement to Lady Janet's nephew. The crisis came when the real Grace Rosebury, who was not dead, arrived on the scene and denounced Mercy as an imposter.

Everyone immediately turned against Mercy except Julian Grey, who loved her and offered her his care and protection.

WHILE JOHN BOLT SLEPT (June 7).—John Bolt, a wealthy manufacturer, is a helpless paralytic, who has lived a selfish and grasping life. To him comes a visitant, who, in a vision, makes him see how wrongly he acquired a valuable invention. When he awakens from the vision he sends for the workman from whom he acquired the invention, and, by making restitution by a large sum of money, he regains the use of his right arm. The second time the visitant comes, Bolt is drawn into another vision where he sees how he let his tenants live in a disease-breeding alley, and how he had the clergyman, who appealed to him for better conditions, removed from the parish. By correcting this evil he regains the use of his left arm and the upper part of his body. In the third vision the visitant shows Bolt how mean he had been to his wife and when he awakens from this vision he yearns for her. Learning from the visitant of her husband's relenting ways, Mrs. Bolt goes to him to see him rise from his invalid chair and take her in his arms.

OTHELLO IN JONESVILLE (June 9).—James Reginald Whitestone, an actor of the barn-storming order, being unable to pay the rent, is thrown out on the street. He goes to a country town and succeeds in getting board with the Jones family in exchange for giving their daughter, Tillie, dramatic lessons. Seeing that Tillie yearns to be a great actress, the family decides to give a performance of Othello at the village opera house, with Tillie and Whitestone as the leading characters and the rest of the family in minor parts. Tillie's acting is so unusual that she is ordered to stop by Whitestone. His actions are misjudged by the audience, who begin to throw vegetables at him. Tillie's career is thus nipped in the bud and Whitestone is obliged to pay for his board bill with manual labor.

TWO LITTLE KITTENS (June 10).—Arnold Graves falls in love and marries Lettie, his mother's seamstress. For marrying beneath his station he is told to leave the house. Five years later, Lettie, now a widow, returns to her mother-in-law's house for aid, but is refused. Just about this time Mrs. Graves is going to Europe, and, while riding in her automobile to the station, she sees a little boy with two kittens which he is going to drown. The note that she sends by her chauffeur to the housekeeper to care for the little kittens, proves an opportunity for him to substitute the little children in place of the kittens. Some time later the housekeeper sends a letter with a photograph of the children, saying that "the kittens" are getting along nicely. In the meantime, Lettie manages to get a position as chambermaid in the same hotel that Mrs. Graves is stopping after her return from abroad, and, in cleaning out the room, sees the photograph of her children. The loss of a brooch in Mrs. Graves' room throws suspicion upon Lettie, and, after a trying experience, it leads to a reconciliation with her mother-in-law.

BEAU CRUMMEL AND HIS BRIDE (June 11).—Kitty Perkins is married to Beau Crummel, the village dude, by the Justice of the Peace. As they are coming out of the office of the Justice, they see Kitty's father approaching, and, surmising that he is going to punish them, run away and finally seek shelter in a hotel, where they register under an assumed name, in order to throw the old man off the scent. Kitty goes shopping and upon returning, finds that she has forgotten the number of the room and the fake name. In order to locate the room, she tries first one and then the other. The disturbed guests are resenting the intrusion, when the situation is relieved by the appearance of Beau. The climax is reached when Kitty's father appears. They slam the door in his face and climb down the fire escape, only to be arrested for sneak thieves at the bottom of the ladder and taken into the office of the hotel. There they nearly collapse when they are confronted by Kitty's father, who, to their surprise, is not at all displeased, but on the contrary, gives them his blessing. Beau and Kitty look very foolish and are thoroughly disgusted with themselves for all their manufactured trouble.

ALONG THE NILE (June 13).—Ungainly water-wheels and pumps that may have been startling and new in Moses' day, queer, ineffective plows, drawn by camels and oxen, white-sailed fishing craft clustered together on the river like a flock of great gulls, huge pyramids and the ruins of royal temples, impress us forcibly with the strange, half oriental, half barbaric civilization which was the mother of our modern attainment.

Best of all are the people, tall Mohammedans, with white hats and flowing robes, on their way to the Hammam Baths, Copts, or Native Christians, splendid looking Bedouins from the desert, and tall, supple native women filling their water jars at the river bank.

All this is typical of the Egypt of old. We are no less struck with the evidence these pictures give us that Egypt is something else than a mummified museum of antiquity. Automobiles and street cars are greatly in evidence and palatial tourist steamers plough their way through the muddy waters of the Nile. Typical of modern progress is the great dam at Assouan, a marvel of engineering ingenuity of which exceptionally interesting views are shown. The strange medley of barbarism and civilization shown on this reel gives it an unusual interest that can hardly fail to make it popular.

APPLES OF SODOM (June 14).—George Lawrence and his mother live in a nearby town in a modest sort of way, George earning money by writing. His chum, Philip Crane, comes down on week-ends to call and it is on one of these trips our story starts.

Unknown to his mother, George has written a play, "The Apples of Sodom," and on this occasion when Crane comes to visit, he reads the play and Crane, more than pleased with it, promises to take it to the city and try to sell it to a manager.

Poor George is ailing with a severe cough, which causes his mother many an unhappy moment of worry. On the day Crane returns to the city, George is overcome and dies, trying with his last breath to tell his mother of the play.

Crane returns to the city, reads the play, sees its worth and just as he plans what to do, receives a message of George's death. Sending a wire of condolence, he returns to the play. Why not claim it and change the author's name? This he does.

The play turns out to be a big hit, and royalties flow into Crane's pocket. We see Crane in the box at the opening made to say a few words, and in his home receiving the checks from his manager. Guilty at heart, he tries to ease his conscience by sending a check to Mrs. Lawrence, not speaking of the play.

More than surprised at receiving a letter and the check from Crane, Mrs. Lawrence decides she must go at once and return it. She arrives in the city the night Crane is giving a dinner party. She goes to his home, but finding him out, makes up her mind to go and see him at the dinner. Just as the dinner is at its highest, Mrs. Lawrence's card in handed to Crane. He can hold out no longer. He must tell the truth.

Meeting her in the hall, he begs her, as she is trying to speak of the check, to come to the dinner. For his sake she goes, and he confesses. The guests slowly go and Mrs. Lawrence forgives, as only mothers can.

MELIES.

THE STOLEN CLAIM (June 12).—(Produced in Australia).—Rhodda, an old prospector, has been nursed through an attack of fever by Harry Murray, a young miner. In gratitude, he shows him a bag of rich specimens and marks on a map directions to find the reef from which they came. While Harry is absent getting food for the old man, the specimen bag, with the paper in it is stolen, also Rhodda's watch. The thief is a working miner named Hurley. When Harry returns to the cottage, Rhodda is overcome by the shock of the robbery and dies. He bequeaths the claim to Harry.

A few days later, Jack Murray, the young miner's brother, arrives by train on the goldfields. By the same train comes a capitalist named Cuthbert, with his wife and their daughter, Hilda. Jack Murray has become friends with them on their way up. Also on the train is Colonel Baylor, a gentleman miner, who proves to be an associate of the working miner, Hurley.

Hurley tells the colonel of a rich discovery he has made—really the dead prospector's claim. The colonel takes in Cuthbert as an associate to provide money for operations.

Meanwhile, young Harry has told his brother Jack of the rich find, and of the robbery, and declares he remembers Rhodda's directions well enough to locate the claim. The two parties start almost at the same time for the same goal, nobody but Hurley knowing the fact. They camp near each other on the night before the place will be reached, and in the evening the Murrays visit the other camp, during which time Hurley steals off to their camp and drugs their coffee in the billy can.

The two brothers do not awake until midday, to find the others gone ahead. They follow, only to find the colonel and Hurley in possession of the claim. Jack Murray, however, tackles them in a fight, and Rhodda's stolen watch is found in Hurley's belt pouch. The colonel disclaims all knowledge of the theft and voluntarily renounces his rights to the claim, and Hurley is allowed to go free by similarly surrendering the property. The Murrays are congratulated by Cuthbert and his daughter.

JENKS BECOMES A DESPERATE CHARACTER (June 9).—Peter Jenkins is the meek and servile husband of his better half. He lurks at home with her, tying the ribbon on the family cat. These fireside propensities are too much for Mrs. Jenkins. She gives him a dollar and tells him to go and be a regular man. She wants real paint. Jenks surprises her fondest hopes, but she decides that after all, the family cat acts as a good leverage.

RED HICKS DEFIES THE WORLD—(June 9).—Hard as nails and as strong winded as a gale in March, Red Hicks may have been a bit "chesty," but he was in perfect trim. The town depended on the champion, O'Shea, the fighting Irishman, to make soft putty of the world famous pugilist, but on the day of the fight there was no O'Shea. The supposition was he did not have the price; and other domestic difficulties interfered. O'Shea's trainer, however, solved the problem and Red Hicks found his Waterloo.

THE WELL (June 12).—Success is often coveted instead of honestly earned. Through honest effort the farmer was enjoying the fruits of his labor. A large irrigation well was among his new acquisitions. Therein his designing helpers held him prisoner while they left with his wealth and his daughter. There is an old saying, however, that an evil purpose always defeats its own end by some committing act.

DEATH'S MARATHON (June 14).—The self-centered man, ever confident of his success, wins in love over the more sensitive friend. Assurance and success come naturally. Overwhelmed by the game of chance, it is significant that he takes his defeat with less philosophy than most men. To him it is utter failure—the end of all.

His incompatible nature causes him to carry his rash act to the climax, nor can others prevent.

PATHEPLAY.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 23, 1913 (June 2).—New York, N. Y.—The New York Civic Parade is composed of 30,000 men, representing all the activities of the great municipality, and in marching order forms a line six and a half miles long.

And Many Others.

MAX'S FIRST JOB (June 10).—Max Linder's behavior when he applied for a job as a Pathe Freres moving picture actor, was such a good joke on him that it was decided to make a film of the event, and accordingly, Max was called upon to play the lead. He was serious for once in his life, when he offered his services, and to see Max serious is really amusing. The first film for which he posed was "Mr. Henpeck," and the rough deal he received, caused Max to forget that he was acting, and he turned suddenly upon one of his co-workers, whose duty it was to abuse him, and a rough and tumble fight ensued. The belligerents could not be parted until a stream of water was turned on them, and as soon as he could speak through anger and water, Max resigned, but reconsidered his decision later on, as his many admirers well know.

THE CHATEAU OF CHENONCEAU, FRANCE (June 10).—A fine specimen of Renaissance architecture which has the added attraction of being built on stone piers across the river Cher.

HIS LORDSHIP'S ROMANCE (June 11).—Percy Fitznoodle, in charge of Murphy's glove counter, one day saw, at a distance, the girl of his dreams. He dreamed of her instead of attending to the customers, and a floorwalker fined him $6.00. Percy was feeling rather blue when he went to lunch, but he met Tom Burke, a stout Lothario, who was feeling rather blue himself, because he was not progressing very well with a love affair. Burke offered to pay Percy liberally if he would pose as Lord Fitznoodle and put in a good word for Burke with the latter's girl. Percy agreed and accompanied Burke to a lawn party where he learned that the girl Burke was anxious to win was the girl of his own dreams. Instantly he forgot his contract with Burke. After the party was over the girl found out that Percy was a gay deceiver, and to teach him his place, she went to Murphy's ostensibly to buy a pair of gloves. She succeeded in hurting Percy's feelings, but as he fitted the gloves their hands met, and in a short time their lips met too.

THE ARTIST'S DREAM (June 12).—Charley Heckler, the artist, was called away from a party to furnish a drawing which he had agreed to supply. He finished his drawing, partly, and to stimulate his imagination, he laid down. He soon fell fast asleep, and while Charley slept, the dog in the drawing came to life with an appetite that just had to be appeased. A string of frankfurters, also in the drawing, attracted him. A mouse appeared and endeavored to share the meal with the dog. After a lively chase the mouse disappeared and then a flea called the dog's attention to the fact that he had a tail. The antics of the dog in pursuit of the flea are the biggest laugh ever.

An absorbing story leads up to the great struggle, which lasted three days—July 1-2-3—and in which the loss of life was appalling. Gen. Lee hurled himself upon the north, and the Union forces were hurriedly marshaled and met him at Gettysburg. The Union army numbered more than 77,000, and the Confederate forces 59,000. The charge of Gen. Pickett, with 4,900 men, following a fierce cannonading, into the center of the Union army, is the most sensational, heroic and thrilling incident in the war history of the world.

partment, featuring a race up the side of a house, without any assistance from ladders or ropes, or anything of the kind. Then, in the women's class, upwards of a thousand of the expert gymnasts go through their various exercises in perfect unison. In the men's gymnasium class the feats are more difficult and more daring. There are other scenes too numerous to mention, but which, combined with those already recorded, make as interesting a picture as one would wish to see, not to mention its educational value.

PLACES OF INTEREST IN COLORADO (June 13).—A travelogue of Colorado, showing the most interesting features of the city of Denver, and concluding with a short and delightful trip through the royal gorge, a beautiful specimen of Nature's handiwork.

FOR MAYOR—BESS SMITH (June 14).—Mrs. Bess Smith was a widow, and a suffragette. When election time drew near the "Votes for Women" advocates nominated her for mayor against Joe Jones, the machine candidate. After one encounter with the suffragists, Jones was treated so roughly that he decided to pay Mrs. Smith to withdraw. When he called, the ladies fixed up a scheme on him by which he made his proposition to a phonograph record, as well as to the nominee; then they told him what had happened. Joe, a widower, told his son, Joe, Junior, of what had happened and Joe offered to help him. Joe, Junior, was in love with Bess Smith, Junior, and when Mrs. Smith was coming home from a mass meeting, she met Joe, Senior, and invited him into her home. When they entered they found their respective son and daughter in each other's arms. Mrs. Smith stormed and raged at this new complication, but finally gave the children her blessing. Joe Jones, the elder, thereupon proposed to Mrs. Smith, and she decided that in case she lost the office it might be a good thing to be the wife of the mayor.

THE GOVERNOR'S DOUBLE (Special, 2 parts, June 13).—Governor Walter Garland, a conscientious executive, receives a complaint from a committee of reformers that the convicts in the state prison are subjected to inhuman treatment. The governor decides to investigate, and accordingly goes to his friend, Judge Howe, requesting the latter to have him arrested under a fictitious name, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment, then, after thirty days have passed, release him on a writ of habeas corpus, thus permitting the governor to investigate the prisons without the officials being aware of his presence.

The governor's last executive act is the pardoning of Pete Brown, a lifer, whose attorney, James McDonald, is the governor's personal friend. The plan works well, no one knowing of the arrangement except the judge and the governor himself. Within a short time, the absence of Governor Garland creates a sensation. No one knows his whereabouts and the papers feature the fact that the twenty-fifth of June is the date set for Governor Garland's wedding with Miss King, who is also ignorant of her lover's whereabouts. After the thirty days have elapsed, Judge Howe prepares to issue a writ that will free the governor, but a sudden stroke of apoplexy paralyzes his heart and he dies almost instantly. The governor, in his cell, cannot understand the judge's silence after the thirty days have elapsed. Brown, the ex-convict, visits Albany to thank the governor for pardoning him. His facial characteristics are such that he is immediately shown into the governor's chamber and asked to explain his disappearance. Brown is mystified, but soon decides that if people believe him to be the governor, he will not tell them the truth. He satisfactorily explains his absence and the papers are again full of news of the Garland-King wedding.

On the eve of the wedding, Garland, in his cell, is almost frantic when he receives a newspaper that informs him of Judge Howe's death. He tells the warden that he is the governor. The warden smiles and orders him back to work with the gang. Desperate, Garland breaks for the open. He compels a passing chauffeur to hurry him to the city and storms into the church in his convict garb, where, with a wild "I forbid," he halts the ceremony. When Garland tells his story, the best man, who is Attorney McDonald for the first time recognizes his client, Pete Brown, and the bride, with the two men before her, quickly decides which man is her lover.

THE GRAND OLD FLAG (2 parts—June 10).—Don Lopez had tried to remain faithful to the Spanish King and crown, until the cruelty of Weyler had driven him to side with the downtrodden insurrectos and with money and influence furnish them with arms. Ametza, his dark-eyed, beautiful daughter, is courted by El Donza, who, by courtly manner and courtesy, has covered his identity as a Spanish agent from the father and won liking from Ametza. About this time a terrific storm on the sea throws two American soldiers of fortune on the beach of Cuba near the home of the Lopez. Ametza by chance sees them and getting aid rescues them. Ametza's attentions to the Americans causes El Donza to swear vengeance against them, and his anger is added to by a good American thrashing from Harold Logan.

Going back to the Spanish camp, he gets his henchmen and determines on an attack of the Lopez home. A skirmish occurs and the timely action of Ametza saves Harold from death, but her father and sister fall victims of Donza's vengeance. Ametza and the two soldiers of fortune escape from the Spanish and reaching the rocky shore, see the grand old flag fluttering from an American gun boat. The officers see the signal of distress made by them and send a small detachment ashore.

Meanwhile El Donza has reached the shore, being told of the Americans' escape by a Spanish spy and pursues the Americans. The marines land, but are insufficient to cope with the Spanish. The battle results in the capture of Harold, Sherman and Ametza, who are taken to prison.

In prison the Americans are offered the choice of being branded with a hot iron, or allegiance to the Spanish flag. Sherman is branded, but ere the iron reaches Harold, Ametza sets the prison on fire and the guards rushing to subdue the flames, the Americans escape. Reaching the American scouts, they are conveyed to the American camp. A battle is imminent and a Spanish scout reports to El Donza, who has escaped the flaming prison, their line of march. The Spanish dig pitfalls; but the Americans, by chance, change their route and attacking the Spanish from an unlooked for quarter, rout them and El Donza falls a victim to his own pitfalls. Harold raises Old Glory to the accompaniment of American cheers, over the Spanish block house, and Ametza and victory are his.

THE COMEDIAN'S MASK (2 parts—June 9).—King Baggot is a comedian out of work. He finds it very difficult to get a job, but finally secures a position as principal comedian with "The Girl from Wayback" company. King is devotedly attached to his wife and child, but his wife is very vain and shallow, and accepts the attentions of Basil Graham, the foppish tenor of the company, who, while professing friendship for King, takes every opportunity of flirting with King's wife. This is done to such an extent that it arouses the attention of the stage-hands, with whom King is a great favorite. On the opening night, King scores a great triumph. He has left his child in the dressing room and she is playing with some poison King had been using for a burn on his arm. King finds it in her possession and hurriedly takes it from her, showing her the danger of playing with it.

King is very much hurt by the coldness of his wife's manner. His child strays from the dressing room to the side of the stage, and, whilst her father is on the stage, she plays with the button on the door of the wing, making it necessary for King to exit behind the other wing, where he discovers his wife in the arms of his false friend. They do not see him, and, brokenhearted, he goes to his dressing room and takes the poison, determining to end it all. He rushes back to the stage for his last scene and his wife and the tenor determine to elope. They are hastily leaving the theater when King, at the finish of his scene, as the curtain falls, drops with agony to the stage. The manager frantically goes before the curtain and asks if there is a doctor in the house and one comes forward, and King's child shows the doctor the poison bottle. The doctor calls for an antidote, which is instantly produced by one of the property men. The doctor gives it to King who is anxiously watched by the crowd in their stage garb and motley, for the sign of life. The child in the meanwhile has strayed outside and shown her mother the poison, and, when she realizes the terrible truth, she runs from her would-be lover and goes to her husband's aid. Somewhat disgusted the tenor follows her, and when she finds that King is recovering she begs him to forgive her, realizing that it is the comedian she has loved after all. The husband and wife are united.

THE HIGHER LAW (June 12).—Violet Horner, arriving at a little mining village to take charge of the school, is insulted by a drunken miner. The mine superintendent comes to her rescue and knocks the drunkard down. A year later, Vi and the superintendent are married and living happily. Calvin (the drunken miner), has never forgotten the punch in the face, and one day while slouching around the mine he sees the paymaster arrive and enter the office with the superintendent. Calvin plans to get the money. He makes a few futile attempts to shoot the superintendent, but is always thwarted.

The superintendent starts home with the money. Calvin follows him deciding to shoot him and get the money at the first chance. As the superintendent is about to enter his house he is shot in the back. He calls to his wife; she drags him into the house and slams the door in Calvin's face. Furious, Calvin starts to shoot through the door. Unable to get in, he starts to pry open the shutters.

Inside the house, Violet, while trying to staunch the blood from her husband's wound, turns and sees Calvin attempting to break in the shutters. She runs to the kitchen and returns with a kettle of boiling water which she pours through the bottom of the shutters and scalds Calvin's hands. Furious, Calvin decides to try another entry and mounting the steps leading to an upper floor, he starts to smash the window.

Violet hears the smashing glass, she thinks, and calling their dog (whom they have been sending to the grocery store), she writes a note calling for help, and giving it to the dog she sends him out the back door and to the store.

The dog arrives at the store, the miners, who are hanging around, read the note and jumping in an open wagon which comes on at this time, they dash off.

Calvin after smashing down a couple of doors, gets into the room where Violet is with her husband. He gets the cash box containing the money and is about to get out of the window when he is struck by a flash of lightning. The house takes fire: Violet drags her husband out of danger.

Outside the miners rush on in time to see Vi drag her husband out of the flames. One of the boys goes inside and returns with the cash box, and tells them that Calvin is dead. All bare their heads and offer up a prayer for thankfulness to God.

THE KING CAN DO NO WRONG (3 parts—June 12).—In one of the smaller European kingdoms there dwells a man who is dominated by and imbued with the idea that the King can do no wrong. The man is a trusted and faithful commander in the King's army, and he has a young wife and a baby girl. The monarch sees the wife and takes her away from his subject, and the man sees but the wrong in his helpmate and not in his king.

He takes the baby girl and a trusted serving woman away into the fastness of the mountains and the girl grows to young womanhood entirely ignorant of the world and its ways. In time the king's son hears of the ravishing beauty of the maiden and does not rest content until he has her hiding place spied upon and seeks her in person. The girl sees a man for the first time and a handsome youth at that. She is an easy victim and returns with him to the court, where she rails at her father for shutting her off from the joys and pleasures she is having. He, heartbroken, beats the serving woman and finally forces her to make a "loving cake" the same as she had done to reward the girl when forgiven for her little faults. The father doctors the cake and the serving woman takes it to the girl and induces her to eat it in order to show that she is forgiven. The daughter dies at the feet of the prince, but the king and the prince live and forget—for "The King Can Do No Wrong!"

THE PRETENDER (June 15).—Occupying a menial position as maid to the Warrentons, an ostentatious family whose chief ambition is social recognition and the marrying of their daughter to a man of money, Betty cherishes a secret ambition to be a lady just once. This opportunity is granted her unexpectedly when the Warrentons close their summer home and leave for two months visit to the seashore. The servants are given a vacation for that period. Bowing to the temptation, Betty draws her savings—amounting to $500, and decides to make one supreme effort to realize her dream. She slips away in secret, renews her wardrobe, and registers at a renowned beach resort hotel. Blessed with physical beauty and carriage, liberally enhanced by her carefully selected wardrobe, her dainty appearance captivates the guests at the hotel, likewise engendering an air of romantic mystery. Bert Royal, considered in social circles the catch of the season, becomes interested in Betty, particularly so when she deliberately snubs him, which is in direct contrast to the snobbish attention displayed by other marriageables. It is only after marked persistency that friendship is permitted which unconsciously merges into the romantic. The Warrentons meanwhile have received a social tip that Bert Royal is at this hotel and all engagements are cancelled in order to likewise register, they believing their daughter eligible to a possible engagement. Betty, with Bert at the time, sees the approach of her employers and hastily leaves, packing her belongings and slipping away before Bert discovers the fact. He promptly packs and follows in a wild, but persistent attempt to locate her. Consternation reigns at this unexpected change on the part of the guests. A few months later the Warrentons are entertaining and Betty occupies the same position as maid. At a dinner it is discovered that there are thirteen guests at the table, and, in order to pacify the superstitious, Mrs. Warrenton, unable to resort to other method, compels Betty to don her daughter's gown and dine to offset the fateful number. An envious impression is created as she enters, but as they prepare to dine she is stricken dumb with amazement to discover among the guests her seaside friend, Bert Royal, he at the same time calling her by name in unfeigned surprise and pleasure. Casting aside dignity, Betty dashes in mad flight from the dining room, followed by the persistent Bert Royal, who at length captures her, listens in amusement to her tearful confession and—well, the story ends as all would have it.

FALSE LOVE AND TRUE (June 10).—Professor Toscani, an instructor of music, has as one of his pupils Miss Grace Roberts, a very wealthy heiress. He plots to get some of her money and writes to an Italian friend of his to come to his home. There they play that the professor shall introduce Tony as an Italian count and have him win Grace's heart and money, dividing the spoils between them. The plan works out and the handsome Italian engages himself to Grace. Some time later, Grace receives a letter that a new will of her uncle has been found, in which she has been disinherited and leaving his entire estate to a missionary fund. The poor girl is nearly heartbroken over the loss of her home and property. She seeks comfort in the professor. He tells Tony and Tony compels the professor to give him money. He goes away. The professor writes a note, purporting to come from Tony telling Grace that he has been compelled to go back to Italy and promising to return for her. The poor girl goes to town and seeks and finds employment. She rooms at a boarding house. There she meets Fred Keen, a detective. Fred falls in love with her and proposes marriage to her. She tells him she is engaged to another man. One day, a package is left for Grace in Fred's room. He takes it up to her but she is not there. He notices the picture of the bogus count and recognizes in him a crook for whom he has been looking. Grace returns and informs Fred that the original of the photograph he is looking at is the man she is engaged to. Fred decides to look him up. Tony, meanwhile has sought his old haunts, and during an altercation at cards, shoots a man. Fred hearing the shot, rushes to the saloon from whence the noise emanated and finds Tony struggling to get away. Fred arrests him. He is taking him to the station house when they meet Grace on the street. She confronts him and he admits that he is an old time crook and that his pretentions of royalty and protestations of love were sham. He is dragged off to jail. Later, Fred renews his suit, and Grace, awakening to the depths of his pure, true love, after experiencing the shock of her affair with the bogus count, accepts him.

AN EXPENSIVE DRINK (June 15).—Hubby is addicted to the use of liquor and refuses to stop drinking same despite his wife's pleadings. After business he invariably visits the saloon and keeps his wife waiting for him for supper. One day she buys a bottle of Cura-Lusher, which is guaranteed to cure all craving for liquor. That evening, hubby brings home a new bottle of whiskey and wifie immediately doctors it with the Cura-Lusher. Hubby drinks some and immediately detects that there is something wrong. He thinks the saloon keeper swindled him and immediately goes over and has the bottle changed for real whiskey. Wifie puts some of the cure into the coffee, thinking that the best way to cure hubby of the habit. Hubby's boss calls that afternoon on a friendly visit and unsuspectingly wifie invites him to have a cup of coffee. They all drink and the real liquor has the usual effect. The boss makes love to his employe's wife and tries to kiss her and hubby throws him out the window. The result is that he loses his job, but when wifie explains her reason for doping the coffee it is the means for making him swear off and he vows never to drink again.

HER JOKE ON BELMONT (June 15).—Belmont is a flirt. He is riding around town on a bicycle. A doctor who has forgotten his bag, telephones his sister to bring it to him. This she does and Belmont seeing her and being smitten with her beauty, follows her. She notices him following her and is angry, but pays no attention to him. After delivering the bag to the doctor, she returns home. Belmont still following her and while looking admiringly at her is thrown from the bicycle and hurt. She enters the house and Belmont mistaking her for the doctor, goes in after her. She decided to play a joke on him and treats him. She tells him that he has a hole in his head and uses some red ink to prove it. She then shaves his hair off leaving it totally bald. She then pastes court plaster on his head in such a way that it spells the word "FOOL." She then chases him out and he goes home. Taking off his hat he sees the joke that has been played on him and he rushes back. There he is met by the young lady who laughs at him and by the doctor himself who having arrived home, also enjoys the joke. Belmont seeing that he can get no satisfaction, runs wildly from the house, bemoaning the loss of his hair and determining never to flirt again.

FRONTIER.

THE CALL OF THE ANGELUS (June 12).—Rafael and Pablo are so strongly attracted to Carmelita that each desires her to be his wife. Carmelita does not care to choose between them, for, while she likes each and has coquetted with each, she is not in love with either. The young men are prosperous ranchers and call frequently upon Carmelita, her mother being present at the calls to preserve the quaint southwestern proprieties. One day as Pablo comes from the house of Carmelita, he meets Rafael at the gate and their jealousies burst forth in a quarrel. Nothing serious comes of it at that time, but the seed has been implanted and later it bursts and grows.

The bitterest break comes when Rafael interferes with the laborers who are at work irrigating Pablo's fields. He holds that the water is his, not Pablo's, while the laborers believe just the opposite. Under the leadership of their majordomo they put up quite a pretty fight, in which Rafael is aided by a party of his own ranch laborers. Pablo learns of the fight and presses home a quarrel with Rafael, who to tell the truth, hardly needs to have it pressed home.

The young men agree to fight a duel and go to an open field behind a church for the purpose. There Rafael wounds Pablo; he is overcome with remorse and makes efforts to help the stricken man, but is met with curses. Pablo tells him that the angelus, which at that moment rings forth from the church, can never afterwards be heard without his thinking of the dying man on the field behind the church. Rafael is convinced that he has killed Pablo, and feels that he must flee the country to escape the penalty of his crime.

He is not content to leave Pablo alone, however, and stops at the church to leave a note summoning the priest to aid Pablo. The priest gets this and shortly starts for the field of honor. Before he gets there, however, Pablo has sufficiently recovered from the wound, which is not so serious as he had thought, to crawl away. He crawls to Carmelita's home and there the girl and mother take him in and the girl nurses him back to health.

While Pablo convalesces Rafael is far away, working on a cattle ranch. Daily he hears the angelus and daily the curse of the supposedly dying Pablo rings in his ears. Finally as he passes a roadside shrine one day he hears the call again. He stops and prays before the little shrine. As he prays there comes to him the solution of his troubles; he determines to return and confess his crime, standing the punishment and attaining forgiveness, if possible.

Along the weary road back to his home he walks and late that afternoon he stands again outside the church door where he left the note to the priest. He calls the padre and begins a confession. The good priest lets him tell the whole story, then he tells him that Pablo did not die from the wound inflicted in the duel, but that he is recovering at Carmelita's.

Thither go priest and repentant. There they find Pablo and Carmelita, whose feeling has ripened into love. Rafael asks and receives the forgiveness of Pablo, and as the angelus rings out again he joins the hands of the girl he loves with those of the man she loves and who also loves her, as behind them the priest recites a benison.

SINCERITY (June 13).—Jim, who thinks that his associates care for him only for his wealth, resolves to assume the appearance of poverty, and go into the country to search for sincerity. A poor girl, Gertrude, on the death of her mother. A confided to the care of an aunt, who treats her harshly and makes a menial of her. Jim goes to the aunt's farm and secures employment. He is deeply impressed by the beauty of Gertrude's character, and thinking he has found his ideal, proposes to her. The aunt forces Gertrude to reject Jim and discharges him. On leaving the farm Jim encounters a band of tramps, and, unobserved by them, overhears them plan to rob the aunt's house. He reaches the house in time to prevent the robbery. Touched by the bravery and devotion the aunt consents to Jim's marriage to Gertrude. So Jim finds his ideal, Gertrude is happy, and the aunt is astonished on learning that her niece is to marry a rich man.

THE SPRING IN THE DESERT (June 9).—Mona, a beautiful Indian girl, and daughter of the Chief, had given all her passionate love to Ortega, a brave. The old chief takes the attachment with stoic indifference. The young Indian couple are wrapped up in each other until the white man comes. Ortega and two warriors are hunting. They see the prairie schooner without the sign of life. They approach with Indian caution and find a man, a woman and a child lying within. The woman and child had gone to join their maker. The man has a spark of life left. They work over him and Ortega fetches water from the life saving spring. They take the man back to the Indian camp and nurse him back to life. Mona finds two books in the wagon and the man surprises Ortega and Mona pouring over them. Ortega is fascinated. The pictures of Eastern activity and invention fill his brain, and Mona's heart sinks and she tries to get rid of the man and the books. The man goes, grateful and somewhat amused, and the spirit of civilization having entered Ortega's soul, he follows and enters a college. Mona, even with his promise to return constantly in her mind, broods and her primitive hatred for the whites takes possession of her.

Ortega does well. His brain is abnormal, and in due time he writes a brilliant thesis. His roommate sees it and determines to make it his own. He and another youth plot and so arrange matters that Ortega is accused of theft. He hotly denies the charge, but seeing he is not believed, shakes off the white man's shackles and starts back to his tribe and Mona.

In the meantime, the girl's character has undergone a change and believing Ortega has gone from her life, awaits a chance to wreak her vengeance upon the whites. The squaws avoid her and even the medicine man is afraid of her. She often rides out alone with her faithful horse, and one day sees two prospectors taking a drink in the spring where the hated white man was revived. She gets her quiver of arrows and dips the arrowheads in rattlesnake poison, and going to the spring, contaminates the water with the arrowheads. She awaits some definite result and sees, with fiendish satisfaction, a man approach the spring garbed in the white man's apparel. He drinks, staggers and falls. She goes to gloat over her work and finds her lover, Ortega, dying. Turning, she sees her horse drinking from the fatal spring. The faithful animal falls beside her, and bereft of friends and reason, the wretched girl leans down, and smiling at the green water—drinks.

THE MAN WHO TRIED TO FORGET (June 11).—Richard, a young man of moderate means, is infatuated with the adventuress, Stella. The woman is the wife of Robert Kelton, a gambler, but Richard believes her to be a woman of beautiful, unsullied nature. He takes her home and introduces her to his mother, and eventually gives her a ring and other handsome pieces of jewelry, and proposing to her, is accepted.

Kelton is in hard luck. The cards will not run right for him, and he and Stella are up against it. He persuades her to call Richard up and get him to come to her and then to get all the money she can from him. She does this and he promises to come at once. Stella and Kelton clear the room of cigarettes and cards and put them quickly in the inner room.

Richard arrives and Kelton hides behind the curtains. Richard listens to Stella's tale of woe and makes out a check to her for a large amount. He kisses her impulsively and starts off. He remembers that he has forgotten his check book and goes back for it. He hears and sees Kelton and the woman he thought so much of gloating over his simplicity, and in mortification and anger he tears the check up and goes.

Thoroughly disillusioned, he goes West and engages in mining. Years pass and things are adjusting themselves, when a young fellow, Jim, stumbles upon Richard's cabin. He is all in. Richard takes him in and attends to his wants and persuades him to stay with him. They become great friends and Richard makes him a partner. Some months go by and Jim continues to write to that little girl he left behind him and to enjoy the society of his friend.

They take turns in going to town for provisions, and one day Jim's turn comes and he starts off. Arriving in town, he is attracted to a new gambling house. He enters and sees Stella and Kelton, who are running it. Stella quickly gets him in her toils and her new victim is well bled and takes the opportunity to take her for a ride and proposes to her.

Richard, who is worried about the lad, follows him to town and sees him with Stella. He follows them to the gambling house and when the game is in progress, steps in and denounces the couple. Jim goes with him, thoroughly broken up, but youth-like, he soon recovers. Richard persuades Jim to go back home to the girl, who receives him with open arms. The gamblers depart for fields anew and Robert lights his pipe and takes it all like a philosopher—even if a rather sad philosopher.

THE KNIGHT OF HER DREAMS (June 13).—Evelyn and Eddie are lovers, but her parents have other plans for her and refuse to consider Eddie, who is only a clerk in a hardware store, as a possible son-in-law. They make all arrangements for Evelyn to wed Si Quibs, a prosperous farmer. Finding Evelyn obdurate, her parents lock her in her room until the day of the wedding. Reading her favorite book, Evelyn falls asleep and dreams she is back, living in the days of knights and armor and such things. Eddie is, of course, in her dreams—a gallant knight, who hews down without hesitation all the guards and others who attempt to stop the rescue of his sweetheart.

Evelyn is awakened by being called to make ready for her wedding. Eddie tells his tale of woe to a sympathizing friend, and together they succeed in eloping with Evelyn. Eddie and his sweetheart find the minister out, but his wife hides the elopers until the irate parent and Si drive up in a buggy. When Father Brown and Si drive up to the minister's house searching for Evelyn, she and Eddie slip from the side of the house and climb hurriedly into the buggy and are away before their pursuers can overtake them. They meet the minister returning from the prayer meeting and a hurried but nevertheless very binding ceremony is performed.

WHEN LIGHT CAME BACK (2 parts, June 11).—Sam Scribner is caught making love to Muriel Hale, by her father, who is also Sam's employer. Sam is discharged. The lovers prepare to elope, but are discovered leaving Muriel's home by her father. Mr. Hale, thinking them to be burglars, draws his pistol. When he learns that it is Sam and Muriel he throws the pistol aside and grapples with Sam. The pistol, striking the floor, discharges and wounds Mr. Hale. He then demands Muriel's letters. Sam turns over his wallet and leaves. In the wallet is some money, and Mr. Hale throws the wallet and the money after him, but Sam does not stop for it.

Two tramps find the money and fight over it. One throws the other over an embankment to his death. Sam boards a train, determined to leave the city. The train is wrecked, Sam is injured and loses his memory. He is taken to a hospital and regarded as insane. Meanwhile, Mr. Hale discharges one of his servants. The body of the dead tramp is found and identified by the wallet found on him as Sam Scribner. The discharged servant informs the police that Scribner's suit-case can be found hidden under a couch in Hale's home. Hale is tried and sentenced to die for the murder of Scribner. Sam, in the hospital, reads a news account of Mr. Hale's approaching execution. His memory returns and he endeavors to leave the hospital on the instant. The guards interrupt him and he gives them a desperate battle. Without money he has a difficult journey, begging and stealing rides on motor cars. He arrives at the governor's office and finds Muriel there pleading for her father. The governor tries to get the death-house by telephone, but fails. The condemned man is about to be placed in the electric chair. The governor calls a motor and the three hasten to the prison, arriving just in time to save Mr. Hale's life. Mr. Hale, in gratitude, places his daughter's hand in Sam's and takes the young man back into his employ.

versions. A number of leghorns all of which have have world prizes are included. All this occurs in the famous Petaluma district.

The scene of action now switches to the Pasadena district, long noted for its tremendous chicken facilities. This district caters to Los Angeles and vicinity and makes enormous shipments eastward. The Anthony poultry plant is a model of its kind. Here we find the finest specimens extant, including barred plymouth rocks, buff orphingtons, partridge wyandottes, white wyandottes, buff wyandottes, white plymouth rocks, black minorcas, Rhode Island Reds, Light Brahmas, black Langshans, and many others. Other fowl comes in for consideration, too, and some delightful pictures were obtained of White Muscovy ducks, Burt's White Mammoth Pekin ducks, Mammoth Bronze turkeys, a prize-winning Golden pheasant, Chinese, Golden and Ring Neck pheasants, some varieties of Brahma cockerels and a numberless variety of other fowl. The picture winds up with "The Ultimate Consumer," two very happy darkies making the most of a fried chicken.

HEARTS AND HORSES (June 12).—Bessie received a note from Uncle Dan along with a pony and was more than delighted with the handsome gift. Her sweetheart, Bill Walters, grew quite peeved at the way in which Bessie forgot him for her horse.

Some days later Bessie's father, the sheriff, received a note that horse thieves were operating in his vicinity. He notified Bessie to watch carefully over her new pony and Bessie alert to the possibility, promptly rode to town to obtain a strong lock for the barn. She returned and handed it to Bill, asking him to attach it. But Bessie had been overseen by the horse thieves, who promptly laid plans to capture the horse. Bill, receiving the lock from Bessie, tucked it in his pocket and went into the corral to brood over her lack of interest in him. That night Bessie's horse was stolen. Bill, conscience-stricken, went to her father the sheriff and at his request was made a deputy. Then Bill started for the border.

The following day he crossed into Mexico and was present at a horse sale. He recognized Bessie's horse and bought it, tendering a check in payment. This the bandit refused to cash. Then Bill, having arranged with the local sheriff to have a strong posse on the American side of the border, asked him (the bandit) to come across to the American bank where he would cash the check. This the bandit agreed to do. On the American side, Bill pulled his gun and a bandit was caught—but only for just one moment. The secret band of thieves, lying close by, rushed upon the American. A fast fight and a long chase followed before the thieves were finally rounded up.

THE REWARD OF COURAGE (June 14).—Henry sat about the country club golf grounds and mooned with himself over a bad ankle. When Grace Wallace and her mother arrived, he was chagrined to note that Grace readily went off with Jim Wilde, whom Henry detested. Henry couldn't dance, but could sit so as to see Jim dance with her. In desperation, he finally asked her to go motoring with him. Grace gladly consented, Jim overheard and going ahead to the garage, destroyed Henry's carbureter. Henry caught him, just as he was leaving and a wrangle occurred. Later, Jim asked Grace to go canoeing with him and Grace, peeved at Henry's delay, consented. Just as they were stepping in the canoe, a messenger arrived with a telegram. Jim read it, frowned and tore it in half, tossing the pieces aside. It read "Come home or send money immediately. Your wife and child both very ill. Dr. Debbins."

An hour later, Henry hobbled down to the beach and found a portion of the telegram. He carefully tucked it away and after a hunt, found the other piece. Some time after that, moodily strolling along the beach, he saw Jim attempt to kiss Grace. Over went the canoe and in the struggle that followed, Jim repeatedly pushed Grace under the water that he might be saved. Forgetting his ankle, Henry sprang into the surf, rescued Grace and brought her safely to shore. He put her into Jim's car and at once they motored away, leaving a shivering and disconsolate would-be lover howling after them on the beach and threatening suit for running away with his car.

Two days later Henry called. Leaving Grace for a moment she affectionately put his coat to her lips when out fell a part of the telegram reading "your wife and child very ill, etc." Bessie cried for an hour. When Henry returned, he learned the cause and quickly discovered the other part of the envelope containing the address of James Wilde.

PETRONILLA WINS THE GREAT STEEPLECHASE (May 22).—When Petronilla finds her husband has been thrown in the great race, she refuses to give up and mounts the "favorite" herself, despite her rotund build, which allows her to tip the beam at well over two hundred pounds. It is a great race, with many obstacles, and there are dozens of screamingly funny situations. Petronilla sticks to the saddle, however, and finally she does come through a winner.

RIVERS OF INDO-CHINA (May 22).—In this travelogue subject, we have glimpses of the Far Orient. The very peculiar boats of China are shown, as well as the methods of handling freight, to and from the shore.

GONTRAN, APOSTLE OF PEACE (May 29).—Gontran believed in peace. In fact, he so strongly believed in it that he wanted to go out and make public speeches on the subject. When he made his first appearance as the "friend of man," he proved his sincerity by giving most of his belongings, such as watch, shoes, etc., to the various members of the crowd about. But before the meeting was over, there was a small riot, and the result was that our friend, Gontran, found himself buried under the debris of the broken platform, chairs, etc. It was a great mixup and a decided proof that all the people do not believe in peace. When Gontran finally reached his home, he decided that after all, what he would enjoy more than anything else, would be the peace and quiet of his own fireside. He made up his mind to allow the rest of the world to take care of itself.

GLIMPSES OF HAWAII (May 29).—This very interesting travelogue gives us some unusual and entertaining views in this island possession of Uncle Sam. We are shown through the city, glimpses are given of the big plantations which make the islands very valuable and various native types are studied at close range.

WILLY AND THE CAPTAIN'S HORSE (June 5).—Laura is pretty. She is also impatient. At her window, she glanced up and down the street to see if her handsome captain who was to take her for a horse-back ride could be seen. The children, playing in the street, noticed her impatience, and being well aware of the cause of it, they decided to play a good joke on her. The captain finally arrrived with the horses, and leaving a boy in charge of them, entered the house. While the captain was busy loving and caressing the young lady within, the boys on the outside were not idle, and Willy, the leader of the mischievous band, dug up a very clever idea. Seeing that the boy left to mind the horses had fallen asleep, Willy proceeded to replace the captain's horses with two wooden ones. Soon the young lady came out in her riding habit prepared to take a nice ride. Picture her amazement at seeing two dummy horses instead of the thoroughbreds she expected. She turned furiously upon the captain, suspecting him of playing the trick on her, and administered a good beating, driving him from her presence. Willy and the other children had a good laugh on the side.

A CHILD'S DAY (June 5).—When Lily was three she was certainly a sweet baby. She plainly showed her appreciation for the innocent joys which have been afforded her since her sojourn into this world. Awaking, there was an angelical smile on her pretty little face. Leaving her bed the lovely child, happily took her morning bath, and never losing an opportunity for amusement proceeded to organize a hunting and fishing party in her tub. It was now time to dress, so Lily donned her immaculate little garments, and went into the garden and gathered some of the beautiful flowers that grew there, afterwards arranging them artistically in beautiful vases. Having been occupied all day, our dainty little lady decided to prepare a copious lunch with which to build that hearty little body and prepare for more of her varied labors. At twilight, Lily, like the little birds, returned to her nest, and having prayed to Him, imploring His guardianship over her, she fell asleep.

GONTRAN, A SNAKE CHARMER (June 12).—Poor Gontran! Maltreated by his wife and worried sick by an irascible mother-in-law, he led a very miserable existence. Happening to see a young lady charming a serpent by the aid of the sweet strains of a flute, a bright idea entered his mind. If "music" charms serpents, why wouldn't it tame his mother-in-law? Inquiring of the young snake-charmer what method she employed to tame her serpent, and what melody she used, he went forth and purchased an enormous musical instrument. The experiment proved a grand success and at the conclusion of our story, the former nagging wife and the ferocious mother-in-law were completely subdued and Gontran reigned once more as master of his home.

GATHERING AND PREPARATION OF TEA IN INDO-CHINA (June 12).—The leaves are gathered four times a year, the tea prepared from the first or Spring gathering being the most delicate in color and flavor. The leaves are heated in drying pans, then rolled by hand on a wooden table, and at the end of three or four hours they are tossed about and beaten by the hand until they become soft. The two classes of tea, green and black, are each subdivided into a variety of kinds, known in commerce by particular names.

MAJESTIC.

THE FRATERNITY PIN (June 1).—The president of the fraternity in the girls' college was very pretty, and her family was rich, but the reason why she was the most popular girl in college was not the possession of wealth or good looks, but because she was instinctively the protector of the friendless.

There was one shy little country girl who regarded the college idol with mingled awe and admiration. She was timid and retiring, and her lot in college would have been a very lonely one if the fraternity's president had not taken pity on her. A firm friendship sprang up between the two. The college leader helped her protege with her studies and even was instrumental in securing the girl's election to the fraternity.

The country girl left college and married a rich man, who died a few years later, leaving her independently wealthy. The widow had many handsome jewels, but the one she prized most was a little gold pin, the emblem of her membership in the college fraternity. The pin was missing one day and the widow, thinking that she might have lost it in the street, telephoned to the police. Soon word came that the pin had been found and she hastened to the police station to claim it.

The lost pin was not hers, but it was the emblem of the same college fraternity. The woman who had been arrested when she attempted to pawn it, stood nearby in the custody of a policeman, her face averted. The widow, anxious to know who the owner of the pin could be, stepped forward and gazed into the prisoner's face. Their eyes met and the wealthy woman recognized in the unfortunate the college favorite of years gone by, the fraternity president who had been her friend. Misfortune had come upon her, her parents and fortune had been swept away, and she had failed in the battle of life.

The ragged woman and the lady of fashion left the station together, and the "most popular girl in college" found a home and loving care with her former protege. She was proud and did not want to accept any favors, but her protests were silenced by a loving kiss from her benefactress and a reminder that they were both sisters of the same fraternity and sworn to aid one another. And so the friendship which had begun in college ripened in after years into lasting love.

THE QUEEN OF THE SEA NYMPHS (June 3).—The young guest of the summer hotel decided that it would be easy to acquire a reputation as a hero. He did it through the aid of a poverty-stricken newspaper man who agreed to act as his press agent. In this way he became famous as a life-saver when the fact was, that he could hardly swim at all.

His ruse was so successful that all the young women admired him. Among them was a girl admired by a young college boy, who resented his boastful rival. And he vanquished him, too, through the aid of "The Queen of the Sea Nymphs."

Did you ever hear of this fairy creature? She demonstrated that the "hero" was very much overrated, as a life-saver, and made him such an object of mirth that he was driven from the hotel, leaving the field clear to the college boy.

When you see "The Queen of the Sea Hymphs," you will at once realize why it is a laughable disgrace to be beaten in a water race with her, even though one is not a life-saver.

THANHOUSER.

A VICTIM OF CIRCUMSTANCES (June 1).—He was a model of correctness and propriety, and when his daughter told him that she wanted to marry a young reporter, he at first refused his consent. Later he relented, but it must be admitted that he still had forebodings. They were fulfilled one day, for his son-in-law-to-be became, as he regarded it, notorious. The young man endeavored to interview one of the city's financial lights, was arrested for attempting to take the great man's portrait, and rival reporters wrote it up as a great joke. His explanations that he had been immediately set free were lost upon the prim old man, who declared that technically he was a jail bird, and that there was absolutely no excuse for any person to fall into the hands of the police.

One morning a few days later, the stern parent went out for a stroll. Around the corner galloped an excited individual, who thrust a watch and chain in his hand and then rushed off. The recipient started after him, and the next moment was pounced upon by several men who declared he was a daring pickpocket, who had been plying his trade on the streetcar. Explanations were laughed at, and the respected householder was marched to the station. There he was photographed for the Rogues' Gallery, inspected by masked detectives, and underwent all the trials and privations of the third degree. Fortunately for him the reporter dropped into the station, and curiosity lead him to request an interview with "the daring pickpocket." The meeting was a shock to both of them, but the prisoner speedily found the advantage of having a newspaper man in his family. His explanations were listened to, the real criminal was speedily captured and the respectable citizen set at liberty with profuse apologies. He had learned his lesson, however, and withdrew all opposition to his daughter's marriage, telling the young couple that he now knew that even the most innocent man may be a victim of circumstances.

THE RUNAWAY (June 3).—The average youngster, who lives in a comfortable home with a father and mother ready to gratify every wish, is far differently situated from little boys whose home is an orphan asylum, where they are cared for with scores of others, and are promptly disciplined for any infraction of the rules.

The authorities of some institutions are very kind to their young charges, but the superintendent of a certain little country orphanage was a very penurious man, and the children confided to his care were badly cared for and frequently punished when they did not deserve it. One of the children, a manly little boy, resented the harsh treatment he received and escaped from the asylum. A traveling peddler took a liking to the child and the boy became his companion on his wanderings.

The boy was the grandson of a wealthy farmer, his mother having made an unfortunate marriage and left her parents' roof many years before. Soon after the child disappeared from the asylum, the grandparents received word that their daughter, from whom they had never heard, had died and that her little son was in the country asylum. The grandparents hastened to the asylum, warmly thanked the superintendent for his care of the child and told him that they intended to reward him handsomely for the care of their grandson. The superintendent was avaricious. He knew that the old couple had never seen the boy, so he brought another of his little charges to them and persuaded the grandparents that he was their daughter's son. The rejoicing couple took the boy to their home.

One day, the little "grandson" strayed away from the farmhouse and started to investigate the well. He leaned over too far and fell in. The child undoubtedly would have been drowned if a boy who was driving by on a peddler's wagon had not come to the rescue. He dropped down the well, lifted the dripping little boy from the water, and the farmer, who had arrived on the scene, turned the windlass until both children were drawn up to safety. The amazement and the joy of the grandparents was great when they found that the manly little stranger was their own grandchild. As for the other little fellow, they had learned to care for him so much that he became the other boy's little brother. Both boys lived happily on the farm and soon forgot that they had ever been inmates of an asylum.

THE CAGED BIRD (June 6).—The beautiful young princess was weary of the formality and ceremony that encompassed her. She had read many books and from them had gained the idea that she would be far happier as a simple peasant than as the daughter of a king. Even when it came to her marriage, she sadly reflected, there was no romance, for her father had arbitrarily contracted an alliance for her with a neighboring prince.

The princess was taking her drive one day and was sadder than ever. She saw a wedding procession issue from a neighboring cottage, and pityingly watched the mother of the bride, as she turned into her lonely house. In a field the princess noticed a young farmer, and she thought that the romance which had been denied her might come into her life. By the time she had returned to the castle she was pitying herself exceedingly, and had decided to be a caged bird no longer.

The princess secured a peasant's gown, and, well supplied with money, stole away from the palace, as she thought, forever. Before going she opened the cage of her pet canary and watched him fly away happy at his new found liberty.

In the life outside the castle the princess found she was handicapped by her ignorance. She gave alms to a crippled man, and he scandalized the community by spending it in riotous living. She met the young farmer and he horrified her by roughly kissing her. She procured a home with the mother of the bride and her money was stolen by that depraved old woman. Disillusioned, the princess returned to her castle. Just outside its gates she came upon the little bird she had set at liberty. It, too, had found itself unfitted for an adventurous life. Strange, fierce birds had attacked it, and the little canary was feebly trying to return to the castle, when its mistress came along.

The bird was glad to be placed in its gilded cage again. The princess was glad to return to her old life, marry the prince, who was really a very decent young chap, and retain the place which her birth and breeding entitled her to fill.

RELIANCE.

ITALIAN LOVE (June 2).—Rosa, the belle of Little Italy, is beloved by Luigi, a bootblack. But her heart is with Antonio, in Italy, to whom she sends enough money to bring him to America. When Antonio comes, instead of being faithful to Rosa, he spends most of his time in the wine shops of the quarter. One day Rosa finds him flirting with another girl. This so angers her that she turns on him and refuses to have anything more to do with him.

He comes to explain, but she will not relent. Seeing Luigi's faithfulness, she accepts him. They are married and live happily for a time. Then one day, Rosa loses a locket bearing her picture, and Antonio finds it. In a wine shop he shows it to Luigi, claiming Rosa gave it to him. There is a quarrel and arrangements are made for a duel. Rosa hears of this, and, with her father and a policeman, arrives in time to prevent the fight. As Luigi turns to Rosa, Antonio makes a lunge at him, but Rosa throws herself in front of her husband, receiving the knife thrust into her arm. Antonio is taken into custody and Luigi attends to his wife, who isn't so very badly hurt. Her explanation about the locket wipes out the faintest suspicion from his heart and all is peace again.

FAITHFUL SHEP (June 4).—When Runa's big sister marries, she takes the little girl with her to the new home. Things go on smoothly for a time, but later, big sister and her husband are entertaining a great deal, and give a great many parties, and so, in consequence, haven't much time for Runa, who, left to the maid's care, feels rather neglected.

One day she runs away and is lost in the woods. Shep her faithful pet, follows and finds her unable to get up, as she has sprained her ankle. He hurries home, and although he barks loudly, no one heeds him—for all are out searching for the lost child. He manages to get into the harness of his little cart and drags it out to the child. She lifts herself into it and Shep takes her home.

That night, when dog and child kneel down to say their prayers, big sister is there to hear them and to assure the little girl that she is not in the way, but a very necessary part of the little household.

THE MADCAP OF THE HILLS (June 7).—Tess and Nell live with their father in a little cabin in the hills. Phil Carey, a mountaineer, is in love with Tess, who returns his affection, but delights in teasing him. Kingston Ford, a handsome stranger, comes to the hills to hunt, and overtaken by a storm in the woods, asks shelter at the cabin. Tess immediately loses her heart to the stranger, and he, tempted with the chance of flirtation with a pretty girl, makes ardent love to her. She believes his intentions to be honest and neglects Phil, her true sweetheart. But the sweet, serious face of Nell, the elder sister, attracts his fickle fancy also, and, one day, finding her asleep in a leafy bower, he plays the part of Prince Charming and stoops over and kisses her. Nell is fascinated by his manner, and allows him to caress her. Tess happens upon the tryst and is heart-broken at his perfidy. The lover, happening along, also sees the two together, and in a rage, confronts the stranger, accusing him of abusing the girl's hospitality in a despicable way. He raises his gun to shoot, but the agile young Easterner quickly disarms him and he is hurled to the ground, his head hitting a sharp rock. He is unconscious. Believing him dead, Ford becomes terrified, and while Nell goes for help, he flees to the woods. At the cabin he comes upon Tess weeping. Terrified at his own danger, he gives no thought to her tears, but gives her an account of the quarrel and then asks her to save him. In the meantime, Nell finds the sheriff and her father and they start out to find Ford. They first restore Phil to consciousness and then in rage go after the stranger. Tess at first refuses to help him, but the sight of the approaching posse and her lover's plight soften her and she hides him. When the men arrive she acts in an unconcerned manner, and feigns surprise at the news of Phil's being wounded. They ask her whether she has seen Ford and she says no. They depart. Tess then liberates her lover, and when he tries to embrace her, she bids him go, having given him some of her father's clothes in which to escape. He changes them under a tree in the woods. A few weeks later, Tess comes upon them, and taking them up, she accidentally drops a letter out from his coat and her curiosity overcoming her, she picks it up and reads it. It is a letter from another girl, begging him to return to her. She then realizes the baseness of the man, and, thoroughly disgusted at the thought of him, she takes the clothes and walks to the stream to throw them into the water. Phil, now entirely recovered from his wound, had followed her and has seen all that has happened. He thinks she has gone to the water to end it all, and rushes after her to save her. He begs her not to take her life, and she laughingly reassures him that she hadn't intended to do anything of the sort. Phil's love overcoming him, he cannot resist, and again declares his love for her. And Tess now willingly accepts the man who has so truly loved her.

AN INDIAN'S GRATITUDE (June 11).—The Sioux Indian chief and his daughter, Starlight, trick the Cheyenne brave into believing that Starlight will marry him, and her father gets a herd of ponies. Protesting against the injustice, Swiftwind is attacked by the Sioux, and thrown over a precipice, but is saved from death by the arrival of Lieut. Randall, who carries the Indian to the fort and sees that he is restored to health.

Swiftwind is very grateful. Later, his tribe attacks the Sioux, and annihilate them in a thrilling hand to hand fight. Intoxicated with their success, the Indians attack a stage coach, in which is Lieut. Randall's fiancee, coming from the east to marry him. A sharp battle takes place, in which the stage escort is killed or driven away, and Martha becomes a prisoner. Swiftwind recognizes a picture of Lieut. Randall in a locket she is wearing, and tries to save her, carrying her in his arms to a place of safety. Randall, who has been knocked unconscious, recovers his senses and sees the redskin with Martha in his arms. Taking careful aim with his revolver he brings the Indian down, and is horrified when he learns the true situation. The soldiers arrive and Swiftwind is taken to the fort, where he dies in an affecting scene, freely forgiving Lieut. Randall.

THE BOOMERANG (3 parts—June 13).—Virginia Chester visits her Aunt Betty, who resides near an army post. Lieut. Calhoun falls in love with Virginia, and after a whirlwind courtship persuades her to marry him secretly. Helen Brassey, the daughter of the Colonel, is in love with Calhoun, and gets her father to help her win the lieutenant's affections.

The Colonel holds out glowing pictures of promotion and a great future, and regrets his mariage to Virginia. She has managed to conceal her marriage from her father, extending her visit upon various excuses, and Aunt Betty aids her in the concealment. The birth of a boy makes her secret marriage a serious consideration, and she telegraphs Calhoun to come to her, he having been removed to a distant post. He wires back advising her to get a divorce, and the shock kills her.

Aunt Betty raises the child and sends it to a military school, giving it her name. Twenty years elapse, and the youth is a graduate of a military academy. On her death-bed Aunt Betty tells him the story of his birth, and John burns with a desire to avenge his mother. The war breaks out and he secures a lieutenancy under Calhoun, now a general. On the eve of a great battle, John keeps the southern army advised of every move made by the northern officers, by means of a telegraph wire he has tapped, and the northern army is completely outwitted and ambushed. The confederates win a glorious victory, and capture General Calhoun. Colonel Chester, Virginia's father, releases Calhoun, and forces him to fight a duel, in which Calhoun is killed. The meeting between General Calhoun, his son and Colonel Chester is one of the most dramatic situations ever seen in moving pictures.

THE HANSOM DRIVER (June 9).—Mabel's husband is a hansom cab driver. After a quarrel Mabel imagines herself neglected, and listens to the honeyed words of a tempter, and finally agrees to elope with him. A boy is sent for a cab, and the innocent youth calls the husband. The vehicle drives up and the couple run into it, their identity unnoticed by the driver, and they, absorbed in each other, not noting the man on the seat. Hubby glances into the mirror reflecting the interior of the cab, and the fun starts. A comical fight takes place between the two men, and the would-be home breaker is soundly thrashed, and penitent Mabel is taken back to her husband's arms.

THE SPEED QUEEN (June 12).—Nellie's father is a judge, afflicted with a species of St. Vitus dance. When he feels an attack coming on he takes a dose of medicine which always brings relief. One day he forgets the medicine, and feeling the attack coming on he sends Mabel home for the medicine. She jumps into her auto and drives like the wind, pursued by two bicycle cops. One of the cops is a rejected suitor, and he hopes to catch her and arrest her, for spite. The other cop is the accepted lover, and he rides to save her. Amusing situations are shown, while the trio are riding at terrific speed. Mabel is arrested, but is released upon the plea of her sweetheart.

the men in the district is stricken with cholera. He is brought into the hospital, which is then isolated. There is a wireless installation in the building, and the doctor soon learns that the disease is rapidly spreading. Naturally anxious as to the safety of his daughters he willing accepts the offer of two officers, who are about to proceed into the interior to experiment with wireless telegraphy, to take charge of the girls, who will thus be removed from chance of infection. The caravan starts on its journey and reaches its destination in safety, and the doctor is glad to receive a message that every one is in good health. But alas! the germ of the disease was lying dormant, and the younger of the officers is soon dangerously ill. Captain Dancy, the leader of the expedition, implores the girls to leave for home, in charge of his solitary white man servant, but they refuse, preferring to stop and nurse the sick man. Very soon Captain Dancy is also stricken, and the two girls have their hands fully occupied in nursing the sufferers. Mary, the elder of the two girls, has learned the Morse Code, and communicates the sad news that both the officers are at death's door. This terrible news, is, however, destined to be followed by still graver. A man-eater, attracted by the signs of human beings in the neighborhood, makes an assault on the little party. The girls and the devoted man-servant fire upon the beast repeatedly, but do not succeed in seriously injuring him. Whilst the man-servant is keeping the ferocious animals at bay, Mary wires to the hospital that death is staring them in the face, for soon their last cartridge will be spent. A messenger is dispatched by the agonized father. But alas! he falls into the hands of the bandits, and it is only after passing through a terrible experience, that he is able to free himself from their clutches. He arrives on the scene just as the lion is springing on his defenseless prey, and with unerring aim he is able to stretch the savage beast in the dust. Turning his attention to the suffering men in the tent, he injects a life giving serum in their forearms, and we have little doubt that they will thus be snatched from the jaws of death.

GAUMONT.

THE LIGHT THAT KILLS (May 27).—Mrs. Smithson, a widow, takes a strong interest in Dr. Louis Jordan, whose application of electric rays discovered by him have been successful. Though Jordan has achieved many cures by his "A" rays, he has been attacked by the powerful penetration and his left hand has already begun to wither. As no one else can apply the treatment with the same safety that his own expert knowledge commands, the scientist continues his labors with heroic sacrifice.

Mrs. Smithson acknowledges her love for the scientist. She suggests that others should continue his practice, that he should spend the rest of his life in health and happiness. Feeling that life holds something sweeter for him, Louis Jordan makes over the plan of his work to his pupils, preparatory to his departure to a warmer climate.

As he is about to join Mrs. Smithson, a poor woman implores him to treat her son, who has been given up as a hopeless case. Failing to persuade her that his pupil can effect the great cure, the master undertakes the operation himself, knowing well that the rays which saved in one case are fatal to himself. He realizes that to abandon his work for the sake of his own personal happiness is to be false to science, and is an indication of weakness.

When the operation is over, he writes to Mrs. Smithson, asking her to forgive him for not seeing her again. The professor expresses that it will be an ample reward, if, when she returns next summer, she will drop flowers in the places he used to love.

Within the year the professor has gone the way of the heroes who sacrifice their lives in saving their fellow-creatures. When the woman he loved returns to the scene of his labors, she learns that his noble spirit has been inherited by his favorite pupil, who takes the blooms she brings and puts them in the "places he used to love."

A PROBLEM IN REDUCTION (May 29).—Leander is worried about his appearance. He fears that if he continues to grow east and west and back and forth, that he will resemble a crowd. When he has his picture taken, he is charged for a group. He hears of an institute where they guarantee to triumph over triple chins, bay windows and slipped chests. One can lose almost any part of yourself here, including part of your bank roll.

Leander's mysterious absences caused his wife, Lulu, to become jealous. She searches for evidence. She receives a telegram from him, saying that he can't come home for dinner that night as he will have a business engagement. She finds in his desk a letter, signed "Madame Camille." It reads that she will be delighted to see him and that she is always home at dinner time.

Lulu goes to the address marked on the letter. On being admitted, she sees her husband's hat, cane and overcoat on the rack. She is told by the maid that Madame Camille is now attending to a "gentleman" and is asked that she wait her turn. Lulu persuades the maid to show her into the finishing room, wherein Leander is losing part of his personality. She is convulsed with laughter as she watches the masseur reduce the avoirdupois of his ample dimensions. Whereupon jealousy vanishes and 75 per cent. of Leander returns to his 100 per cent. of Lulu.

WHERE IS DOGGIE? (June 7).—Sam is a stout, jolly old soul and his friend Billy is equally good natured. Sam's wife is the proud possessor of a bull pup, which, by way of variety she has christened Doggie. A crayon portrait of the latter adorns the wall of the dining room and Doggie is permitted, against Sam's protest to partake of his meals at the family table. Doggie, however, tires of the attentions that are being showered upon him by his mistress and takes advantage of the first opportunity to go out on a tour of exploration. Sam and Billy are commissioned to find him and return him to the family fold and much against their will they set forth. They meet several friends and for the time being, the dog is forgotten and when they resume their quest, they are jollier than ever under the influence of the good things of which they have partaken. They encounter dogs of all sorts and breeds and attempt to capture them and, of course, get themselves into trouble with the owners of the animals. There are many encounters and in the end the friends become separated, each chasing a different dog. Sam returns to his home with a blackened eye and badly ruffled. He finds his good wife asleep in a chair and removes his shoes in order to make his way unheard to his bedroom. This, he succeeds in doing, and he falls asleep and dreams of dogs galore. In the meantime, his friend Billy has captured Doggie and the last we see of him is when Sam's wife and Billy carefully place the pup on the bed with the slumbering dog hunter. It is left to the imagination what his feelings are when he awakes.

MATRIMONY'S SPEED LIMIT (June 11).—Billy Brown is a broker. He has lost his fortune and is ruined. He decides to break off his coming marriage to his wealthy sweetheart. She offers him money; he refuses; she returns him his engagement ring. Billy leaves; she is heart-broken. Suddenly she thinks of an idea to make Billy marry her and recuperate his fortune. She sends him the following telegram:

"Your aunt died out West, leaving you a fortune, providing you are married by 12 o'clock on Wednesday, June 18th. CLAY LAMBERT, Attorney-at-law."

Billy turns to look at the large clock and finds it is 15 minutes to 12. It is Wednesday, June 18. He has only 15 minutes to marry or lose a fortune. He dashes away after looking at his watch. In the meantime, his sweetheart has gone to a clergyman's house, and they get into an auto and speed away to Billy's office, only to find, when arriving there, he has left. Billy, in the meantime, meets a lady acquaintance, drops on his knees and starts proposing to her. She runs away. He has five minutes to get married. He rushes down the street, looking for a woman. Billy's sweetheart is shown after coming from his office in her auto jumping up and down, urging the chauffeur to speed faster to find Billy. Billy sees a veiled woman on the street and starts to propose. She lifts her veil, showing her to be a negro. He decides he can't get married by 12 and win the fortune, and so will commit suicide. He gets in middle of street, and auto is coming in his path, he turns his back and waits. The auto stops against him, he turns, and his sweetheart and clergyman are in it. He dashes to auto, gets in, shows telegram. They are married, one minute to 12. His sweetheart confesses she sent the telegram. Billy at first is angry, but finally gives in to a happy ending.

HER MOTHER'S PICTURE (June 13).—Joseph Bleeker, a hardy, honest, rural type, lives with his daughter in a home made rather unhappy by the absence of a mother. The death of Mrs. Bleeker has made her husband downcast in spirit and all his daughter's attempts to liven him up are unavailing. About the picture of his wife, which is prominently hung in the centre of the living room wall, crystallize all his thoughts and dreams. In some intangible way, this picture guides the destiny of the family. This is forcibly illustrated by a little love affair of his daughter, Marian, who elopes with a metropolitan actor. She comes back after she is deserted, and only the spirit of the picture of her mother, prevents her unforgiving father from turning her away.

KINEMACOLOR.

PARSON JIM'S BABY (2 parts).—When Parson Jim invaded Hoot Owl, Ariz., he found the saloon and dance hall the principal industries. Starting a revival in the latter place, he rouses a spark of religion lying dormant in the breast of Molly Brandon, wife of the "bad man" of the camp. When he is driven out and Molly follows him like a dutiful wife; she leaves her little daughter in the care of one good Parson Jim.

With the little girl, the Parson starts proselyting until finally, after fifteen years, he has driven out his bitterest rival, the rum-seller, and converted the dance hall into a church. There the whole reclaimed community of Hoot Owls gathers for worship—not noting the worn and weary woman who slips into a rear pew.

But after benediction, while Parson Jim is bidding "goodnight" to his happy parishoners, the organ in the suposedly empty church begins playing "Lead, Kindly Light." Recalling that only one person in camp knew that hymn when he started his revival fifteen years before, Parson Jim returns to find that his "lost sheep has returned to the fold."

Judge of the rejoicing when the long-lost mother clasps "Parson Jim's Baby" in her arms, and the concluding picture shows her final resting place in the "God's Acre" which has replaced the "Bad Man's burying ground."

ICE SKATING AT MURREN, SWITZERLAND.—Skaters will be especially interested in this film which shows society assembled at Murren for the winter sports, including Mrs. Asquith, the wife of the prime minister of the United Kingdom, and her children. In the opening picture a snow plough is seen clearing the ice ready for the skaters. The skaters adjust their skates and an exhibition of the art is given. Mrs. Asquith and her son take a ride in a chair, fitted with runners, and then we see the two children skating. Curious displays of fancy skating are then given. A long line of people skate hand in hand, two people waltz, and two children in fancy customes give a sprightly display.

TOBOGGANING IN SWITZERLAND.—This is an exhilarating picture of the sport of tobogganing as practiced on the mountain slopes in Switzerland. In the opening scenes those taking part in the sport are journeying by funicular railway as far as that curious means will take them: the rest of the journey is made on foot. One of the first parties to make the descent has labelled itself "Rag-Time," a concession to the mountain craze. The toboggans dash past the camera at high speed, being kept to the track by the banks of snow which line the course.

The J. H. Genter Co.: Lumberton, Miss., May 20, 1913.

I purchased a Mirroroide Screen some time ago, and I wish to state it is half the battle won in the picture game, as my pictures are as bright and clear with all softness of color and perspective as one could wish. At first my patrons asked me why the exchange made such quick improvement in quality of film. I gladly explained, "It is all in the curtain." I am glad I got wise and am saving money by installing Mirroroide. It's a wonder. I am more than pleased to recommend same to all exhibitors.

A G-E Rectifier Will Advertise Your Theater

A G-E Rectifier in operation in front of the entrance of a moving picture theater is an excellent advertisement. Any mechanical device in operation attracts attention, and the peculiar greenish blue light given off by the rectifier is noticeable even on the most brilliantly lighted streets. In addition, the presence of the rectifier indicates to those who are well informed that the pictures will be projected by the most modern method, and therefore they will be of maximum brilliancy.

The G-E Rectifier not only advertises the theater and improves the projection of the pictures, but it also reduces the expense of operating the lamp by eliminating rheostat losses.

Write our nearest office for booklet B-3107 explaining the operation and advantages of the rectifier.

Our Ticket Chopper is the Best Protection in the World. In Fact, It's a Necessity Wherever Tickets Are Sold.

DISHONEST Ticket Sellers and Ticket Takers HAVE NO CHANCE when our chopper is used, as all tickets dropped into it are cancelled or cut up by a turn of the side wheel, so that they cannot be sold again. Tickets, however, are not mutilated so badly that the numbers cannot be read.

The Chopper is a protection also to honest ticket men. It removes temptation. Equipped with a foot lever instead of wheel if desired.

In construction, the mechanism is simple, strong and accurate. The chopping rollers are of best tool steel, die-cut, and never fail to work properly.

This chopper will permit the door-keeper to handle fully 50 per cent. more patrons than is possible with old system of taking by hand.

Finish: Cabinet is of finest golden quartered oak, mission or mahogany, highly polished, and trimmings are of metal, finished in colored enamel, baked by special process, which retains its brilliancy, or, if desired, all metal parts heavily nickel plated. Glass is best polished French plate, quarter inch thick. Size: 46x12x12 inches. Weight (boxed) 150 lbs.

TERMS: F. O B. our offices, one-third with order, balance on arrival.

PRICE: Chopper $50. Foot Lever (extra) $10. Nickel Trimmings (extra) $5.00

Which Would YOU Rather Pay?

This man is on a 220 volt circuit and as his moving picture lamp only requires 35 volts at the arc, he formerly used a rheostat to reduce the voltage. In this way he paid for about 3 times as much "juice" as he actually needed.

Then he figured he needed this money more than the Lighting Company and he bought a

FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

Now he gets a clearer, whiter, more intense unflickering light and his bills are only about 1/3 what they were before. The machine has three adjustments and the circuit can not break for even an instant in passing from one to another. No delays, no bother, no waste, no danger, no heat.

Send today for our 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat." It tells you how you can get a much better light at 1/3 your present cost.

That's What They All Say

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, Newburgh, May 22, 1913.
36 East 23rd St., New York.

Dear Sir:

I thought it might interest you to know that we did not get your A.C. to D.C. Economizer connected until 5:00 P. M. yesterday and, therefore, did not have any opportunity of testing it out before the performance, but when the current was turned on everything worked to perfection, and the results were more than satisfactory. It made the Kinemacolor pictures remarkably clear and steady.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) F. M. TAYLOR, Mgr. Academy of Music.

I have equipped more complete motion picture theatres in the United States than any other individual—Exhibitors have paid me retainers to act as their consulting and advisory Engineer to prepare plans and specifications for new theatres and for reconstruction and improvement of projection, lighting, ventilation, seating, etc., in old theatres. Why do exhibitors pay me for advice? Why do exhibitors place their orders with me for complete equipments? Because I have had more experience than anyone else in working out the intricate problems of projection with special reference to perfect illumination. You know that your picture is your whole show. I know how to make that picture stand out on your screen clear, bold, brilliant and lifelike. It requires experience to do this. I am at your service. I have hundreds of letters like this:

J. H. Hallberg, Oakland, Cal., May 16, 1913.
36 East 23rd St., New York.

Dear Sir:

We are about to open our own circuit of houses and want the latest and best of everything in each one of them.

Hallberg's name attached to anything is an approval amounting to almost a guarantee, hence our interest in your output.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) KEHRLEIN KINEMA CIRCUIT,
Per Oliver Kehrlein.

They Have Confidence in HALLBERG

I want to help you, Mr. Exhibitor, to improve your picture or to equip your new theatre. My price is no more than that of any other reliable distributor, and I am sure that my experience and advice, which is free to my customers, is worth many dollars and is of more value than confidential, special, would-be discounts, cut prices, etc., used by some of my competitors in pulling unwary exhibitors into their fold.

Everybody Is Putting in the "HALLBERG" A. C. to D. C. ECONOMIZER

It gives the best light in the world for picture projection. Is made in all sizes for all conditions—ASK ABOUT IT.

"Carmen"

Three-Reel Thanhouser.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

sion of this much produced story f those preceding it, but I een

I should have given her part to a girl who flashed on the scene for a brief instant and filled the screen while she was there although she was only one of a group. I took the trouble to inquire about this member of the company who only came into view for a second and learned that her name was, and still is, "Billings." She will probably remedy that fault before she cuts all of her teeth, for she has what I am compelled to designate, for the lack of a better expression, "Picture Personality," a valuable asset for a photoplayer.

See the Girl the Critic Discovered for New Majestic!

Louis Reeves Harrison, who gave limelight to the "Biograph Girl" and other film notables before all other critics, spoke so glowingly of FRANCELIA BILLINGTON that we signed her quick for New Majestic. See her in "THE FRATERNITY PIN" (date below) and see what a ten-strike we made. See ANN DREW in that picture, too. You'll just adore the Majestic Girls!

It's Two Mighty Good New-Majestics We're Handing You!

The first story we call "THE FRATERNITY PIN," and release Sunday, June 1. The second is "THE QUEEN OF THE SEA NYMPHS," released Tuesday, June 3. You'll get BOTH, of course!

We meant every word we said in last week's big bold ad. We DO want your opinions! If "FRATERNITY PIN" isn't as good as we think it is, "KICK" TO US. Or, if you like it, TELL US WHY. If you don't like "QUEEN OF THE SEA NYMPHS," kick on THAT. If it appeals, give us the reasons. We are doing our mightiest to make the very best pictures in the entire Mutual list. We can only succeed by KNOWING FROM YOU how our work is progressing. There is no use for us to strike a "right line" of subject, UNLESS YOU TELL US WE'VE STRUCK IT. And by the same method of KNOWING FROM YOU we can keep dead away from the "wrong line" of subject—the subject that doesn't tend to INCREASE the attendance at your house.

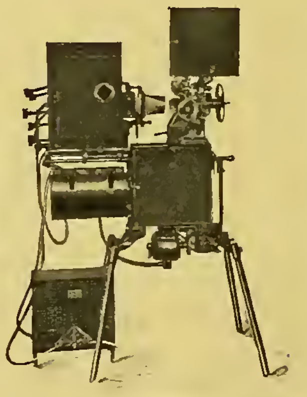
It is an important exclusive feature found only in

POWER'S
Cameragraph No. 6A



THIS exclusive patented device places POWER'S in a class by itself. By its means, the machine becomes automatic in its adjustment and maintenance of the lower loop, which instantly reforms itself without stopping machine.

¶ It prevents film breakage, keeps film always in motion, and does away with interrupted pictures and a dark screen.

¶ All this at very slight additional cost.

¶ In ordering, please state if loop setter is desired.

¶ If motor drive is desired, we have IT. No more trouble with variable speed motors. Our motors are constant speed; control is mechanical and of wide range; operation is simple, effective. THIS DESERVES SPECIAL ATTENTION.

Our sales represent over sixty-five per cent. of the entire moving picture machine output of the Western Hemisphere

No film concern on earth has gone into the feature production business on such a tremendous, wholesale scale as the Universal! Put that in your pipe!

Universal features are NOT PADDED. We are constantly cutting three-reelers down to two reels; and two-reelers down to one reel, in order to give you quick, sharp, snappy features, bristling with action. Our stories and titles are the strongest money can buy. There is no attempt to skimp or save on productions. Money is lavished on them to give you the best features in the world.

And each feature is accompanied by the necessary variety of stunning posters—enough to plaster your whole house-front if you like. If you're not getting Universal features, you're missing the biggest hits in the business. Go to your nearest Universal exchange and make immediate arrangements to book the Universal program. The California Film Exchange Announces Its Universal Contract!

Statement by M. L. Markowitz to Exhibitors of the Far West:--"After making seven special trips from California to New York, I have at last got what I was after—a two year contract with the Universal Film Mfg. Co., giving me exclusive right to the famous Universal Program in CALIFORNIA and NEVADA and also the right to furnish theatres with this splendid program in ARIZONA. I am going to give western exhibitors the greatest film service in America. I have had an advance view of the big features and single reels to be released by the Universal during the next few weeks and I say, without the danger of contradiction, they are the finest pictures in the history of the business. Remember, the California Film Exchange now has an EXCLUSIVE contract with the Universal and it is a case of FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED! I will buy enough reels to handle all the business you see fit to give me!

CRITICS SAY:

KELLY From the EMERALD ISLE

with the Popular BARNEY GILMORE is full of thrill and punch

Moving Picture World says:

All the sensational feats will make the audience wonder how the players dared risk their lives. All the characters (always excepting the villains) will make a strong appeal. The bluff, good natured bigness of Barney Gilmore, himself, is full of suggestion of an honest, true heart in his brawny chest. It is just the big arms of him that will fit around the neck of a pretty colleen, like Sheilah. And Sheilah, too, with her black curls and pretty, coy ways, fits into the story with distinct charm. The gallery will be attracted by her. The photography is excellent throughout.

The Morning Telegraph says:

Barney Gilmore, with his pleasing personality as Gerald Kelly, a rollicking, care-free Irish lad, dominates this film completely and the result is very pleasing. Film personality is far rarer than stage personality, but Mr. Gilmore's buoyant self fairly radiates from the screen. Blanche Cornwall makes a very entrancing little Sheilah MacGuire, Kelly's sweetheart, while Joseph Levering is the villainous Doolin, Kelly's would-be Nemesis.

Good "bits" are frequent. A balky donkey is made to drag a go-cart in the right direction by hitching him in the shafts wrong-end-to. Then Kelly goes down a rope over precipitous cliffs, about 80 feet high, with his sweetheart hanging on his neck.

The biggest "punch" comes in the scene where Kelly is bound to a railroad track in front of an oncoming train. With a mighty effort he clears himself of his bonds, leaps on the cowcatcher as it hangs over him and lies there kicking, but safe, as the train rushes past. Either this is a great piece of cutting, back-away stuff, or Barney took an awful chance with his life. Whatever it is, it is scary enough on the screen to suit anybody.

"In motion pictures of wild life there is a great temptation to fake, and the sharpest discrimination must be employed in order to tell the genuine from the spurious. My attention was particularly directed toward Mr. Kearton's work because of its absolute honesty. "UNWRITTEN LAW OF THE WEST"

"ALONE IN THE JUNGLE"

"THE RIVAL ENGINEERS"

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

SCHEDULE OF MULTIPLE-REEL FEATURES

"ALONE IN THE JUNGLE"

Selig drama in two reels—Released Saturday, June 14, 1913.

A story of love and daring in the jungle of tropical South Africa. The introduction of a lion hunt is an incident of the story, second only as a thrill to the attack on a young girl by a beast crazed from a bullet wound. Real lions—none of your "prop" animals—are used. A film that will make your patrons hold onto their seats right up to the finish.

"THE RIVAL ENGINEERS"

Cines-Kleine drama in two reels—Released Monday, June 16, 1913.

This tale of the rails involves two engineers, one a surly chap, Stanley Novelli, and the other, Jean Galetti, a "hail fellow, well met." Stanley plots Jean's death and nearly brings it about. The latter, running an engine the brakes of which have been "fixed" by Stanley, runs down a gang of workmen. Jean is imprisoned, but later is released and re-united with his family, while Stanley meets the tragic death of a suicide.

"THE WEAKER MIND"

Lubin drama in two reels—Released Wednesday, June 18, 1913.

Another story involving two engineers, but this time in a different way. One is addicted to drink. The other attempts to save him from ruin, and eventually is successful. Bob Glore, "the weaker mind," fascinated by the wiles of Reina Loeb, a drunkard's daughter, sinks deeper and deeper into the mire of dissipation, but the influence of his friend is strong enough to bring him back to the path of right living. A story with a strong moral.

"A BROTHER'S LOYALTY"

Essanay drama in two reels—Released Friday, June 20, 1913.

A "red blood" drama, featuring Francis X. Bushman in the dual role of Paul, the clergyman, and Hal, the erring brother. Hal becomes involved with a gang of counterfeiters, and when punishment is to be meted out Paul changes places with him. While attempting to carry on Paul's work, Hal strikes a clue that leads to the arrest of the counterfeiters, and, in the fight that follows the discovery, is mortally wounded. He clears his brother and all ends well. Photographically and dramatically, one of the best films ever released.

"MARY STUART"—Edison, three reels. Released June 21, 1913.
"THE SNARE OF FATE"—Vitagraph, three reels. Released June 23, 1913.
"THE STRUGGLE"—Kalem, two reels. Released June 25, 1913.
"A VILLAIN UNMASKED"—Eclipse-Kleine, two reels. Released June 27, 1913.
"THE TRAPPER'S MISTAKE"—Patheplay, two reels. Released June 28, 1913.
"THE PENALTY OF CRIME"—Lubin, two reels. Released June 30, 1913.
"THE TIGER LILY"—Vitagraph, two reels. Released July 2, 1913.
"SHENANDOAH"—Kalem, three reels. Released July 4, 1913.

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

Quality Films Reasonable Prices Efficient Service

A POPULAR service must necessarily include these three things. Of what good are quality films if prices are out of all reason? And what do low prices amount to, if the service feature is not in evidence?

No one denies that the films known by the trade names, Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Kleine (Cines-Eclipse), Lubin, Melies, Pathe, Selig and Vitagraph are the QUALITY films of the industry.

Any exhibitor who uses General Film Service will attest that the prices charged for it are REASONABLE. In fact, one exhibitor was good enough to say not long ago that he would insist upon General Film Service even at twice its present cost.

The EFFICIENCY of the General Film organization is something you must learn through association.

We're ready any time—now—to talk about serving you. Are you ready to talk with US? Just write "show me" on a postal card, mail it to the home office at 200 Fifth Ave., New York, or any of our distributing offices in the principal cities, and we'll do the rest.

ARE YOU ON THE ALERT FOR THE UNUSUAL?

MARY STUART

In THREE REELS Released June 21, 1913

Is as different from the average multiple reel production as daylight is from darkness. It represents a tremendous amount of study and research, a painstaking attention to little details of costumes and settings. The result is a finished product.

The love, self-sacrifice, pathos, bitter hatred, intrigue and tragedy which sway the emotions of the great characters in this famous struggle, afford a magnificent opportunity for intense dramatic action. The suspense is sustained until the executioner poises his gleaming axe above the fair white neck of Mary Stuart.

Facts and Comments

A NOTE in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World regarding the activities of the Vermont State Board of Health elicits the information that the Board of Health of the State of New Jersey is a close second in the work of educating the public by the use of the motion picture. Under the direction of Dr. Millard Knowlton a series of lectures with motion picture illustration have been held in the cities and towns of four counties. As New Jersey towns are well provided with electric "juice" a portable lighting outfit, as was used in Vermont, was not required, but the work done and the territory covered were equally as comprehensive and thorough. The subjects being used are "The Red Cross Seal," "The Awakening of John Bond," "The Man Who Learned," "Hope," "The Trail of the Germs," "Boil Your Water" and "The Fly Pest." Special afternoon lectures are held for school children and evening exhibitions for the general public. More than 100,000 persons have attended these lectures and Dr. Knowlton is greatly pleased with the interest that has been aroused. The latest exhibitions of the series consisted of nine days of lectures at Hoboken, N. J., ending June 6.

PRESIDENT NEFF adds another chapter to the censorship controversy this week, in which he endeavors to give some proof for his belief that the motion picture business will go to the "demnition bowwows" if legislative censorship is not enacted. It will be noticed that the little word "if" still plays a star part in his argument. If other states will join Ohio then we shall have a "censor congress." Mr. Neff is taking too much for granted; he says such and such things will happen if a legal censorship is not exercised over pictures. But up to the present time none of these dire calamities have occurred and motion pictures have been doing business for some years. Censorship has been a favorite subject with certain agitators for years, but newspapers and legitimate theaters, which have been threatened with censors from time to time, are still immune from their activities. The idea is abhorrent to the great mass of Americans; we have combated it successfully all these years and it is to be hoped that a way may be found to put an effectual stop to the application of the plan to pictures.

FOREIGN manufacturers of motion pictures are warned against making contracts with so-called agents for American companies claiming to control a market here, unless such agents can show credentials from established American distributors of pictures. The American market for foreign pictures is precarious, for the reason that there are few foreign manufacturers who have measured the American taste sufficiently accurate to enable them to produce pictures that will meet with approval. Those who have succeeded have still to compete in a market already glutted with the home product, so that the representation by American agents that an unlimited sale can be secured must be taken with a grain of salt. The best that the foreign manufacturer can expect of the American market is that it will take a limited number of copies of the very best subjects he can produce. Under this condition it is folly for him to make exclusive contracts to place his entire product in the hands of any one distributing company. The foreign company that can afford to maintain its own agent in New York is in position to obtain the best results.

SATISFACTORY progress is reported by the committee in charge of the arrangements for the Motion Picture Exposition to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, July 7 to 12. About all of the space available for exhibition purposes has been disposed of, insuring the greatest kinematograph exposition the world has ever witnessed. Many special and highly entertaining features will be installed in the exposition hall which will, together with the continuous exhibition of pictures in the four model theaters, afford ample attraction for the visiting public. There is added interest in this exposition to the American exhibitor in the fact that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will hold its annual convention at the same time and in the same hall. Thousands of exhibitors will come to New York for that occasion who might not deem a trade exhibit sufficiently interesting to induce them to leave their homes at any other time. Altogether the outlook for the biggest turnout the motion picture trade has ever witnessed is most encouraging. Enterprising picture men, of whatever branch of the business, cannot afford to miss it.

Where There's Life

By Louis Reeves Harrison

"AVAUNT, I will write a photoplay," asserts every man with pen, ink, paper and two arms, and looks about him for a theme leading up to that triumph of feminine lure over masculine vanity known as "marriage." This method of procedure has its charms—it has the delight of uncertainty from start to finish and leaves the audience in that bewildered state of mind which causes the average spectator to ask "Why is a moving picture?" Unpleasant truth it may be, but the once-in-a-while scenario writer has something of the same equipment for his undertaking that the lady had who went down town to buy her husband a suit of clothes with no other idea of his dimensions than that he wore a "fifteen" collar.

Interesting theme that deserves attention because it is ever new, relates to the crossing and clashing of the two great factors determining the lives of those who earn all they get, the series of events that happen to a man and stand in opposition to his will, and the way his determination affects them or is affected by them. Whether circumstances tragically overpower the man or he skillfully converts them to his purposes—his consciousness involves a sense of opposition to his wishes,—the ensuing struggle, bringing about his triumph or his fall, constitutes a theme replete with fine dramatic material. Life is a battle between the individual and antagonistic influences in his environment—these two are nearly always at odds,—and the varying results furnish ideas for some of the most fascinating stories thrown on the screen.

Such a motive, when skillfully applied to present-day conditions, has some resemblance to a keenly-contested game of chess. The central figure starts out with a well-defined plan—he is instinctively anxious to succeed—but he is compelled to modify both his schemes and his tactics according to unforeseen changes that take place on the board. He finds that he is not as wise as he deemed himself to be, and has to think hard at an important crisis. There is where he conquers or surrenders. To be or not to be is his problem at the acute stage of the game.

Double exposure affords picturesque opportunity to uncover the workings of his mind. He reverts to the past as a guide. Some similar experience has occurred in days gone by. He reflects. An error may mean calamity. He struggles and flounders. He makes a false move. Disaster. Now for characterization, a picturing of his thoughts and feelings. He rouses and rallies to a new standard. He is a man of courage. Hurrah! He begins a new attack with vicious determination. A slap in the face merely stirs his fighting instincts. He delivers blow after blow and succeeds by turning defeat into victory.

There is life in such a story if it be clearly and logically told. If the conditions are those most of us are forced to meet, his struggle will awaken strong sympathetic appreciation. People watch with tense interest vital incidents such as appear in the secret dramas of their own lives. There is a stirring of the heart when the screen portrayal lays bare an assertion of the human will against resisting circumstances. Most workers are pounding away on one or another predetermined course, encountering unforeseen difficulties at unexpected moments, and they enjoy seeing one of their number deliver a master stroke to some purpose.

Keen sympathy and suspense are aroused if the battle is a single-handed one against undesirable conditions known to all, evils in economic surroundings, social environment, unjust laws, any factor destroying happiness or interfering with common welfare. It may rest on the solid basis of a simple entertainment or rise to the enlightenment of people who mournfully regard the errors of our times as constituting an inevitable if not necessary state of affairs. The only trouble about such stories is that they may not appeal to those authorized to select a photodrama because of their inability to produce any worth mentioning.

Comedy might be made as full of life as serious drama should it indicate an amusing phase of human weakness, such as that of attaching too much importance to what others think, or that of purring vanity when flattery strokes its back the right way. How deeply annoyed, yea, even pained, we become if our self-importance is attacked! We may have our faults, but a fire-escape will be needed for the individual who points them out. Why doesn't some producer take off the foreclosure of mortgage that will turn mother out of home unless the boy hero arrives in time with money to foil the villain? And isn't it about time to get some fun out of the one obtuse and two acute angles of the eternal triangle theatrical men have been playing on ever since a drop curtain rose for the first time?

The "infernal feminine" is not without comedy material. Contrasting her treatment of a man with a past and a woman with a similar background might quicken a smile. Why she is less interesting in pure white than in scarlet trimmings might lead to a better knowledge of human peculiarities. Fascinating problems lie deep in her propensity to spend four hours twisting her hair in front of a mirror, six more shopping for something marked up from fifty cents to three dollars and down again to one ninety-nine, and then spread a delicatessen dinner in seven minutes, kick about household drudgery, have a headache and expect a player-piano, an auto and a front pew in church as her just reward.

Rather pathetic are those stories which discover our limitations as individuals, those which show that no one of us really amounts to very much. They are sad but sane. They might keep certain unhappy ones, the unappreciated, who are carrying too heavy a burden of self-consciousness, out of the bughouse. There would be something salubrious if not cheering in a screen portrayal of the fun of trying as opposed to the less humorous result of achieving results. Nearly a million scenario writers would sit up and take notice. There is a delightful speculative element in attempting what we are not qualified in any way to perform, and the disillusion might bring wholesome realization to more than one individual of where he is at.

The fidgety man offers a rattling good subject for farce, and the tannic-acid woman who attempts to mother half creation with "shoulds" and "shouldn'ts" furnishes another. How to make love at Atlantic City placed in contrast with the Asbury Park style might inject life into the veins of a photocomedy. How to be happy though exiled to Los Angeles leads back to the tragic and high motives that deal with moral improvement. I would like to see a photoplay showing that a man's best investment is that of acquiring knowledge, or, better still, one showing how the weak, the faulty, the unfortunate may be transformed into useful citizens without the viciously cruel methods practiced in some of our corrective institutions. Instead of attempting to raise the dead, give us plays that throb with the warm currents of actual life.

"The Snare of Fate"

Three-Reel Vitagraph by Eliza G. Harral.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS strong protest against the happiness-destroying power of money when it delivers men and women up to the misery of having nothing to do might well be called "The Golden Snare," particularly as it is one of many similar plays demonstrating—in this case with force—that the way of selfish wealth is a ruinous one. It also drives at those match-making mothers whose idea of success is to lead a life of pleasure calculated to dazzle the neighbors. The story is of a kind worn threadbare—it is an infernal triangle with a girl-who-marries-wealth-to-save-a-ruined-father thrown in—but it is redeemed by fine acting and beautiful settings. It is so admirably done that William Humphrey must be accorded his long-deferred laurel wreath. He produced it and did the finest acting where there was a notable cast.

Humphrey portrays a wicked character, that of a father who steals his son's fiancée, as it should be. He is a gentlemanly villain rather than a villainous gentleman. Wearing no makeup, resorting to no trickery, he interprets the part with such fidelity that one might well believe, not knowing him personally, that nature had especially equipped him for just such a role. Charles Kent presents the ruined father with feeling and S. Rankin Drew lives up spiritedly to his implied ancestry. The ladies, Dorothy Kelly and Louise Beaudet round out the strong cast with beauty and acting that deserves superior opportunity. To this exceptional list is added a general support in social functions from some of the best known members of the Vitagraph Company.

Barring all that is delightful in the acting,I should ascribe the charm of this presentation very largely to the settings, to the equipment and arrangement of scenery, costumes and properties. The art of the photodrama is, of course, composite. The theme is the soul of the, play; action and development make that soul visible to those in front, and the settings are its vesture. Each is all-important in its way, but there is a great deal in having the eyes of the audience satisfied in a production that appeals to the sense of vision alone. A creative genius may compose beautiful music, but it is the artistic rendering that causes that composition to afford delight to others.

In each one of the social functions which brighten "The Snare of Fate," there is a picture of symmetry and nice balance that indicates craftsmanship on the part of the director. The stage manager who interprets skilfully does so faith- to the equipment and arrangement of scenery, costumes and properties. The art of the photodrama is, of course, composite. The theme is the soul of the play; action and de- fully in essential elements and artistically wherever he can give the author's ideas added force and loveliness, and so the motion-picture director operates to visualize a scenario, selecting what is in harmony with the trend, sentiment and purposes of the photodrama, adding or eliminating, until he reaches a harmonious whole. When he has finished all this, when his scenes are set and his characters clothed, there are schemes of lighting to consider and he must preserve the sort of action that is in harmony with his subject.

The selfish purposes of the father who robs his son of a natural choice to gratify his temporary desires and the mother who makes a sacrificial victim of her daughter to keep up appearances in her set, lead straight to tragedy, so the play is logical in itself, but it would fail and fall if staged without unusual taste and skill. C'est bien fait.

"The Punch Club," an organization of assistant directors, property men, stage carpenters and scenic artists connected with the various motion picture companies of Southern California, has elected Joseph Murphy president, Horace Davey vice-president, Al Young secretary, and Jack White treasurer.

Interesting Scene from "The Snare of Fate," a Vitagraph Three-Reel Feature.

Children's Motion Picture League Has Comprehensive Plan for Greater New York—Asks City to Contribute.

By J. P. McNeill.

COMPREHENSIVE indeed are the plans formulated by the newly organized Children's Moving Picture League of Greater New York, which a few days ago sent a communication to the Board of Aldermen in which, among other things, was this paragraph:

"The league is urged and convinced that it is quite proper to ask the city of New York, through the Board of Estimate, to contribute $1,000 per month, or $12,000 per year, towards the cost of maintenance of this work."

The letter received from the league bears the signature of Mrs. Laura Cogswell, president and founder, and the purposes of the league as set forth are as follows:

> First—To make possible in certain theaters, auditoriums and motion picture theaters in Greater New York a program specially adapted to children every Saturday from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m. and every week day during public school vacation from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m.
> That the unaccompanied children be segregated from the adults and a matron salaried by the proprietor, and approved of by this League, be in constant attendance.
> Second—That the League's Committee of Inspection and Selection of Films confer with proprietors or managers of these theaters in the making up of the program, having in mind the needs and the pleasure of the children relative to age and environment.
> That these entertaining educational films shall illustrate history, geography, industry, commerce and science, plant and animal life, and thus reveal the virtues of patriotism, honesty, loyalty, humaneness, courage and the purity of the home. Some music and recitations, and, when necessary, descriptive lectures.
> Third—That the League will, through the Benefactor's Fund, arrange for the free entertainment of groups of children from various schools and institutions.
> Fourth—It is the intent of this League to maintain its headquarters in a very accessible part of Greater New York, and where its members will be welcome, and plans for best possible results discussed, and to hold public meetings from time to time to create and foster moral and physical safeguards for our children of to-day that are citizens of to-morrow.
> Fifth—That this League will publish and distribute to its members and the public certain reports of the League's work and other interesting data of this wonderful educational factor of the age.
> Sixth—The League will ever exert itself in favor of any legislation that will tend to improve existing conditions of motion pictures and motion picture theaters.
> Membership, $2 per year; sustaining membership, $5 per year; patron, $10; benefactor, $100 or more; life membership, $500 or more; memorials, your pleasure.

The office of the league is located in the Heidelberg Building and the honorary presidents will be: Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States; Hon. Wm. Sulzer, Governor of New York State; Hon. William J. Gaynor, Mayor of New York City.

The honorary vice-president will be the Aldermen of the City of New York, the Borough Presidents and the City Clerk.

After telling the aldermen that: "You do not discriminate in favor of one citizen over another in matters of civic welfare, and therefore this league respectfully solicits your cooperation in its plans and purposes for the stimulation of purity of the home, civic pride and patriotism." The letter goes on to describe the motion picture problem in the following terms: "The motion picture problem is a factor of almost incomprehensible magnitude in our civic life. Whereas formerly a decade at least was supposed to elapse in order to truthfully portray history. Behold, the history of yesterday is with us today (a day of twenty-four hours) by means of these wonderful motion films; and no one questions the truthful portrayal of the process as we gasp and grasp. There is an ordinance prohibiting children under sixteen years of age attending motion picture shows unless accompanied by parent or guardian (Dent Ordinance). We endorse this law, but we wish to be made the guardian ad libitum of the unaccompanied children during the hours specified in prospectus submitted to each of the members of this board. The league's committee being supplemented by men and women of the immediate neighborhoods of the auditoriums selected for the children's program."

Some of the members have volunteered to stay in the city all summer in order to assist in the uplifting situation and the league states: "The Children's Motion Picture League will be responsible for the moral and physical welfare of all children from the age of six to sixteen years, without regard to race, creed or color, unaccompanied by parent or guardian while in these selected auditoriums. The program will be of interest to adults, and they will be welcome. Babies in arms will be urged to bring their mothers and their grandmothers—for it is said that 'the education of a child begins with its grandparents,' and it behooves us to assist in making Greater New York's million of young citizens into these trusty desirable grandparents."

The league will secure, according to present plans, 33 auditoriums as follows: Borough of Manhattan, 10, east and west side. Borough of Brooklyn, 10, including 2 at Coney Island. Borough of Queens, 5, including 2 at resorts. Borough of Richmond, 5, including 2 at resorts. Borough of the Bronx, 3, including 1 at park entrance.

The league states that their plan is endorsed by the clergy of all denominations, many of whom have consented to act upon various committees, and magistrates and judges of the children's courts, and they say that the motion film manufacturers welcome the league and have signified their desire to further the work in every possible way, even to the making of special films.

In asking for the monthly contribution of $1,000 from the city the league says it will enable 100,000 children of the Greater New York public schools, parochial schools, private schools, institutional schools, orphan asylums, deaf and dumb asylums, blind asylums, cripple asylums per month to attend these entertainments in safe and sanitary places at the rate of one cent per capita.

The league estimates their yearly expense at $52,000 which they hope to get by subscriptions and membership dues.

Besides Mrs. Cogswell, the other names mentioned as being connected with the league are: Counsel: Hon. James L. Bennett, Ex-United States District Attorney, and Hon. John W. H. Crim, Ex-Assistant United States District Attorney, 30 Broad St.

The request for the $1,000 a month from the city was referred to the Finance Committee of the Board of Aldermen.

LIONEL ADAMS.

Lionel Adams, a recent acquisition to the Lubin picture players was born in the late 70's in New Orleans, where he had the advantage of training at the Tulane University. He early acquired the desire for the stage, and his career has been a success covering a wide range of endeavor in America and London, England. He has been at various times a member of Julia Marlowe's, Annie Russell's, Wm. Gillette's and Mrs. Leslie Carter's companies. But he will be best remembered throughout the United States for his rendition of Hall Caine's John Storm in "The Christian." His later successes were the Mayor in "The Man of the Hour," Joe Brooks in "Paid in Full" and Richard Ward in "The Spendthrift." Mr. Adams has always been a student of pantomimic art in connection with his stage work and he feels that the field afforded him by the Lubin studio will enable him to continue an uninterrupted artistic career.

"The Final Judgment" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"THE FINAL JUDGMENT," written and produced by Archer McMackin, is the strongest two-reel subject yet turned out by the Essanay Company. It will be released June 9. "Into the North," reviewed in these columns some time ago, was commended because of the change of atmosphere it introduced, forming, as it did, a pleasing contrast to the tiresome monotony of a plethora of Western subjects. "The Final Judgment" is welcomed for the same reason, and it is commended more highly, because the story—especially in the second reel—holds one with a firmer grip and stirs one more deeply by its heart interest.

This is the first photoplay, as well as I can remember, in which it has been attempted to give the spectator impressions of life in the Klondike, around the later '90's, when the great overland rush, by way of Skaguay, was made to Dawson City. The first reel has to do with the lives of the principal characters in that rude, forbidding mining camp. Mr. McMackin has succeeded in giving us very probable glimpses of life in the primitive city. An interior which shows a scene in a combined dance hall and saloon, and another which gives a view of the humble restaurant owned by the partners are little splashes of color that fit in well with the locals. One would like to see, in addition to these, a few Eskimo dogs once in a while—not necessarily on the trail in harness—just to heighten this local coloring.

Scenes from "The Final Judgment," an Essanay Two-Part Feature.

The struggle between the two partners, amid the snow wastes, affords a convincing illustration of the proneness of man to revert to elemental instincts when uncontrolled by law. It is fierce, and merciless, too, at least so far as one of the combatants is concerned. There is no use of firearms in the final test. It is just brute strength against brute strength; and the victor, doggedly pulling his sled, leaves his partner and friend to die in the snow drifts.

The second reel reintroduces us to the characters in New York City. In it there is a thrilling fire scene, with a display of heroism that defies death itself, in the effort to save the lives of others. And here we have a fine contrast between civilization at its best and civilization at its worst, as revealed in the first reel. The realism of this fire scene reflects much credit on the producer. Many streams are turned on the burning factory, where helpless women are in panic and rush madly through the suffocating smoke in a vain search for safety. The closing scene in the hospital is affecting, more especially because it brings to a happy ending the troublous incidents which marred the earlier lives of some of the principals in the story.

E. H. Calvert does fine work in the part of Frank McCormack, New York newspaper man and prospector. William Bailey simulates realistically the character of Carl Brandon, prospector and false friend of McCormack, and Edna Wallace, the woman of the story, is capably presented by Miss Dorothy Phillips.

Frank McCormack and Carl Brandon, both young men from the East, seek their fortunes in the Klondike. Brandon is seized by the gambling fever on his arrival, and his friend McCormack persuades him to become his partner in a restaurant. Each falls in love with Edna Wallace, daughter of the former proprietor. She marries Brandon. Five years later, Brandon has become addicted to strong drink and pays much attention to a dancing girl. McCormack beseeches him to reform; but he quarrels with his wife and his friend. Soon afterward he leaves the camp secretly, taking with him his only son, then about four years old. The mother is distracted over the loss of her child, and McCormack sets out to overtake Brandon and bring back the boy.

The men fight in the snowy wilderness, and McCormack is worsted. Brandon leaves him, as he thinks, dead; but he is discovered by two prospectors and nursed back to health. When he returns to Mrs. Brandon's home, he finds that she has returned to New York, in a search for her husband and child.

Fifteen years later, McCormack is the night city editor of a New York daily. Returning home to his apartments, in the early morning, one day, he hears a burglar there. Seizing a revolver he flashes on the light, and discovers in the night prowler his old partner, Brandon. The latter, believing that he had killed McCormack, falls dead of heart disease, at sight of him. A letter in his pocket reveals the whereabouts of his son, and McCormack communicates with the young man, telling him of the tragic death of his father, but suppressing the facts.

Young Brandon is given a position as reporter on McCormack's paper. One day a "4-11" fire alarm rang out, and William Brandon was assigned to assist in reporting it. On his arrival at the burning factory, he forgot all about his assignment and devoted all his energies to the saving of the women and girls. One woman, especially, he would not leave, even when there seemed no hope to rescue her. He succeeded, however, in attracting the attention of the firemen, and she and himself were carried out badly burned.

McCormack called later at the hospital to see his brave reporter. The young man pointed to the woman on a cot near his own as the one he had saved. McCormack took a long look at the unconscious patient. It was Edna Wallace, afterwards Mrs. Carl Brandon, on whose face he looked with astonishment and awe. William Brandon had unwittingly saved the life of his own mother, whom he had never seen in his years of remembrance.

"The Wages of Sin"

By George Blaisdell.

THE sub-title of this picture is "A Drama Portrayed From Life." There is nothing in the three reels to indicate that it is not. Of course, the motive behind the making of this melodrama is simply to exploit three men whose names—and photographs, likewise—during the past year have been much in the public prints. No one, least of all those who financed and who will sell the picture will deny this. The three men under discussion are at liberty. Their friends will say they served the state. Their enemies and the friends of the five men under sentence of death at Sing Sing partly by reason of their testimony will use other language. As there is certain to be a deal of discussion, perhaps some con as well as much pro, as to the unwisdom of bringing these men in front of the arc light of screen publicity it is fair to exhibitors of motion pictures to give them the facts and let them draw their own conclusions uninfluenced by any private opinions of a reviewer. It is known to readers of the Moving Picture World, however, that the use on the screen of the services of men or women who have had unpleasant notoriety and who also have not been trained to acting is to be deplored; more than this, it arms with a club the diminishing enemies of the motion picture.

In the first place, as to the Board of Censorship: The writer has seen the names of the eleven persons who viewed the picture and gave their official opinion. They are representative of the best and the most influential civic organizations in the city of New York. The vote to pass was unanimous. From one of the members who was reluctant to be quoted it was learned that the board, after full and free discussion, decided that, as the three men are at liberty, that they have been convicted of no crime and consequently—even admitting their associations in the past—are not criminals, and as there is in the story nothing which aside from the presence of the trio in question would be censurable, there were insufficient moral grounds to reject the picture.

Jack Rose, Sam Schepps and Harry Vallon are each individually introduced at the opening of the story. The three are clerical employes of a firm with a government contract. The time for the deposit of $120,000 expires in a week. Mason conspires against his fellow-partner, Sebastian. The former is under the impression that the latter cannot make good. He influences Malachi, an Italian, to precipitate a strike in order to insure Sebastian's downfall. There is a flash showing the home life of Rose—filling the two children's stockings at Christmas. The three clerks make up their minds to play the races. There is thrown on the screen a racing chart as printed in a New York morning sporting paper. "Why, mother," says one of the clerks, "what's the use of working when I can make a year's wages in a day on the races?" "Beware of gambling, my son," is the reply, "because the wages of sin is death."

Jack overhears Mason and Malachi conspiring. He tells Sebastian. Mason enters the office a moment later followed by Malachi and the workmen. Jack draws a pistol and the invaders retire. Malachi gives the sign of the Mafia—his forefinger held between his teeth. At luncheon time the three clerks leave the office in their shirtsleeves. "Say, fellows," says one, as he takes out a newspaper, "come and look at the dope on the ponies." "Not for me, my boy," answers Rose, "the races have sent more men up the river than all the pistols in the world." While the three are discussing horse racing the two conspirators enter the office. Mason opens the safe, takes out bonds belonging to his partner, puts them in the pockets of the three clerks, and sends Malachi for the police. Sebastian comes in later, tells his clerks he now has the amount required and that the factory is saved. As he goes to the safe he discovers his loss. Mason tells of seeing the clerks take the bonds. The police enter and the three are taken away. As the workmen refuse to strike, Malachi determines to cripple the works by blowing up the great smokestack, which he according does, furnishing a real spectacle. It is plainly a bit taken perhaps from some "weekly," but it effectually serves. The clerks are sent to prison.

Three years later the convicts return. Then comes the struggle not to obtain employment, but to keep it. As Rose tells his wife, "When once the stripes of a convict go across a man's back the world is against him." Schepps has the same story for his mother. Vallon in desperation says he is going into gambling. Jack in a new job is seen by Mason and again is discharged. The closing of the factory has ruined Sebastian, now blind. On his daughter Lucille, Mason forces his attentions. In a lively mix-up Jack knocks him down.

There is a realistic scene showing a table in a gambling house. It is said to be authentic as to detail. Certainly it should be. Jack begs Sam to quit. He tells him it will pay him in the long run. Sam's mother, ill, pleads for the return of her son. Lucille, visiting her, goes to bring him. While he is on his way Malachi tries to backmail Mason, threatening to tell of the "frame-up" that sent the three clerks to prison. In a fight Mason is killed. There is a vivid illustration of the "third degree" following the Italian's arrest. The shade is raised revealing the body of Mason just outside the window. Malachi confesses. Later he is sentenced to death. Schepps in the meantime has reached home too late to see his mother alive. "I wish I had taken her advice when she told me the wages of sin is death," he says.

There is the story. It is not so much of a tale, as may be seen, yet in some indefinable way it holds. There are evidences of haste at times in the making. The failure to do the obvious thing at the end—by having the Italian confess that three innocent men were sent to prison and thereby rehabilitate them—will strike many as a serious oversight. The photography is good. Plainly efforts were made at times to hold in the background the inexperienced actors and professional gamblers, but it must be admitted that as actors they have done much better than might have been expected. The remainder of the cast is professional.

ONE ON KERRIGAN.

They are telling a good one on Kerrigan in Santa Barbara and picture circles in Los Angeles. Jack went to the local picture theater in Santa Barbara with his brother Wallace, the Western business manager, the other night and watched a reel of Mutual Weekly in which the devastation caused by the Dayton flood was shown. Some views of bodies being carried from the debris hushed the audience when a small boy suddenly piped up: "Gee! there wouldn't have been so many dead ones if Jack Kerrigan 'ad a been there.'" The audience burst into sudden laughter and before the reel was finished Jack was spotted and called upon for a speech. As Jack has never made a public address in his life, he grabbed his cane in panic and fled.

WELL KNOWN DRAMATIC WOMAN JOINS ESSANAY EASTERN STOCK COMPANY.

Mrs. Clara Reynolds Smith began her public career as a dramatic reader, being well known on the Lyceum platform twenty years ago. She held the chair of oratory in Deland College, now Stetson University, Deland, Fla. She began her stage career in the Broadhurst forces, her first part being Mrs. Goodly in "What Happened to Jones." Since that time she has played a wide range of Grande Dame and character parts, thus proving her versatility. Her stock experience has been wide, she having played stock engagements in New York, Buffalo, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and Denver. She has supported such stars are Amelia Bingham, William Collier, Victor Moore and others. For the past few years she has been identified with new productions in New York, her last part being the German mother in Augustus Thomas' "When It Comes Home." At the close of the engagement of the last-named play she decided to enter the moving picture ranks, and has joined the forces of the Essanay Eastern stock company at Chicago.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

PENNSYLVANIA STATE CONVENTION.

Assembles at Philadelphia—State Officers Elected—Big Delegation for New York in July—Fine Trade Exhibit.

By Hugh Hoffman.

IT was a pretty fine looking crowd of ladies and gentlemen that gathered last week in Philadelphia for the second annual convention of the Pennsylvania State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The historic Continental Hotel was selected as the cradle of a new Declaration of Independence that was beautifully voiced by Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, at the banquet that terminated the official proceedings. The convention was called to order on the afternoon of Tuesday, May 27th, by Walter Stuempfig, manager of the Germantown Theater, Philadelphia, and president of the Pennsylvania League. There were sixty members present from various parts of the State, and not a piker in the bunch. There were a few scrappers, however, but they were honest about it and came right out in the open with their grievances. They locked the doors at the Wednesday session, threw the key out of the window, and had a fine old wrangle about dues, elegibility and all that sort of thing, for four hours and a half, after which they emerged flushed and happy and sauntered arm in arm to the banquet hall.

President Neff of the national body made an inspiring address at the opening meeting on Tuesday in answer to the Hon. Herman Lowe, Commissioner of Supplies of the City of Philadelphia, who made the address of welcome for Mayor Blankenburg, who was unable to attend. Mr. Lowe recognized the merits of the moving picture officially and made the usual remarks that every official makes about the great danger of immoral pictures, etc. Mr. Neff, for the enlightenment of Mr. Lowe, stated that he did not remember a convention of exhibitors anywhere that did not advocate clean pictures or the uplift of the business in general. He pointed out that financial matters had played very little part in the deliberations of exhibitors at their meetings. "All that the exhibitor wants is fair play," said he; "we do not ask our lawmakers for any favors, but we do ask that laws shall not be passed to our detriment by men who have no first-hand knowledge of our business or the conditions surrounding it. We do not want censorship of motion pictures to be placed in the hands of a political party to become a vote-getting asset of a party boss, but we do want more clean comedies, more scenic and Biblical pictures. We are in favor of censorship, but not where it is biased or narrow, and when irresponsible or fanatical people undertake to destroy such a great institution as the motion picture, we consider that we have a right to organize and demand our rights, legally and otherwise. Mr. Neff criticised the schools and churches for not doing their duty toward cinematography, in refusing to recognize it as a power for good instead of evil.

The convention adjourned after this brief session to allow the visitors to make a trip to the Lubin studio. An automobile procession was formed and an interesting afternoon was spent at Mr. Lubin's model factory. "Pop" Lubin is one of Nature's noblemen; unfettered by conventionalities, unchanged by material success, he is the most charming of hosts. There is no aloofness about Mr. Lubin; he gave his entire attention to the visiting exhibitors during the time they were in town. In the evening the picture folk enjoyed an entertainment of unreleased photoplays in the large banquet hall of the Continental Hotel. The following pictures were exhibited: "Only a Veteran" (Vitagraph), "A Dangerous Foe" (Biograph), "The Honor of a Soldier" (Edison), "Bull Fight in France" and "In the Forests of Cochin, China" (Pathe), "Doing Like Daisy" and "Yarn of the Nancy Bell" (Lubin), "I'm No Counterfeiter" (Ramo), "Beauty and the Beast" (Universal), "Wild Life and Big Game in the Jungles of Africa and India" (Arab Amus. Co.). The motion picture exhibition lasted from 8 p.m. until 1 a.m., after which many of the visitors enjoyed a fine cabaret performance upstairs on the roof garden.

Second Day's Events.

A heavy and steady rain put the kibosh on the parade that was scheduled to pass down Market Street and around the City Hall. At noon President Stuempfig called a meeting of the league members. Mr. Neff took up the question of State and local dues in regards to their distribution among local, State and national treasuries. He then made an address on the rights and responsibilities of exhibitors. He told them it was the duty of every man to aspire for and demand only that which will elevate and reflect credit on their business. Anticipating a spat between the Pittsburgh delegation and the Philadelphia men, Mr. Neff abjured them not to lose sight of the higher and better things for which their organization stands. Local differences, he said, should be viewed and treated as of minor importance in proportion to the loftier purpose for which they were assembled. He called attention to the smallness of local feeling against other cities in matters of legislation, and urged the men to work side by side for the good of all. By his well-spoken address, Mr. Neff persuaded the members to look upon their differences as merely incidental to the bigger business in hand. President Stuempfig then appointed as credential committee, Messrs. Jay Emanuel and Walter Jacobs, of Philadelphia, and Henry Poke, of Pittsburgh. As constitution committee he appointed Messrs. G. W. Pierce, A. R. Cavanaugh and J. Hesser Walraven, of Philadelphia; Thos. J. Barbin, Pittsburgh, and H. A. Victor, McKeesport. The meeting was then adjourned to allow the visitors and their wives to accept the invitation of the Curtis Publishing Company to inspect the plant of that remarkable institution. It was still raining, but a large procession started out under umbrellas, on the hoof, for the $50,000,000 hut recently erected for the business of getting out the Ladies' Home Journal, the Saturday Evening Post and The Country Gentleman. One does not have to be a printer to be impressed with the greatness of this concern. The principal impression a visitor gets and retains is that there are some great invisible minds about this place somewhere that never make a mistake. It is one of the sights of Philadelphia that should not be overlooked by the visitor.

The last session of the convention was called to order at 3 p.m. and continued until 7.30. For some unexplained reason the only trade paper that was on the job was barred, both from the preliminaries and the elections. It seems that in cases like this there is room for the use of discretionary power. Naturally no organization in closed session would wish to have present a cub reporter from a local daily, who would rush out with what he might consider a "scoop." Neither would such an organization desire to have present a trade journalist who would be apt to do the same thing. But where a publication's past record and performances have always been for the welfare of the organization and never against it, there should be some member present to vouch for the safety and friendship of its representative. It isn't what he prints that makes a good journalist; it's what he doesn't print. There is no haunting desire among newspaper men to listen to or report disputes, but there is a point where disputes end and business begins, and the reporter is there to make an intelligent report in his own way, and which is usually a better way than the average recording secretary does it for him.

At this meeting the Reading local was accepted into membership in the State and National organizations. The Pittsburgh and Philadelphia factions then had their little squabble about dues which ended satisfactorily to themselves. Elections were then held with the following results: President, Edward A. Jeffries, Philadelphia; first vice-president, Harry C. Kliehm, Pittsburgh; second vice-president, Gilbert C. Miller, Plymouth; treasurer, Ben H. Zerr, Reading; secretary, Harry E. Reiff, Lyric Theater, 21 Boggs Avenue, Pittsburgh; national vice-president, Walter Stuempfig, Germantown Theater, Philadelphia; sergeant-at-arms, Albert J. Fischer, Philadelphia; publicity representative, Frank A. Gould, Reading, Pa.

Delegates to National Convention: H. A. Victor, F. J. Herrington and Harry Poke, of Pittsburgh; J. Weinreich, Geo. H. Roth, Morris Spiers and Chas. Segall, of Philadelphia, and J. G. Hansen, of Reading. Alternates: E. J. Kuhn, Lancaster; J. Hesser Walraven and M. A. Benn, of Philadelphia. The next State convention place will be selected by the State officers.

The members upon adjournment stepped directly into the banquet hall, where the feast and the ladies were waiting. The large room was fully occupied and was a pleasing sight. The music for the occasion, as well as for the two days of the gathering, was furnished by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, using their new style "H" orchestrion. The speech of the evening was delivered by Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh. He reminded the members that they were sitting in a room where the voice of liberty had often been heard. A little further up the street the Declaration of Independence had been signed by men who had the courage of their convictions. He went back and traced our present day enlightenment, our institutions and our national liberty to men and women who could see into the future and persisted in following their ideals even at the sacrifice of life itself. They were fighting for an institution the same as the motion picture men are fighting for an institution that they know will bring about the brotherhood of man throughout the earth, and will be the means of eliminating international prejudices born of ignorance, which could never be wholly eradicated by the printed word, but which will be dissolved through the medium of motion pictures. For that reason every exhibitor should consider himself a soldier in the army of education ready to defend and advance their magnificent institution in the face of prejudice and oppression.

Addresses were also made by Mr. Clem Kerr, Walter Stuempfig, Hugh Hoffman, Clay M. Greene, Arthur Johnson and M. A. Neff. The banquet closed with an exhibition of motion pictures as follows: "Robinson Crusoe" (Rex), "The District Attorney's Conscience" (Lubin), "The Prisoner of Zenda" (Famous Players), "John Burns of Gettysburg" (Kalem), and "The Helping Hand" (Ramo).

Trade Exhibit at Philadelphia Convention.

If it were not for the trade exhibits, conventions would be tame affairs indeed. To be sure there could be conventions without them, but how we would miss those gallant knights of the road who gather there and open their little stores and spend more money than they take in. For good nature they are without equal, for patience they are in a class by themselves, and for making the well known welkin ring, you ought to listen to the cash register bells when they're around. Yes, they're the life of the party all right, and they can still bat an eye when the rest of the party is down and out.

Take that Wurlitzer crew, for instance. Of course, on account of the nature of their business they would not like us to say that they were the big noise, but their activities helped greatly to make the convention a success. In three separate places were sample copies of their new Style "H" orchestrion, built especially for rendering music for motion pictures. Beside being a regular piano it is an organ, an orchestra and a sound-box, both automatic and hand played. Among the effects are chimes, bells, drums, castanets, tambourine, cymbal, violin, flute, 'cello, cornet, bagpipe, oboe, clarinet and various sound effects. The Wurlitzer delegation were Messrs. Henry Von Steinert, manager of the Philadelphia store; M. H. Lawrence, manager theater orchestrion department, and George Leatherby. The operators were Carl A. Bonawitz, and Mr. Boyd of the Nixon-Zimmerman forces. For two solid days and nights they purveyed the sweetest music ever heard by mortal man. They were all regular fellows, too.

Fred A. Clark, the Eastern scout for the Motiograph Machine was on hand, demonstrating the new approved Chicago Motor Drive. This means that if it will satisfy those Chicago authorities it ought to satisfy anybody in the world. It has been officially blessed by the Chicago Board of Fire Underwriters, which is some blessing indeed. After midnight Fred had nothing to do till the morrow, so he put in his spare time on the roof garden until it was time to go to work again.

"Sanzone" is a sort of perfumed disinfectant spray that ought to be very good for keeping theaters sweet and clean. It is sold in bottles of quart size and in tins of larger capacity.

The Swartwout ventilator is a perfume box with a tiny electric fan at one end. The fan draws the air in through the perfume compartment and sends it out like a sweet meadow breeze.

Big Eric Morrison, ambassador plenipotentiary for the Standard Machine, is a survivor of more conventions than any other man. Nature endowed him with a physique that was made for wear and tear, which is one of the necessary qualifications of a machine salesman. He loves his little iron horse and never tires of making it do tricks for one or more persons assembled. He is also sporting a yellow cane, stolen from the author of these words.

The Globe Ticket Company was on hand with 57 varieties of ducats, each one for some different kind of an occasion. Samples could not be refused, as they were distributed by one of Philadelphias fairest maidens.

Charles Calehuff, the dispenser of little iron wheels, was there with several kinds of intermittent movements. Chawles used to be a film man, but has reformed and now he has a fine big supply house that sells everything for the exhibitor except "fillums."

Will C. Smith represented the Power's machine on this occasion. After 12 p. m. he represented Will C. Smith, Wurlitzer automatic virtuoso and spotlight orator.

Joe Brandt of the Universal highbrow department edited a daily dope sheet. The beauty about Joe is that if there is no news he can make news. It reads just like regular news too, albeit he puts one over quite frequently that arouses some envy among the journalistic profesh.

One could almost coin a wheeze by remarking that J. E. Robin, representing the Simplex machine, is a bird. Which he is. It doesn't feaze him in the least when you ask for the guy that sold the simp a Simplex. He was among those present. Also Mrs. Robin, a delightful little lady. We don't know but what it would be a good idea for all machine companies to send the wife along.

George M. Krupa, of Lancaster, who bought the Pennsylvania rights for the Prisoner of Zenda, showed the proper enterprise by having a space to display his advertising matter. He showed the fillum at the banquet too, which of course, helps some.

The Westinghouse people are evidently just getting wise that moving picture business is worth bidding for. They were on hand with a variety of contraptions calculated to make the exhibitor cease repining, including a mercury arc rectifier, et cetera.

The Keasbey & Mattison Co., exhibited fractions of an operating cabinet that won't burn up. We felt of it and smelt of it and tasted it and put it to every other known test, and we opine that it oughtn't to burn up if it is the kind of a booth they say it is.

The Newman Company, who double entirely in brass, were in evidence immediately upon entering the "rotunda." This was one exhibit that was framed up right, that is, y'understand, they make a business of selling brass lobby frames and consequently they would have to be framed up right. We appreciate Mr. Newman's frame of mind while fighting for his honor at 5 a. m. in the hotel corridor.

The Radium Vellum Screen, exhibited by Williams, Brown & Earle, had 25 reels projected on it and nary a scratch to show for it. Not even a finger mark, being set very high.

PRESIDENT NEFF REPLIES.

Advances Some Further Arguments In Support of His Contentions for Censorship by Act of Legislature.

Cincinnati, O., May 27, 1913.

Editor Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir: I have read with much interest your article on censorship in the last issue of The Moving Picture World (May 31), and wish to assure you of my friendship and good will and to thank you for the kind expression of friendship on your part. I assure you that I appreciate the work you have done in the past in assisting the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the industry in general. It is plainly to be seen that we do not agree upon the subject of supervision or the censoring of pictures. I desire to say that, after reading your editorial and duly considering it. I am still of the same opinion that I have always been—that there must be some supervision; that the manufacturer of imported pictures and the many who will from now on join the army of camera men working on independent lines, should be under supervision. If one manufacturer is placed under supervision naturally all should be under the same supervision.

I believe that you are honest in your statement and that you thoroughly believe that you are right. My reason for saying this is because I believe that I am equally right.

The moving picture business of the world is growing so rapidly and the possibility of profit is so great that it is naturally attractive to the politician and he will become active. As one of the officials in Virginia stated at our open meeting in Richmond; the time has arrived when state laws should regulate the industry. If we sit idly by and allow the politician to pass laws we can rest assured that it will become a political asset. Everyone interested in Kinematography should use their best efforts to keep the motion picture clear from all politics.

I wish to say that I am perfectly willing to leave the question of censorship to the Motion Picture Exhibitors convention, which will meet in New York in July, and to abide by the decision of that convention, but I desire exhibitors throughout the country to fully understand the censor board question. You ask for proof that the Ohio municipalities will establish local censor boards; here it is:

Cleveland has a local censor board which is almost as expensive to the manufacturers for that city alone as it would be to censor the pictures for the whole state. This statement has been made before witnesses by a direct representative of one of the largest film manufacturing companies in the world.

Dayton, Ohio, is now forming a new charter.

Canton, Ohio, passed upon a new charter.

Cincinnati is circulating a petition for a new charter.

If the Ohio censor board bill had not been passed everyone of these places, and still more, would have inserted in their new charters a clause providing for a censor board. But, as we now have a state censor law there will be no reason why the municipalities should insert the censorship clause in their new charters.

It is true that the Cleveland censor board was asked for by the film exchanges and some of the exhibitors. Cleveland has what is called a "try-out" board and the trial has been exceedingly disappointing to the manufacturers and exchanges. When the State Censor bill of Ohio becomes operative the Cleveland board will have no authority.

Senator Foraker's decision on the censor bill passed in Ohio, is that it covers the state and when the pictures are censored by the State Censor board, municipalities cannot prevent them being shown. This decision answers another objection to the Ohio law. As Senator Foraker has been governor of the state of Ohio twice and was in the United States senate for several years, we naturally feel that his legal opinion is worth something.

In regard to the censor congress the Ohio bill provides that the Ohio board can co-operate with other states in forming a censor congress to legally censor pictures, and that the action of the censor congress composed of the Ohio board and other state censor boards shall be legal, and that all pictures censored by the National censor congress shall be shown in the state of Ohio, as though they were censored in the state. In other words, if two or three other states will pass the same kind of a law that Ohio has passed and join Ohio in creating a censor congress, and will establish a congress at the most available places and will then secure the co-operation of all of the states by asking them to pass a state law permitting all pictures censored by the censor congress to go into their state without interference, then we will have a legally constituted censor board which will have authority, when an appeal is made, to eliminate certain objectional pictures. At the present time there is no board that can legally stop a picture. Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and a few other cities have boards that can stop a picture.

As to the politician possibly the argument might apply to some, but I believe that the governors of the various states of this Union are conscientious. honest men and that with the appointive power in their hands, I feel perfectly secure that they will do their duty fairly, honestly and efficiently.

If there is any discord among the exhibitors in regard to the establishment of a legal censorship board only an extremely limited few have expressed it so far. On the other hand many states are positively in favor of a censor congress. As they could not get a bill through that provided for a censor congress, the bills offered were killed. Not because they were censor bills but because they did not provide for the censor congress.

Everyone has a right to his own opinion, which I cheerfully grant. All I ask is that each one should be given a chance to be heard before the public and, as stated before, if the members of the league do not want a censor board I will be found sustaining and working for what they do want; but I must first have an expression at our National convention to see what the league desires. Very truly yours,

M. A. NEFF, President.

TEXAS CONVENTION.

Successful Meeting of Texas Exhibitors Held at Dallas—Officers and Delegates Elected.

The second annual convention of the Texas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held at the Oriental Hotel, Dallas, Texas, on May 28-29, 1913. The convention was attended by nearly a hundred exhibitors. Deputy National Organizer G. H. Wiley, of Kansas City, Mo., was chairman of the convention.

The opening meeting on Wednesday morning was called to order by Chairman Wiley at 10 o'clock, a.m. It was an open meeting, and film exchanges and machine men were well represented. There was a general discussion of the welfare of the league. The following officers were elected for a term of one year:

National Vice-President, T. P. Finnegan, Dallas.
President, J. S. Phillips, Ft. Worth.
First Vice-President, Theo. Clemmens, Beaumont.
Second Vice-President, John C. Penn, McKinney.
Secretary, Harry J. Gould, Dallas.
Treasurer, P. G. Cameron, Dallas.

The following delegates and alternates were elected to represent the State Branch at the National Convention at New York City, July 7-12, 1913: Delegates—Moye Wicks, Houston; W. C. Witchie, Dublin; E. J. Lampkin, Greenville; P. G. Cameron, Dallas; A. J. Xydias, Houston; J. S. Phillips, Ft. Worth; W. E. Crow, Electra. Alternates—J. C. Penn, McKinney; Jos. Clemmens, Beaumont; L. M. Ridout, Denison; M. L. Levine, Corsicana; N. Lewis, Tyler; Thos. D. Gardner, Corsicana; H. Mulkey, Clarendon.

It was unanimously voted to hold the next convention at Ft. Worth, Texas.

All credit is due National Vice-President T. P. Finnegan for the excellent manner in which he handled the arrangements of the convention, and Mr. Wiley left no stone unturned to see that the business end of the meeting was well taken care of.

DELWARE CONVENTION.

Motion picture exhibitors of Delaware held a metting at the Du Pont Hotel, Wilmington, Del., on May 26, and organized a State League affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. These officers were elected for the ensuing year: National Vice-president, James N. Ginns of Wilmington; President, Charles I. Beckett; vice-president, David R. Sablasky; secretary, Harry E. Klume; treasurer, Nicholas A. Jones.

A motion to adapt the Ohio constitution to the needs of the Delaware league was adopted and it was decided to hold another convention on Friday June 20, at the Du Pont Hotel. President Neff was there.

NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION JULY 5.

President Samuel H. Trigger of the New York State Exhibitors' League, has advised the members of that organization that the annual convention will be held at the Imperial Hotel, New York City, on Saturday, July 5, 1913. Officers and delegates to the National Convention will be elected at that time. A full attendance is requested.

MISSOURI CONVENTION DATES CHANGED.

Advice has been received from Secretary Welch, of the Missouri Exhibitors' League, that the Missouri convention dates have been changed from June 10 and 11 to June 23 and 24. The meeting will be held at Moberly, Mo. All motion picture exhibitors in the State are urged to attend. Particulars can be obtained from Secretary Welch, World Theater, 8th and Highland Streets, Kansas City, Mo., or from F. A. Selby, White Way Theater, Moberly.

CONVENTIONS SCHEDULED.

Missouri State Convention—At Springfield, June 23rd and 24th.

Michigan State Convention—At Vincent Hotel, Saginaw, June 10th and 11th.

Minnesota State Convention—At Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis, June 10th and 11th.

Washington State Convention—At Seattle, June 17th.

New York State Convention—Imperial, New York, July 5.

MANUFACTURERS TAKING SPACE AT EXPOSITION.

Ernest Boecker has taken space to boost his mechanical musical instruments.

The Famous Players Film Company have taken a reception booth where noted players will be assembled. Mr. Adolph Zukor thinks this exposition will prove of immense benefit to the entire industry.

Aschenbach & Miller, Inc., manufacturing chemists, will exhibit and demonstrate their Sanozone Disseminator and Perfume. This article is said to possess real merit.

The National Educational Film Company are planning to show the trade some new ideas.

The United Ticket Supply Company have a new idea they are anxious to bring to the exhibitors' notice.

There are now over fifty concerns represented on the exposition floor, and about fifteen others have declared their intention of getting in. No exposition in the history of the trade promises so great a success as the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art.

RISING WITH RAMO.

Will J. Rising, well known through his connection with various motion picture producing companies, is now doing some excellent work with the Ramo Company. He has several two-reel pictures under way.

LEVINE TRAVELING FOR SOLAX.

H. Z. Levine, the genial publicity man of the Solax Company, is on a business trip west for his company. Mr. Levine is a very capable young man and his charming personality will make friends for Solax wherever he goes.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

UNINFORMED and misguided people in this country have sought, and are yet seeking, to have a censorship of moving pictures in every important city and also in some cities that are not important. The danger to moving pictures in such censorship lies in the fact that it requires a special natural aptitude as well as a nice sense of discrimination to judge them rightly, and these requisites most of our would-be local censors do not possess.

In a recent article by the Turin correspondent of Kinematograph, it is shown that the system of censorship adopted in Italy for each individual town has resulted in complete failure. Now the Home Secretary has issued a new order, by which central censorship will be adopted in that country, and a special department has been established in Rome to meet the arrangement.

All Italian and foreign films intended for exhibition to the public must first be shown to the department, and the posters and advertising matter must be provided with a special stamp and official license. Six censors are employed, and in order to meet the expenses it is said that the government will put a new tax on production.

The new departure in Italy is framed somewhat after the English plan of censorship, which has been fully described by W. Stephen Bush, in the issue of May 17, of this paper, on page 683.

Exorbitant Rate Charged Chicago Exhibitors for Electricity.

The secretary of the Illinois State Branch No. 2, of the M. P. E. L. of America, sent out the following letter, on May 27, to every member of the league in Chicago, with the request that it be signed by the league member or members, giving the address and name of the theater; and mailed to the alderman of the ward in which the theater is situated:

"The Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America consists of about six hundred members engaged in exhibiting moving pictures as a business, in Chicago. We are all users of electricity, both for lighting and power, to a greater amount proportionately than any other line of business; and, under the method in use for charging for the consumption of electricity by the Commonwealth Edison Company, we pay an excessive and exorbitant rate as compared to other users.

"We would like you to use your best effort and endeavor to see that the rates are so adjusted that we may have an equitable and just rate as compared with that charged other consumers.

"We would suggest that the maximum demand rate as applied to moving picture exhibitors should be eliminated, as under its use we pay proportionately three times as much as any other consumers in Chicago.

"Thanking you kindly in advance for the efforts that you will take to remedy this defect, as it affects the moving picture exhibitors, we remain, etc."

This matter should be attended to with unremitting diligence until the discrimination against moving picture theaters, as now practised in the rate charged for electric service in Chicago, shall be equitably adjusted. There is no doubt that the matter can and will be so adjusted.

Death to Smut Songs in Berlin.

A special cable to the Chicago news from Berlin, dated May 28, states that two effective organizations are on the trail of the smut song in that city.

One organization is composed of young people, who take long walks and camping trips and sing together, not only keeping alive the German love for singing, but also instilling in the minds of future citizens a taste for clean songs. The other association works with the police, and through its large membership is able to detect the first appearance of objectionable songs.

Pastor Bohn, secretary of this association, says: "Germany has been visited in the last ten years by a scourge of immoral books, pictures and songs, which, through the efforts of the association, have practically disappeared. But victory is far slower in the matter of changing the deep-seated desire of the public for questionable things. We believe that greatly improved cinematograph shows, strictly censored cabarets and numerous clean burlesques, coupled with greater facilities for coming in touch with the finer things of life, will finally win the fight."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Mr. and Mrs. George Kleine, accompanied by their daughter Helen, sailed from New York for Paris, on the French steamship line, Thursday, June 5. Their tour will last six weeks.

The return of F. C. Aiken and I. Van Ronkel to this city last week was marked by expressions of more than ordinary fervor and good will. The offices of the General Film Co., on Wabash Ave., were fairly banked with flowers, the gifts of employees and exhibitors. Phones were kept busy echoing the general sentiment "Welcome home," and numerous calls were made by men in film circles, who accentuated their regards by appearing in person. Mr. Van Ronkel has settled down to hard work at his old desk, but it is understood that Mr. Aiken is here to spend a week's holiday rather than to resume his former duties at the present time, although he has been at work up to his elbows since his arrival.

W. R. Scates, manager of the City Hall Square Bldg., branch of the G. F. Co., left for New York, by the 20th Century, Sunday, June 1. It is rumored that Mr. Scates will be appointed manager of an important eastern branch in the near future. He is expected to return in a few days, and proceed to his new headquarters soon afterwards.

Harry J. Cohen has been appointed manager of the City Hall Square Bldg., branch of the G. F. Co., this city. Many of his old friends in the exhibiting and other branches of the film industry have been offering their felicitations during the week.

Chas J. Sandrock, the genial assistant manager of the Union Hotel and Restaurant, who has a host of friends among prominent film men throughout the country, left for New York, Monday, June 2, on a two months' trip to Europe. He was given a hearty send off at the Union before leaving, by a throng of admirers and well wishers. He is accompanied by his grown up son, and they sailed from New York, for Rotterdam, on the Uranium, June 5.

The Royal Albert Hall, London, which seats many thousands of people, has been secured for the presentation of Cines' "Quo Vadis?" The crowning mark of favor was bestowed on the production recently when King George, Queen Mary and the Princess Mary witnessed an afternoon presentation throughout. The moving picture is coming into its own.

In his presentation of "The Prisoner of Zenda," S. L. Rothapfel, of the Lyric, Minneapolis, in order to create atmosphere, had his entire orchestra, the soloists and the staff in front of the theater uniformed in costumes exactly like those worn by the actors in the photodrama. Governor Eberhart, of Minnesota, his staff and a notable gathering of people prominent in social, business and educational circles attended the opening presentation of this fine photodrama.

F. W. Young, secretary and state organizer of the Iowa state branch of the M. P. E. L. of America, was in the city Monday, June 2. Mr. Young has headquarters in Des Moines. He reported the affairs of the league and business with exhibitors prosperous throughout the state.

W. W. Watts, president of the Vaudette Amusement Co., and manager of the Vaudette Theater, Springfield, Ill., paid a call at the World office last week. He is very well pleased with the condition of business in his home city.

Hunter Bennett, manager of the Evanston Theater, Evanston, Ill., paid a visit to the World office last week. The Evanston, which had been running dramatic stock shows, has been presenting exclusive picture programs since May 26. The Evanston is owned by the Evanston Amusement Co. An admission of 10 cents is charged for the pictures, and licensed service is used.

E. H. Duffy, traveling representative of the Mutual Film Corporation, called at this office last week on his return from a prolonged trip through the South. Mr. Duffy reported prosperous business for his firm, and excellent business, generally, in the exhibiting business.

According to Ernest Shipman, of the "Stellar" Motion Picture Co., James K. Hackett will soon be seen in other successes, on the screen. At the present writing Mr. Shipman is waiting over in Chicago for Mr. Hackett's return from Milwaukee, where he is appearing in "The Bishop's Candlesticks." Mr. Shipman and other moving picture men of Los Angeles made a contract with Mr. Hackett for a picture based on this drama some time ago. It is rumored that further negotiations with Mr. Hackett, which may necessitate a hurried trip abroad, are being entered into.

C. A. G. Kuipers, manager of the New Devon Theater, Clark & Devon Sts., called at this office last week. The New Devon was opened April 23rd last. The house is equipped with a fine mechanical ventilating system, similar to that installed in many of the largest theaters in this city. The indirect lighting system is used. Service is furnished by the G. F. Co.'s branch City Hall Square Bldg., programs of three reels being offered at 5 cents. The capacity of the New Devon is 600. Mr. Kuipers is very well pleased with the box office returns thus far.

Hugh D. McIntosh, the Australian fight promoter, is expected to arrive in Chicago near the close of the week ending June 7. He has wired from Frisco to H. M. Russell, manager of the Golden State Moving Picture Co., regarding an option on the Australian rights for "100 Years of Mormonism," which has been produced by the company mentioned. Manager Russell is putting up at the Hotel Sherman.

Geo. H. Hines, owner of the Lyda Theater, Chicago, has made arrangements, it is understood, for the opening of the Auditorium in South Bend, Ind., for the presentation of moving pictures exclusively, at 10 cents admission. The Auditorium is controlled by Harry G. Somers, manager of the Knickerbocker Theater, New York City. It is said that Messrs. Somers and Hines will present picture programs on a percentage basis. If this venture is successful, it is the intention to continue moving pictures indefinitely at this house. The Auditorium seats 1000 people and both it and the Oliver have been the legitimate houses for years in South Bend. The first picture program (furnished by the G. F. C.), will be presented about the middle of June.

George Connell, one of the oldest employees of George K. Spoor, and at present in charge of the shipping department of the Essanay factory, this city, was united in matrimony to Miss Bernice Fuller, of St. Louis, Saturday, May 24. The bride is a native of St. Louis and prior to the wedding had just returned from a two year's trip through Europe, on which she was accompanied by her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Connell were presented with a handsome silver tea service recently by the employees of the Essanay studio, factory and city office. Harry McRae Webster made the presentation speech in a very happy manner. Mr. and Mrs. Connell will make their home at 5137 Kenmore Ave.

ALASKAN EXHIBITOR VISITS THE WORLD.

Among the visitors at the offices of the Moving Picture World, Tuesday, June 3, was W. D. Gross, of Juneau, Alaska. He is an exhibitor in the little town of Juneau, which is something like 4,000 miles from New York City and has 2,000 population. Two shows a night are given in Mr. Gross' house, each consisting of four reels of pictures for which he charges an admission price of twenty-five cents. Only one matinee is given during the week and that is on Saturday, when the admission prices are five and ten cents. Mr. Gross' house has a seating capacity of 221 persons, and if he has an audience of 70 or 80 persons at each show he feels that his house is "packed." It is very seldom that he has over a hundred persons in his theater. Even at this price and his "large" audience, Mr. Gross says that he is making just as much money as some other exhibitors, who are playing to an average of 400 persons a night at the five and ten cent admission price. Even though the town is small, Mr. Gross is not without a competitor, there being one other picture house in Juneau.

BALSAM AMUSEMENT COMPANY BUILDING NEW THEATER.

The Balsam Amusement Company, of Bath, Me., owning and operating the New Columbia Theater in that city, is building another picture house at Biddeford, Me. The Balsam Company opened its house at Bath on Monday, May 26, and the receipts taken in on that night's business were surprisingly large. No doubt much of the success of this house can be attributed to the energy of Mr. F. H. Burt, president of the company. Mr. Burt was formerly connected with the firm of Jerome H. Remick, music publishers, in the capacity of chief salesman, and is well known in the music publishing business. W. M. Burt is vice-president of the company. We feel confident that any house opened by Messrs. Burt & Burt will thrive under their management, judging from the success of their first theater.

REMARKABLE SUCCESS OF "QUO VADIS."

George Kleine's Production Doing Record Business in Several Cities—Imitators Getting Busy.

George Kleine, with his marvelous photo-drama production of "Quo Vadis," has started a "Quo Vadis" craze all over the country. Many leading stock companies are producing the play in dramatic form, there is a heavy demand from all the booksellers for Sienkiewicz's romantic novel, from which both play and photo-drama were adapted, and hosts of lecturers and public speakers are taking up the subject for platform work. Mr. Kleine's success has been wonderful, both artistically and financially, and, as is always the case, there is the usual horde of imitators who cannot conceive an original idea themselves, but when another man does, they immediately copy it and trade on his brains and ingenuity. In the present case, however, Mr. George Kleine has the advantage because the whole world knows the Cines creation which Mr. Kleine controls exclusively for this country is a stupendous affair, which no other company over here could attempt to approach.

As an illustration, however, of the lengths to which these modern pirates will go, an effort was made last week to steal the seventh reel of the picture now being exhibited in Chicago at McVicker's Theater. A stranger called upon the operator in the booth and said that the main office of George Kleine, which happens also to be in Chicago, had sent him for Reel No. 7. Fortunately the operator was a wise young man and suspecting some trick, refused to deliver the reel without an order and until he had confirmed it. Consequently the trick failed.

The seventh reel is one of the biggest features in a spectacular form of the production. It shows the great arena scenes where the thousands of Roman citizens see the chariot races, the gladiatorial combats, the Christians being thrust to the lions and the conquest of the wild bull by the giant slave Ursus. It is a reel that cannot be made in this country and is one of the big stumbling blocks to all imitators, pirates or thieves.

All the George Kleine "Quo Vadis" companies now established in New York, Chicago, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore are doing enormous business, outclassing the receipts of the big dramatic attractions even in season. A Southern company opened on June 2nd at Norfolk, Va., and the following week companies will be established in half a dozen of the other important cities of the country.

PHOTOPLAYWRIGHTS LAST DINNER.

A Merry Gathering at Keen's Chop House Enjoy Sumptuous Repast and Compare Notes on Photoplaywrighting.

Closing the season of its activities the Inquest Club, which is composed of a number of motion picture playwriters of New York and vicinity, gave the final photoplaywrights dinner of the year at Keen's Chop House, in West 36th street, New York City, on Saturday evening, May 31. There was a goodly number of photoplaywriters and their friends present and a pleasant evening was enjoyed by all.

When the party sat down at the well laden tables "Pop" Hoadley, scenario editor of the Universal Film Company, was introduced as master of ceremonies and, in a few well chosen and spirited words, invited the members and guests to "go to it."

During the course of the proceedings remarks were made by Carl C. Gregory of the Thanhouser Company, Marc E. Jones, George Hennessy, Harry Hoyt, Rev. Dr. Stockton, Mrs. Bronson and Epes W. Sargent, photoplaywrights; Ben. P. Schulberg, of the Famous Players Company; Jack Byrnes of the Universal and others.

Mr. Byrnes gave the assembled playwrighters some very good tips upon the relation of the camera to their work. Others spoke interestingly of some of their experiences in writing and marketing photoplays.

Mr. Schulberg made the announcement for the first time that the Famous Players would feature Mary Pickford (Little Mary), in a series of two and three reel features.

Among those present were: Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, Miss Evelyn Stark, Carl C. Gregory, (Thanhouser), Mrs. Owen Bronson, of San Francisco, Jack Byrne, (Universal), Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Black, Miss Grace Moray Lease, Ben-Hur Lease, Herman E. L. Beyer, of Newark Town Talk, Joe Roach, (Pathe), Elmer W. Romine, John S. Thorp and Dr. R. Ralston Reed, of Morristown, George Hennessy, E. M. Wickes, of The Writer's Magazine, Benjamin Barondess, Edward J. Montagne, Brooklyn Citizen, R. O. Runnels, Miss Reba L. Van Hook, Marc Edmund Jones, of Chicago, Miss Ethel Van de Veer, Mr. and Mrs. Harry O. Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Kellette, of New Rochelle, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Hoff, B. P. Shulberg, Pop Hoadley, Mr. and Mrs. Epes W. Sargent.

"Clean Comedy."

SINCE the publication of the letter of Brother Gerald in the issue of April 26th, we have received numerous requests for the list of the "cleanest kind of comedy" and as the requests have come from various and widely separated parts of the country as well as many different kinds of workers, we give below a list of some of the good comedies released during the months of January and February, 1913. We have seen most, but not all of them and it is quite possible that others as good or even better have escaped our notice, consequently we shall be very glad to receive additions and corrections to the list and to publish them in these columns, giving due credit to the senders except in cases where we are asked to withhold it. If this plan meets with approval we will follow up the present list with supplements, which can be clipped out and kept for reference by those who need "clean comedy" for their entertainments. Please tell us frankly what you wish.

Edison June Releases.

We wish to call attention to the following list of releases put out by the Edison company in June, which has just been sent to us by Mr. John Hardin, the company's assistant manager of negative production. "Some Sports In and Around Los Angeles, California" (Je4); "Along the Nile" (Je13); "The Grand Canyon, Arizona" (Je18); Pyramids and Sphinxes" (Je23); "The Fly" (Je28); "While John Bolt Slept" (Je7); "The Evil Thereof" (Je20), and "Mary Stuart" (Je21). The second and fourth are the first in the series of Egyptian and Palestine pictures that were made last winter by the Edison cameraman, who is now in Australia or the Philippines, and the fourth is one of the company's excellent series on public hygiene. The third will be very acceptable, as the only other picture made of the Grand Canyon is a short split reel released by the Nestor company over a year ago. "While John Bolt Slept" is the story of a man who has been grinding the poor all his life and whose conscience is awakened in such a way that he makes proper reparation. "The Evil Thereof" deals with the prevalent conditions in department stores and shows how changes for the better were brought about. "Mary Stuart" is a three-reel special and is a photo-dramatization of Schiller's famous play on the well-known history of Mary Queen of Scots.

Selig's "Their Stepmother."

This is a child story comedy-drama and is one of the best things that Selig has done. It goes away ahead of his "Love Before Ten" in story, in photography, and in acting. The children read in their story book, "And she was a stepmother, and she beat them, and made them work hard, and did not give them enough to eat"; so when papa told them of his coming re-marriage, they run away, and are found by father's fiancee, who plays "fairy godmother" till the children telephone papa to come and marry her and keep the bad stepmother away. It is dainty, quaint, charming, and Kathlyn Williams at her best.

Releases April 27 to May 3.

This list includes, in addition to the list of regular releases for the week ending May 3rd, the list of feature releases for the month of April. For the explanation of abbreviations, etc., see volume 16, page 691.

MORE ABOUT THE VALUABLE PICTURES.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

A correspondent from Illinois writes asking for more articles on this page emphasizing "the educational value of the pictures." While it is possible that almost every phase of the usefulness of the pictures has been touched upon from time to time, it is possible that certain emphasis or even a wise repetition may at times be valuable. Our correspondent also writes that he has "The Moving Picture Educator's articles reprinted in his local papers"; this is very encouraging, and, inasmuch as we have from time to time suggested this very plan, we cannot but believe that many others are doing the same. To further encourage such of our friends it is a pleasure to help them in their endeavors to make more widespread the knowledge that there is more than passing value in the average picture. It is perhaps wise to make a distinction between "The educational value of the pictures" than of "The value of the educational pictures"; this latter is always conceded, while the former is sometimes questioned. If we begin by eliminating the abuses of the picture for which individuals of a doubtful nature and with a more than doubtful purpose are responsible, we find that the average picture and the well-conducted picture house possess positive educational value.

A recent New York police commissioner (than whom no one else is better able to speak) in speaking of the fact that the great majority of crimes were committed by young men; advocated the use of well-conducted picture places, especially on the Sabbath days, for the purpose of providing an attraction for those to whom the churches were not attractive and who could not be reached by the ordinary means. The attractive power of the picture has always been one of its strongest features, in this sense therefore it is an immediate success; and the long sought for answer to the question—"how to attract" certain classes is solved and educators admit the same; here then is the first great victory to the credit of the educational value of the picture, for it has succeeded in one of the most trying problems in sociology.

The next step is the class of exhibition, and the nature of the picture. Again a distinct advantage must be recorded, the whole scope of picture possibilities is on the screen. The time has passed for unhealthy pictures, the pictures of the future will be increasingly of a higher order, everybody in the world of moving pictures is educated, or being educated to the production to that which will edify and not debase; as a result, the common standard is one which a few years ago would have been considered a very high standard.

Superior to the vaudeville and kindred "shows" where ribald songs and suggestive evil ideas are common, and where it is boasted that everything "has a meaning all its own," the moving picture is prepared with a view to the fact that it is expected to give pleasure that will profitably entertain, and that it is subject to criticism, and possibly censure if it does not. Because of this, the present-day exhibition tends more and more towards an elevated taste. The Exhibitors' League also has imparted a spirit of honor among its members which, spreading through the rank and file, has a tendency to secure that "esprit du corps" which is always so valuable in any organization which values true honor. The various conventions are of additional educational power, so that the moving picture people themselves are becoming jealous of their own interests. Under such conditions the foundations are being generally laid for the educational value of the moving picture as an entertainer apart and distinct from the separate value of the educational picture itself. The recent development of the "feature film" has given impetus to the better order of things, in almost every instance the subjects are of a superior order; the cost of production is too great to admit of anything but the best subjects and work, so that which is of a positive immediate, as well of a permanent future value is alone produced. The educational value of moving pictures is now more of fact than argument; as by shunning sensationalism, every exhibitor need only have that which it attractive and good.

An Appropriate and Timely Endorsement.

In timely substantiation of the above article an Indiana newspaper publishes the following: "A Western clergyman recently expressed himself as envious of the opportunity of the moving picture exhibitor in his powers of usefulness and constant occasions for doing good. Without doubt hundreds of exhibitors are unconscious of both their powers as well as the attendant opportunities." This page has many times pointed out to the exhibitor how he has the first chance in his own hands to influence those about him for mutual profit; many have responded even to the extent of writing for advice and help how best to further their interests in these ways. Another clergyman finds that while the picture house does not hurt the church, it does possess the greater "drawing power" and he is compelled to study the question on its merits, another occasion for an alliance between the exhibitor and the minister.

A Vocational School.

In these days when the broad desires of social-educational workers are being directed to the ideas of vocational schools, the industrial picture will occupy an important place, not only in bringing all forms of industrialism to the knowledge of the youth, but in the building of character.

Building is constructive, robbing is destructive, the boy chose the building; it appealed to his educational aspirations, it was congenial to his ambitions, it fed his hungry desires, it filled him with future hopes.

The writer does not recall any incident so pregnant with valuable evidence of the combined influences of the educational picture as the record of this boy's answer, it is one of the most positive arguments in favor of the class of picture the young world is hungry for; and negatively, it is one of the most searching arraignments of the class of picture the world is not looking for, and which is only tolerated because they are forced upon it, and is only approved by those who are just the ones who should not see them. This incident certainly cannot appeal to the writer more than to any other thinking person, it is therefore not necessary to enlarge upon its merits and deserts, anyone can see the value of its application to educational cinematography in particular, as also to the whole realm of moving pictures in general; we are living in wonderfully enlightening times, and the moving picture is proving the greatest enlightener, and servant of enlightenment, the world has ever been favored with.

AEROPLANE PICTURES IN KINEMACOLOR.

The latest addition to the Kinemacolor library is a series of films showing aeroplane flights at Hendon and elsewhere. The pictures are remarkable because of the skill that is manifested in taking them, aeroplanes in flight being about as difficult a subject as the cameraman has to photograph in the ordinary course of things. The speed of the aerial craft is so great that it is always a matter of difficulty to keep the eye of the camera on the object. These pictures are also remarkable, however, on account of some wonderful views in which an aeroplane swoops over the head of the cameraman, some thrilling scenes being the result. The airman who was so skilled as to direct his craft in this manner was Marcel Desoutter, and the photographer whose nerve enabled him to operate the Kinemacolor camera under such trying circumstances was A. Mariner, who recently returned from the Balkans, where he was engaged in reproducing war scenes during the recent struggle. M. Desoutter, by the way, relates with a smile that another cameraman for whom he gave a similar demonstration of aeroplane steering, took fright when he saw the aeroplane apparently descending upon his head and bolted. The film concludes with some beautiful views of a daring evening flight over Lake Geneva.

AMERICAN MOVES INTO ITS NEW STUDIO.

Last week was characterized by a lot of hustle not connected with the making of negatives, for the American forces at Santa Barbara moved into their handsome new studio quarters in the Mission city. $50,000 has been spent in the erection of an edifice which is not only a distinct addition to the architectural possessions of the town, but an ideal studio as well

Notes from the Studios

MISS BILLIE WEST, whose photograph is herewith printed, is now the leading woman with the second company of the American Film Company at its studios in Santa Barbara, Cal. Miss West, as may well be seen by her picture, has a pleasing screen personality. She has had considerable stage experience, before going into pictures having been in musical comedy and as an ingenue in stock in St. Louis. Her best characterization with the Vitagraph company was in the lead in "Three Girls and a Man"; with Pathe Freres she played leads, her best there being "The White Rose"; with the Broncho company one of her best pieces was a recent release, "The Child of War." Miss West is a lover of horses and enjoys the Western type of chases. Of sports she also is fond; it is said that last summer at New Rochelle she bested in a swimming match one of the young women experts of the Thanhouser company. Miss West, who, by the way, admits to twenty-one summers and winters, likes especially well to play with children; to be cast in a picture with a baby for a fellow-player is to give her a favorite part. Her apartment at the Arlington Hotel, in Santa Barbara, is furnished with her own antique furniture, carefully selected by Miss West in New York and forwarded to her since accepting the position with the American company.

William N. Selig recently returned to his home office in Chicago from a prolonged visit to his studio and animal farm at Los Angeles. While away he completed plans for the acquisition of extensive tracts of land, for an enlargement of studio facilities, for extending his already large zoo, and for the importation of rare plants and foreign vegetation. The animal farm at Los Angeles comprised 320 acres. The additions will more than double this area. To a collection of animals valued at $65,000 will be added others now en route valued at $50,000. The company has agents abroad instructed to add to this already large menagerie. Mr. Selig intends to send to the Los Angeles studios additional companies of actors. He also has arranged to buy a home in the California city and to stay there four to six months each year. It is estimated that the holdings of the Selig Company in Los Angeles alone, will total nearly a million dolars.

Thomas H. Ince, vice-president and producer of the Broncho Motion Picture Company, writes the WORLD, asking it to deny the statement recently printed in a Western paper that Miller Brothers and Brooks have acquired the plant of the Broncho Company at Santa Ynez Canyon, in Santa Monica. The company named, Mr. Ince says, has no interest in the New York Motion Picture Company, or the Broncho Company.

Miss Maude Fealy is to be a member of the Thanhouser stock company. Miss Fealy has had an extensive stage career, having played in the support of Sir Henry Irving, E. S. Willard, William Gillette, Richard Mansfield, William Collier, Nat Goodwin and Robert Hilliard.

Miss Pearl White has returned to the Crystal studio after a trip through the east, in which she played a three days' engagement at the Olympic Theater in Leominster, Mass., and at the Wizard Theater in South Norwalk, Conn. She enjoyed the experience so much that she contemplates another trip in the near future.

Albert W. Hale is hard at work in Santa Barbara, Cal., as the producer for the premier company at the American's studios. Mr. Hale, who is thirty-two years old, came to the United States a dozen years ago from his home in Bordeaux, France. The fact that he knew no word of English did not deter him from going ahead. His first work here was the production of the spectacular "Crusade of Jerusalem." After an extended experience in musical shows he turned to pictures, which he says he likes best of all. He was with Pathe Freres and with the Vitagraph Company as producer and later with the Thanhouser Company. His last work in New York was with Edwin S. Porter of the Famous Players in the production of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Marc MacDermott's first message after arriving in England is one of despair. Wonderful actor though he undoubtedly is, he is a rank failure as a sailor, for he was deathly sick. All went well the first day out, but then he "ate something that did not agree with him," and prayed for sudden death all the rest of the way over. MacDermott wrote that he had always loved his native England, but that it had never looked so good to him before.

Charles M. Seay has left the Edison studio for an extended trip through the south, where he will make his headquarters in Rome, Ga. With the director are Mabel Trunnelle, Bliss Milford, Herbert Prior, Harry Beaumont and Arthur Housman. They will make a number of films, using places of historical interest as settings.

Miss Louise Glaum, clever leading woman with Nestor's comedy company, will work in Kay-Bee and Broncho films, under the direction of Thomas H. Ince.

Adam Kessel, Jr., president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has become a yachting devotee. He has purchased a veritable floating palace named Orson, and intends cruising in it to his summer home on Lake Champlain this summer.

LOTTIE PICKFORD WITH THE PILOT COMPANY.

Thirteen years ago Miss Pickford joined the Valentine Stock Company in Toronto, Canada, where she was born, and continued in the theatrical profession up to about three or four years ago, when she gave up the legitimate stage for the moving picture profession. Miss Pickford was with Chauncey Olcott for three years. In the moving picture field she has been with the Biograph, Kalem and Imp companies. Although only nineteen years of age, Miss Pickford has had a wonderful experience, and is well fitted for her new field. Miss Pickford says she thinks her engagement with the Pilot company will be permanent.

Everyone will look for Pilot with a new interest. The first Pilot picture in which Miss Pickford appears will be released June 5th, "For Old Times' Sake."

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE Board of Aldermen have passed the motion picture ordinance at last. The class in aldermanics will now answer: (a) What have yellow taxi cabs to do with motion pictures? (b) Or the Grand Jury? (c) Who woke up the Board of Aldermen? One at a time, please. (d) How many Nebuchadnezzars are on the Board of Aldermen? In plain English, how many of the Board saw the handwriting upon the wall and almost crippled themselves to get on the majority side of the question as to whether or not there should be a six hundred? Verily, a Grand Jury dose is good for all classes at times.

A daily newspaper of this city last week published on its first page a telegraphic item stating that a Mr. Maguire, Lieutenant of Police of Providence, R. I., the police censor of the city, had ordered the discontinuance of motion pictures of Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter." The item stated "Maquire says his reason for taking this action was that, in his opinion, the story and pictures are obnoxious and disrespectful to clergymen."

* * *

In the same paper, and on the same day, appeared a communication bearing upon a subject entirely foreign to motion pictures in which the writer said: "We raise monuments to our famous dead. Can we not offer instead to the memory of Nathaniel Hawthorne this testimony of our loving thanks for "The Scarlet Letter," "Twice Told Tales," etc.

* * *

Can you beat it? No better evidence of the divergency of opinions on the question of censorship is required; and it is quite certain that the personal opinion of a petty official should not be accepted as final.

Walking into a scenario department the other day an editor was found in a questionable state. Not intoxication, but midway of hysterical laughter and wrath. "Read this," said he, as he handed me a short manuscript, prefaced by the following: "If you put this in moving pictures send me the money by express money order." The manuscript, in brief, read: "It was all April Fool. One day a girl was walking along a country lane and met a young man, she told him a mad bull was tossing a man on the other side of the barn. The young man hurried to the place, but saw nothing. It was April Fool Day. A few years later the couple became married. One moonlight night, while they were sitting on the front porch, the wife told the young man that dogs were tearing up the lettuce patch. The young man went to see and met a bull that chased him and caught him on the rear porch, and hurt him. The young man returned to his wife and told her never to do that again, and she didn't. And they lived happy ever after.

"Now," exclaimed the scenario editor, "that is the kind of stuff that chumps send in to us to absorb our valuable time and rush to anarchistic friends to have us roasted because we fail to pay them, or return their manuscripts, although they fail to enclose return postage. Plot? Why certainly that manuscript contains a plot. I've been watching the papers to see if the author has laid claim to "A Fool There Was."

A few months ago a young man took hold of a motion picture theater that had run down to a point that the original owner almost abandoned it. The new proprietor started in with a pretty good service and inaugurated a policy of starring certain makes of pictures. On Mondays and Wednesdays, he presented programmes made up solely of the best pictures of one manufacturer, the lists on other nights being mixed. He got the people coming and the house is now on easy street. The young proprietor contends that patrons of motion pictures have their favorites in the line of productions and when they have a chance to see a variety of their choice they consider it "their night" and become steady patrons. Some people favor the productions of one company and others those of another and when you get the pulse and give them their choice you have a steady patronage. The mixed programmes get them, too, because they "get going" and will go, although they like the other night the best. He's right. The successful picture house manager is the one who gets acquainted with his patrons, like men in the mercantile business. He must use good judgment and get the pulse. As soon as the people find he knows what they want and gives it to them more than half the battle is won by the manager.

Did you ever see such beastly weather? Scores of airdomes that were to open last week display the postponement signs. Many looked for an early season, but the chill and wet sandwich weather has checked their expectations.

By the way, a very good plan has been put in operation by two well-known exhibitors in this city. Perhaps others may profit by the example set. One owns an in-door place, the other has an airdome. A few weeks ago the latter started preparations for his season. The weather indications were quite promising at the time and the in-door man scented serious competition. The two got together and entered into a written agreement providing that when the weather is unfavorable, the in-door house is used, and vice versa. Each owner retains full control of his place. The expenses of each night are deducted and the net profits divided equally. One of the parties to the agreement said: "This is an experiment, and I believe it will pan to the good. When I opened the airdome last season, Mr. ——— closed his house. Some weeks I had as many as three rainy, or threatening nights and remained closed, so both of us were shut up and neither of us got any money. So far this season I have been sharing in his receipts, but there will be a string of nights when he will look upon me as the good samaritan."

The new picture house now being erected on Park Row will be one of the smallest in the city and stand upon one of the most valuable pieces of ground in Greater New York. Yet the owner is confident that he will make money, and many acquainted with the picture business agree with him. The house is to seat but 273 people. The admission is to be ten cents. Less than half a block distant is a ten-cent house of 299 capacity that has been making money for years, notwithstanding the annual rental is said to be $15,000, a fraction less than $300 per week. There are some pretty gritty people in the motion picture business.

All sensible people will agree with District Attorney Whitman of New York County, when he says there are plenty laws at the present time. All that is necessary is to elect people to enforce the laws. If some people could absorb this idea there would be no need for the censorship discussions. No film manufacturer or exhibitor can do anything that cannot be reached by some arm of the law. In fact there are so many remedies that at times there is danger of confliction. It is pleasing to note that many of the radicals have at last awakened to the true duty of censors, which is to intelligently view for the purpose of eliminating vice and immorality, and not to find fault.

It is said that many wealthy people of the nation are keeping moving picture camera men busy taking views about their estates and other holdings, so that the scenes may be perpetrated for the benefit of their descendants. No less than eight contracts were made with film manufacturers for pictures of this character within a recent period. This line of the business has assumed such proportions that several men in this city have abandoned newspaper work and devote their entire time to bringing the wealthy in touch with the film makers.

ANOTHER RUMOR IS "SQUASHED."

The World may place its fist flat on another rumor in denying that it is the intention of C. J. Hite, president of Thanhouser, to make general transfers of Thanhouser players to the Majestic, of which he is the new producing manager. The report entered into being through the recent engagement of "Billy" Garwood by Majestic. Garwood had been three years with Thanhouser. Excepting Garwood, states Mr. Hite, there was one solitary other Thanhouserite to join Majestic. Ann Drew was this solitary one, and as she had been engaged in Los Angeles last winter for the Thanhouser "stock" then there, and this company was later ordered back to New Rochelle, Miss Drew received Mr. Hite's permission to change to the Majestic forces, who continue to operate in Los Angeles. Miss Drew's first Majestic work is as the favorite-girl-at-college in "The Fraternity Pin," release of Sunday, June 1.

A Little Late.

SOMEONE very properly suggests that we tell what that Wunderle paragraph in a recent issue was all about. Reference was made to an earlier matter, but a diligent search shows that the original paragraph is still unprinted.

Since it is still useful to the out of town man, it is here given, though the answer was supplied before the question was propounded in print.

Wants a Decision.

A. G. Wunderle, of the Pastime theater, Brooklyn, sends us an Anniversary Week program of special features. He writes:

> The enclosed program is submitted to you for a decision. Barnum and Bailey will entertain in Ridgewood next week. I decided that it would be to my advantage to spend a few extra dollars. Several neighboring managers claim that the extra money spent and special program at this time shows poor judgment. We refer the matter to you and will appreciate your opinion.

There are two ways of looking at this. The first, and more general way is to regard the visit of the circus as akin to "strikes, floods and the Visitations of Providence," as the shipping receipts put it. In other words you curl up your toes and play dead until the circus gets out of town with all the money. That's what some of the big New York dramatic houses have been doing.

The other way is to fight.

We don't think that if we had a house we would go off and die. We have not the slightest idea that we could put Barnum and Bailey out of business and we wouldn't try to, but we would figure that Barnum and Bailey could not take all the amusement money in Brooklyn along with them when they left town and we'd make a fight for some of it. We would make a fight on just the lines that Mr. Wunderle has. We would make our show so much better than usual that even the people who spend their half dollars for the big show would squeeze out a couple of extra nickels for the pictures. Instead of arranging for a temporary burial, Mr. Wunderle (you'll remember he invented the Telephonographical lecture), put in a two part special every day and ran one of the "What Happened to Mary" series in regular order, one a night. That makes practically three reels of specials. It costs him a lot of extra money, but we think he got his back on better than an even break and he had the satisfaction of staying on earth when the others were in a trance. We hope that Mr. Wunderle will let us know how he made out.

He was by no means alone in his "Anniversary" last week. We noticed a couple of other houses doing the same thing. Perhaps the Marathon, facing Prospect Park, will send in a report, too.

Snookums Says.

W. L. Jennings, of the Lyceum Theater, Monroe, La., offered prizes to call attention to the new Newlywed's series, which he announces as

A Marvelous Eclair Pictorial Triumph,
Grimming with Giggles, Laughs, Shouts and Roars.
SNOOKUMS SAYS:

> He will give fourteen 10c tickets to the first person who forms the largest number of words from "THE NEWLYWEDS' BABY." Seven tickets to the person sending in the second largest number of words and one admission on "Snookum Night" for the next ten. Now is the time to get busy and form your words. EVERYBODY IS ELIGIBLE.

That Back View Contest.

J. A. Snider, of the Grand Theater, Bessemer, Ala., tried the back view identification contest and gives a word of warning that twelve pictures will outrun the interest in the contest. He thinks that the best results will be had by holding the contest to a week.

He uses the drawing feature, which is more or less under the lottery law, but otherwise his scheme is well planned. He writes that most of the winners promptly gave theater parties and used the tickets all up. Here is his printed matter:

> FOR OUR Patrons' Amusement we will conduct a Head Guessing Contest. We Have Made Slides of Twelve Prominent Bessemer Men's Heads—back view—one with hat on and one bare headed. These slides will be shown on screen, one man each day.
> RULES OF CONTEST.
> EACH CONTESTANT will be furnished with a guessing blank with each admission, on which to write their guess, their name and address, which will be deposited in box in lobby. Each night all cards which have correct name will be taken from the box and the following night at 8:30 o'clock, the first drawn from the box of correct answers, will entitle holder, if present in the house, to 25 Admission Tickets; the 2nd card to 15 Admission Tickets; the 3rd card to 10 Admission Tickets.

Mr. Snider's son is a clever amateur photographer and made the slides at the cost of about a quarter each, but any local photographer will make the slides at small cost or perhaps for nothing if you carry "Slides by Blank" in your advertising.

Rich Words.

We are lost in admiration of the man who runs the Up-to-Date Drug Store, Lamar, Colorado. His opulent language is soft to the ear. This is not said in joke, either, we mean it. F. C. Pinch, of the Lyric, took up the country-people matinee scheme, and this is the advertising that the drug store man sent out with his allotment of free tickets:

> BE OUR GUESTS AT THE LYRIC THEATER
> Saturday Afternoon, April 26, 1913.
> Take the complimentary ticket attached to the head of this invitation and use it. It will give you free admission to a two hours' photoplay that ought to please you.
> NOW WE WANT YOU TO BE SURE AND COME.
> This is our effort to show you that we want to merit your friendship.
> If you do not come we shall at least feel a little hurt about it, for this is offered to you with a hearty good will and no strings to it whatever.
> Bring every member of your family, the more the merrier.
> There is only one ticket enclosed but we have hundreds more and we will gladly give you all you can possibly use if you will only let us known how many you want.
> The UP-TO-DATE DRUG CO. never was known to be stingy at any time, to any one. Bring all the family and if we have happened to miss anyone with this letter just get them too and bring them all in.
> Let's Just Fill That Pretty Little Theater to the Brim.
> Now here is another point: We are offering these tickets to ONLY COUNTRY PEOPLE.
> This is the day for Rural friends and customers only.
> You will not be bothered or crowded by a bunch of town people.
> Now once more, we ask you, won't you please accept this invitation.
> Your friends,
> The UP-TO-DATE DRUG CO.

There are two questions as to the value of the line about not being bothered by the town people. We think that this might get more than one rural goat, but for the greater part this plea is so glitteringly generous that we are passing it on that other managers who now make use of the scheme can show it to their advertisers.

Rose to the Occasion.

C. A. Riffe, of the Victory Theater, San Rafael, Cal., sends a photograph of his house decorated with red and white roses and weeping-willow branches, carrying out the idea of the Vitagraph story "Red and White Roses." To help out the scheme, Mr. Riffe, who is seen in the picture, is dressed in white, with a white rose on one lapel of his coat and a red one on the other. Mr. Riffe, who is known as the Moving Picture King, was first in the field in California with a straight motion picture show, opening the Victory, Santa Barbara, in November, 1905. Other houses, all bearing the auspicious name of Victory, were opened in Monterey, in 1907; Ukiah, 1908; San Rafael and Marysville, 1910, and Redding, 1911. He has stuck to Licensed releases in all that time. This is quite in contrast to New York, where some managers change every second week.

Wesley and the Chickens.

Wesley, the man who "says so," has been getting mixed up with the chickens—been giving them out as souvenirs, in fact, but one man would not take his home so Wesley wrote we could have it if we wanted—and us with an office on Broadway! Anyhow, Wesley gave out the chicken dinners and not only made a lot of fun for the audience but got a big advertisement through exhibiting them in a store window first. Here is what he said about it:

> CHICK-CHICK-CHICK
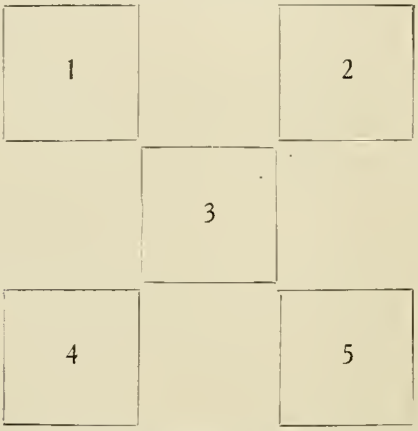
> There are two kinds of Chickens, one crosses the street because there is a millinery store on the other side, and the other, well cheer up anyway and come to the Gardner Theater to-night and get your chicken supper, it may be a Chick-Clucker-or Crower. Whoever gets the coveted wishbone will be glad to carry the bird home. Now don't ask any questions how we got them, they are good and fat and can be seen in Hager & Houghton's window.

He adds that he just added the Colle Opera House, Turners Falls, Mass., to his circuit, and contributes this chatter:

> As my stenographer is on her vacation (honeymoon), I am writing this myself, so excuse errors, as sometimes I hit the wrong letter. Most managers marry their stenographers, but I think it cheaper to hire one. I played Primrose & Dockstader last Saturday. Dockstader came in just as I got to the theater and was asking about the hotels. My treasurer says "The Windsor is the hotel, three fifty a day." Lew says: "Do they give you a bath," and me foolishly says no, you have to take it yourself. He looked me over and says, "You take one it will do you good," but afterwards we put our foot on the brass rail and everything was lovely.

It Can Be Done.

Ed. J. Caldwell, The Royal Theater, Danville, Ind., sends a puzzle card. It must be interesting, because by the time it got to us it had been cut apart and solved by the boss. It is printed on stiff card and shows six boxes, each 2¼ inches square. Five of these carry the names of five features and the sixth explains the conditions, which are that the other five must be put together to form a perfect square. It is a geometrical impossibility, but can be done by arranging the squares in this fashion:



Tickets good for one week's admissions are offered as prizes to the first five presenting the solution. Perhaps not many will catch the trick, but almost everyone will puzzle over it and in doing so will get the titles of the features.

Glad To See It.

We don't know just how it happened, but Josiah Pearce and Sons issued a special announcement for "From the Manger to the Cross," at the Arcade Theater, Lake Charles, La., and didn't use a single line of Old English. They use, instead, what seems to be the old Tiffany Upright, and get a handsome and distinctive invitation that looks much more like copper plate than the old standby of the unprogressive printer. Good ink and a fine paper help the appearance, but the type is the main point. It is an announcement in keeping with the dignity of the subject and a credit to the house, which is a branch of the New Orleans firm.

J. W. Nichols, of the Gem Theater, Somerset, Ohio, sends in a six-page folder with the explanation that the pictures have suffered some hard knocks in the past out his way and that he is trying to win for them the respect to which they are entitled.

There are five pages of reprint of some article on the pictures, sane, temperate and yet clearly setting forth the usefulness of the film. The sixth page follows on with a brief talk about the house in the same vein. It is just the sort of thing that will reach those aimed at and Mr. Nichols is doing missionary work for the entire business when he takes up his own little end of the fight. Each folder was accompanied by this slip, showing that Mr. Nichols stands ready to prove his point at his own cost:

> This coupon can be exchanged at the box office for a regular admission ticket, free of charge, any evening except Saturday.
> J. W. Nichols.
> AS AN INDUCEMENT FOR YOU TO BECOME ACQUAINTED WITH THE CLASS OF PICTURES SHOWN AT THE GEM THEATER, I TAKE THE LIBERTY OF ENCLOSING YOU THIS COMPLIMENTARY COUPON AND TRUST YOU WILL USE IT IN THE NEAR FUTURE.

Men like this are a credit to the business and they are the ones who still will run houses when the wildcat manager has given up in disgust and passed on to something else, declaring that there is no money in pictures.

We regret that the folder runs rather too long for this space; but perhaps Mr. Nichols will be good enough to send one to those sending a return cover.

If every manager in the country would do his own personal share toward uplifting the business, it would be no time at all before the stigma was lifted from the pictures where it still exists.

And the Other Fellow.

A Canadian exhibitor wants us to comment upon his own and the opposition newspaper advertising, adding that the space rate is rather high and the newspaper bills something of a drain. He wants particularly to know whether the advertising for his house or the other is better. He uses more detail.

> RETROGRESSION.
> An absorbing two-part drama.

Cannot possibly mean as much to a reader as:

> THE GENIUS OF FORT LAPAWAI.
> The attacking Indians are blown up by electric mines.

And while the latter title is in smaller type, it conveys some argument where the thirty-six point "Retrogression" might mean almost anything, but means nothing much.

Granted that the advertisement is large enough to be caught, it is not so much the space taken, but the way that space is made to work that counts. Without going into details, we think that our correspondent has the best of it with his smaller advertisements because he makes more intelligent use of his space.

Write your advertisements to coax in the man who knows nothing of pictures and you'll be pretty certain to get the man who does, as well, but direct your advertising so that only the initiated know what it means, and the real purpose of the advertisement is lost.

Getting Notices.

The Oklahoman, of Oklahoma City, was moved to take notice of Bertram I. Williams, of Ponca City, three hundred miles away. The clipping tells most of the story:

> The manager of a Ponca City motion picture house certainly must have passed the free duckets to the editor of the Ponca City Democrat to be treated in such royal manner as to secure a double-column head over a three-column, front-page story of a feature picture shown in the theater. And the double-column head was of the real sensational sort, too, the first two decks of which were:
> "SAVES HIM FROM MURDER
> "Young Girl Seizes Gun From Hand of Lover at Risk of Own Life."

All of which was part of a first page, first column and the next reading notice for the Thanhouser "Lucile." That's going some, but then, the Democrat looks as though any free copy might be welcome.

Liked the Check.

The Brunswig Brothers, who run the Classic Theater, Asheville, N. C., have taken up Taylor and Ford's idea of mailing out two cent checks for the purpose of attracting attention to their announcement. They use regular bank checks instead of a special check, but fill in with a typewriter, which is the bad feature of both of these checks. We think the scheme would be better were the checks pen written even in another hand than that of the signer. They wisely make their appeal with the program for a single night and then add the program for the remainder of the week, killing two birds with one two cent check. They are pretty certain to interest with the special bill and then, having gained that interest, curiosity will lead the reader to finish off. They have worked the idea very well, better than the telegram noted not long ago.

A Good Comparison.

Sid S. Levy, of the Roseland Theater, New Orleans, sends a couple of bills for Bernhardt in Queen Elizabeth that starts off:

> Several years ago the prices for
> SARAH BERNHARDT
> IN > QUEEN ELIZABETH > WERE

Boxes	$10.00
Orchestra (Front)	7.50
Orchestra (Rear)	5.00
Balcony	3.00
Gallery	1.50

It goes on to explain that now, through the presentation of the subject by the Famous Players Company, the great actress can be seen in the play for ten cents. It is a good argument, though the price of the boxes were higher than ten dollars and the price for the entire box could have been quoted to better advantage.

We like the bill much better than Mr. Levy's letterhead, which is the cut of a rose two and a half inches wide with "Land" across the petals. It looks more like the letterhead of a country florist than a theater.

We think, too, that Mr. Levy would not only have made more money, but would have caused the film to be more greatly appreciated had he raised the price slightly. He should have taken a leaf from the Bernhardt herself.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

Sold Out.

LAST week an advertisement at the end of this department stated that the first edition of The Technique of the Photoplay was completely sold out. As a matter of fact, the first money was turned back to would-be purchasers on May 27th. It was purely coincidence that on that date there was turned over to the publishers a new manuscript for a book to be published under the same title; the last copy being sold about ten minutes after the new manuscript was turned in.

It is probable that July will see the publication of the new book, which will be a very great improvement over the old. It will be not only a larger book, but better in every way. The first publication of Technique was made in the columns of this paper and there was a certain necessity for having each installment about the same length. This restriction did not exist in the case of the new book. A chapter in the new work will run from two and a half to twelve pages as required and there will be twenty-four chapters of original work and an additional chapter giving sample scripts of other writers. In the body of the text there is one complete script fully explained and scores of illustrations presented in a graphic and original fashion.

The first Technique was complete in that it laid down the rules of photoplay writing, but the new work will teach in the simplest and most comprehensive style. It will be an improvement in every way.

It was intended that the new issue should follow close on the retirement of the old, but a sudden increase in the demand and the impracticability of doing hurried work on the manuscript of the new will necessitate a gap of several weeks. Please excuse us and wait. It will be worth waiting for.

What Essanay Wants.

Mrs. Louella O. Parsons, the Essanay editor, is not always very careful of what she writes and she wrote someone that she was not using outside stuff. We printed the fact. Now she offers correction. She says:

> Essanay is in the market for split reel comedies, for strong dramatic stories, both one and two reels, and for original melodramas. We will also consider a few Western stories.

Thus Mrs. Parsons. At the same time there is not a brisk market at Essanay at present.

Take a Text.

We are indebted to Miss Marian Lee Patterson, a regular writer, for a Tennyson couplet that seems worthy of a place over every desk. It is from Morituri Salutamis and runs:

> The unwritten only still belongs to thee.
> Take heed and ponder well what that shall be.

Think that over well when you see the copyright story that you know would make a good play—and write only the unwritten.

If You Sent to American.

If you sent stories to the American and got them back with a passionate purple rubber stamp across the front page, don't let that stop you from sending other scripts in. There seems to be a brisk market there and the use of the rubber stamp has been discontinued. It was not due to cussedness, but to a failure to realize that the script was the author's until it was purchased. The matter has been brought to the attention of the American company, which at once took measures to stop the use of the stamp.

American is not only buying, but it is paying decent prices. The latter information comes from authors who have sold and not from the company itself.

The Punch.

An author could not sell his comedy. He put in a punch and then it sold, but most of the papers objected to the punch as being out of harmony with the rest of the story. Even the author admits that the punch incident did not belong, but seems to think that it was necessary to put in some such thing.

The author makes the same mistake that hundreds of others make. The punch is not a scene. He put in something that appealed to some one producer, but he did not add the punch. We think that the punch, in spite of all that has been said, is still the thing least understood. It will be fully dissected in the new Technique, but meantime take this fact to heart. The punch is not visual. It is mental.

Sounds Silly.

A Los Angeles correspondent writes to complain that he sent script to the local branch of the Thanhouser company and that the company had refused to receive the script. He adds:

> It strikes me that the small courtesy of a rejection slip or brief note of rejection would do away with this insulting fashion of returning a script scribbled "refused" and unopened.

Having had one strike called on him, we are going to call the second strike. The third means out.

In the first place who asked him to send scripts to the Los Angeles branch of the Thanhouser company? If he wants to go and butt in where he is not invited, he cannot complain if the door is shut in his face, and since the company has never asked for scripts there is no particular reason of courtesy, or otherwise, why they should hire even a small boy to open the envelopes, slip in the rejection slip and send them back.

There is another angle to this. By refusing to accept and open script envelopes, the company wholly escapes any charge of stealing stories, and even if these scripts were not read the charge would inevitably arise.

We believe that the home office does open and return scripts, but where they are careful to give publicity to the fact that they do not want outside contributions, they cannot be expected to show any "courtesies" of this sort to persons who have not the courtesy to first inform themselves of the facts.

A New Orleans Circle.

Julian Louis Lamothe, of 841 Alexander street, New Orleans, writes:

> The New Orleans branch of the Inquest Club has been organized, and at present consists of four members, with more to come in later. Two enthusiastic meetings have been held to date, and we will soon choose the location for our Morgue. Already we have a most lovely coffin plate with our motto, "Never at Rest," engraved thereon, and it seems that the photoplay world will soon know that New Orleans is on the map.
> I read with great interest in the issue of May 17, the letter from the author of "Susie to Susanne." I have had some experience with that school myself. Nearly two years ago I enrolled for the course, but finding the first two lessons worthless, I dropped out. I sent the school as an exercise a scenario entiled "The Seal Skin Coat." It was highly praised by the director. Later Biograph released the same idea under the title "The Furs." I wrote regarding the coincidence to the "Dramatic Mirror," and another coincidence developed, for Marc Edmund Jones had written a similar play, and he passed on his scenario for me to read, all of which has led to a delightful correspondence between us. But the interesting part was yet to come. The Associated Motion Picture Schools advertised "The Furs" as the product of one of their pupils, and offered to give the name of the author upon request. I wrote for it. "How strange," replied the director, "that you should choose the very story about which there was some doubt." It seemed that a young lady pupil (perhaps it was I, for some of my letters were addressed "Miss") had submitted the story as an exercise, and when it was produced, the director naturally thought the young lady was the author. But while discussing the picture with some one else, he had discovered that the idea had been used in a vaudeville sketch, and as it was therefore not original with the young lady, he could not possibly give me her name.

Why?

Here is a line or two from a letter:

> Now if one's script has enough merit to be held for consideration, as one or two of mine have been, and if the film companies are so very eager for new ideas, why do they not give a sincere and helpful criticism to a play good enough to be held, that it may be made saleable?

And the reply is why?

The photoplay editor is hired to read manuscripts and select for the use of his company such as will give photoplays when produced. He is under no obligation to conduct a school for the benefit of the uninstructed. He is there to buy plays for his company from those who are able to write. He may hold a play in the hope that an editor will be sufficiently interested to reconstruct it, but if the editor declines, he is under no obligation to the author. He has tried to pass it through. He should no be expected to waste an additional hour in educating a stranger in the things that stranger should have known before submitting the script. There are too many writers who sit flat in the road and wait for someone to come and push them along instead of seeking to make progress for themselves.

Add These to the List.

Clarence August Frambers, head of the Chicago Circle now that Marc E. Jones has come to New York to be the comedian of the Inquest Club, adds these to the list of forbidden plots:

> The man who goes in bathing and has his clothing stolen by a tramp who proceeds to masquerade.
> The pretty country girl who comes to the city, had her eyes opened and returns to the country with tears in the aforesaid eyes.
> Cowboy wants a wife. He advertises. The other boys see the ad, and dress one of their number up.
> The father who refuses to let his daughter marry the man of her choice and who is tricked into giving consent by being compromised in some fashion.

Mr. Frambers wants to enlarge the Chicago circle. Applicants should address Clarence August Frambers, 3223 West Polk Street, Chicago.

The Better Way.

One of the climbers told us the other day that he was going to send his stuff only to those studios that made the best production as he was out for a reputation. His argument was that it would profit him more to sell a script for $20 to the Lion Company than to sell it for $35 to the Tiger Company and not get so good a production. In other words, he would sacrifice, for the moment, a better price for a production that would enhance his reputation and enable him to get perhaps $50 from the Elephant and the Mongoose Companies.

We don't believe much in that sort of reputation. We would rather have the reputation with two or three editors-directors of giving them just what they wanted than accept a smaller check and have it known that we wrote that great story for the Lion Company. Lots of people will admire the splendid work of the players, and perhaps a few will remember the name of the author, but we are coldly commercial and we want to make our reputation where it will do us some good.

It is barely possible that after we had "put over" a dozen or so great Lion scripts, the Elephant Company's editor might be impressed by the fact and add ten dollars to our check or pay special attention to our story, but if we had been sending the Elephant editor really good stuff right along, if we had shown him that it was the script as well as the production that was good, we would stand a better chance of making a hit than on the strength of the fact that we were the author of the Lion's great drama "She Fell Down Stairs."

When the time comes that the name of the photoplay author means as much to an audience as the author of a fiction story, we think that to sacrifice for the better production may help a little, but even then it will take a long time to get a reputation that will really be an asset. Photoplay differs from fiction in that the production represents the combination of the author, the editor, the director and the players. The author is not properly entitled to the full credit any more than he is deserving of all the blame and it would be a difficult matter in indeed properly to apportion the credit.

A reputation in the studio means something. A reputation on the screen is as fleeting as the picture itself. Never mind what the audience thinks. Send really good scripts into the studios, no matter which, and you'll build a reputation that is better worth while.

Selling Talk.

With the courteous permission of The Editor, we publish a part of a recent article by Barr Moses in that publication. At the outset it should be understood that this article (Some Figures, The Editor, April 25) relates to fiction and not to photoplay, but the figures seem to represent photoplay scripts as well as fiction so far as the data is concerned. This is, in part, what Mr. Moses writes:

> Taking into consideration, then, all the manuscripts which I have had published and paid for, I divided them up into seven groups, accordingly as they had been offered three, six, nine, twelve, fifteen, eighteen or twenty-one times, or less. That is the first group containing all manuscripts sold at the first, second, or third offering, the second group all that have been sold at the fourth, fifth or sixth offering, the last group all that have been sold at the nineteenth, twentieth, or twenty-first offering, and so on. I made another division, which my figures seemed to warrant, between the first three groups and the last four. The results were as follows:
> A little more than sixty-one per cent. of the manuscripts sold belong to the first group, that is, were not offered more than three times, and seventy-five per cent. of the total sum of money received came from this first group.
> A little more than fifteen per cent. of the manuscripts sold belong to the second group and were not offered more than six times, and this group contributed fourteen per cent. plus of the total amount of money received.
> A little more than nine per cent. of the manuscripts sold belong to the third group and were not offered more than nine times, and from this third group came five per cent. plus of the money received.
> Just eighty-seven and one-half per cent. of the manuscripts sold belong to the first three groups and only twelve and one-half per cent. to the remaining four groups. Approximately 95.38 per cent. of the money received came from the first three groups, that is from manuscripts offered not more than nine times and only some 4.62 per cent. of the money came from those manuscripts offered beyond nine times and up to twenty-one times.
> I found, too, that the price per manuscript of those offered not more than nine times averaged somewhat more than three and one-fourth times as much as that received per manuscript sold beyond the ninth offering.
> From these figures I have concluded that it pays best not to submit manuscripts as a rule more than nine times.

This is the first time we have seen an apparently accurate tabulation of selling prices, and we do not believe that some of the figures as to results will apply to equal force to photoplays, because, as yet, the difference in payment between top and the low photoplay price is by no means as marked at the tenth of a cent a word that might be paid for the story rejected twenty times and the five cents paid on the first acceptance, but apart from these figures the matter of acceptance is as accurate for photoplay as for fiction. Sixty-one per cent. of good photoplay scripts should sell the first three times out, if they are sent to the proper markets.

You never can tell when or where you can sell your photoplays or how much you will receive, but a study of Mr. Moses' figures will give you a pretty good line on your chances with plays if only you do not send lion stories to Edison or John Bunny stories to a company with thin comedians. Study the figures.

If you have the Editor for the date mentioned, do not fail to read also "Waiting for Inspiration." It is a sermon to photoplay writers, and this is the text:

> The secret of inspiration is work—and then more work. Ruskin has told of how he studied the lives of the world's greatest artists in order to learn, if he might, the fundamental elements of their success. By one thing only was he impressed: the immense amount of work that each one produced. Among them all there was not one who waited for inspiration to come before he took up his brush. Each one possessed the capacity for hard and unremitting toil, and out of this toil were born the masterpieces upon which their fame rests today.

Try This.

Are you looking for a new game? Try this. Take any situation that may please you and see how many plots you may build around this one idea. Take, for example, the mother who, a widow, meets the man whom she loved in her girlhood. The old affection revives, but it appears that the man prefers the daughter to the mother. See if you can't make thirty or forty plots out of this. Don't try to sell any because there will be some who will try to sell and the market will be glutted, but work out the ideas as a pleasant form of mental gymnastics. You may not be able to reach forty plots, but do not be satisfied with less than a dozen distinct variations.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be mailed on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

B. L. D.—Charles Ray was Lieutenant Stone in "Bread Cast Upon the Waters." Cyril Gottleib was the boy.

A. M.—The author writes in the leaders, since without these many scripts would be unintelligible. Of course the director and the cutting editor will change these, but you are supposed to send the script complete, with all leaders and other inserted matter, since these are supposed to be necessary to the explanation of the story, or they would not be used. No company will take suffragette stuff because the foreign market will not absorb this stuff (it's no joke over there), and that is where the real "velvet" profit comes from.

THE PEST—The Vitagraph names are as follows, using your numeration: 1, Charles Edwards; 2, Dick Leslie; 3, Frank Mason; 4, Joseph Baker; 5, William V. Ranous; 6, Robert Burns; 7, Richard Morrison. These identifications are courteously contributed by Mr. Spedon, of the Vitagaph, and are authentic. Mr. Irving, in "Tamandra," was Irving White. We like Lois better, and you are not a pest, because you ask questions intelligently. If they were all like you ——!

JEFF—We'll be the goat. What's the answer? We do not list the releases of that company because we never heard of them. Don't thank us for our "earliest reply." That's what we get paid for.

RICHARD ROE—Miss Isabelle Lamon was the wife in "For His Child's Sake." Miss Marguerite Loveridge was the title in "The Woodsman's Daughter."

C. L. H.—The Answers Man would be tickled to death to be able to answer your questions, but why don't you use the same title the company uses? Maybe you can think of better ones, but use theirs, please.

M. W.—Send one dollar for the book you ask about. Send a stamped and addressed envelope for the address you require.

J. A. D.—The Biograph Identifier is still working on some of your questions, but here are some answers. The central figure in The Dance of Death in "Two Daughters of Eve," was Miss Marion Kerby. She is now with Majestic, and was in the legitimate with William H. Crane. Miss Gertrude Bambrick was the girl dancer in "All Hail to the King," and the favorite in "The King and the Copper." You'll get the rest in due course.

E. L. S.—Put a courteous inquiry to the company. If this is not satisfactory, write again, addressing this department.

RUBENA—Miss Lamon is in Philadelphia, not Jacksonville. Mr. Bushman is back with Essanay. Miss Bernard is not with A. B. We are not troubled with heart disease, but we had a couple of teeth pulled this morning, if that will help any.

LOIS—The A. B. question had to go to the Identifier. It was not Miss Handworth, but Miss Pearl Sindelar, now with Pathe. Perhaps that occasioned your error.

J. A. M.—In "Retrogression," Hardy was Mr. Taylor, Miss Hazel Buckham was the daughter, and Frank Brady, Rusty. In "The Pride of the South," Dianna was Miss Mildred Bracken. In "The Frontier Mystery," Miss Victoria Forde was the lead and her own daughter, while Mrs. Eugenie Ford took up the part of the mother, as the Wild Woman. Miss Mona Darkfeather was the lead in "The Return of Thunder Cloud's Spirit." She is a real Indian. The white girl was Miss Helen Case. Edgar Keller was the Blacksmith's father in "The Sharpshooter."

MARIE—In "The Professor's Daughter," Ford Sterling was the professor, and Miss Evelyn Quick the daughter.

E. G. M.—Miss Mildred Bracken was Grace White in 'The Black Conspiracy."

VARIOUS INQUIRERS—The Broncho "Shorty" is Jack Hamilton.

M. B.—We cannot recite Miss Hackett's stage career.

J. F. F.—If you will read your answer with care and understanding, you will perceive that there was no blue because there is no blue. If you cannot grasp the fact that there is no blue in red and green, we'll regretfully pass you up. You may have thought you saw blue, but you did not. The only blue in a Kinemacolor is in the flicker shutter.

R. W. S.—When you want questions answered by mail, send the Answers Man eighteen dollars and not just a two-cent stamp. Your first title is not correctly given. All of this information is given in the Year Book for 1912. Send for a copy. That's what we publish it for.

E. G. M.—State titles correctly. It was not "A Colored Conspiracy." It was "A Black Conspiracy." Ask for "A Black Conspiracy" and your question will be answered. In "With Lee in Virginia," Joe King was Billy, and Miss Anna Little, Miss Blair.

L. V.—Frank Dayton was the sheriff in "The Prophecy." Is that what you mean by secret service man? Wallace Reid is with the Universal.

F. H. S.—If you would read the paper every week, you would know that Miss Bush has left American.

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE:—Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included in each list, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Moving Picture and Projecting Machine Operators' Local Union No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., Indianapolis, Ind.

George Christina, President; Ed. Daugherty, Vice-President; C. J. Hoffman, Secretary-Treasurer; C. Navin, Recording Secretary; Howard Cornell, Business Agent; P. L. Shivers, E. C. Scobey and R. D. Scobey, Trustees.

Officers of Local No. 189, I. A. T. S. E., Alliance, Ohio.

Harry Lallement, President; Frank McCort, Vice-President; Edson Stevens, Financial Secretary; Alfred Fowler, American Theater, Corresponding Secretary; Joe Martin, Sergeant at Arms; Frank Reardon, Conductor; Joe Fitzgerald, Business Agent. Meeting 3rd Sunday in each month.

Another Chirp.

Brother A. J. Moran, Grand Forks, North Dakota, orders a handbook and writes:

> In April 26th number, Canton, Pa., speaks of a "chirp" in his Power's Six A. I have the same thing in the one I am running. The machine is in perfect running order, except a chirping sound, emanating apparently from the intermittent movement. I have adjusted the movement, but it has no effect on the sound, which occurs four times every turn of the crank. It is not present all the time, but comes and goes, and for no apparent reason. I will hear it for two reels, then it will go away and not come back again for perhaps a day. I will leave the matter for you to solve, not that I have given up by any means, but, as this is my first offense, I am a little bit scared. I am a member of the I. A. T. S. E., Local Union, No. 231. We are getting along fine—100% strong. If I am as good running a machine as I am a typewriter, I am a regular riot—don't you think so? I hope to see you at the coming convention.

Another brother has suggested that the chirping sound is in the governor. Evidently it is not in the intermittent, since adjustment makes no difference. I note it only occurs four times to each turn of the crank, which only adds to the puzzle. Plainly, whatever it is, it is not doing any harm beyond the annoyance to the operator, but I would very much like to have it located nevertheless. As to the convention, quite possibly you may see me there, as I presume, from what you say, you are a delegate, and it is entirely within the range of possibility that I may go. You run a mechanical typewriter all right, judging by the letter, but whether you could run one having blonde hair and blue eyes is quite another matter. Better marry one and find out, reporting results after one year. Possibly, however, you refer only to the machine.

To the Inventor.

It is far from my purpose to discourage inventions, or to induce anyone to abandon the working out of what he believes to be a good idea. Nevertheless I feel called upon to utter, not only a word, but several words of warning to inventors. Every little while there arises some Moses with an ingrowing idea that he can lead the children of picturedom out of the wilderness by moulding some idea of his own into cold brass and iron. All too often his ambition reaches the height of a complete projecting machine, the making of which into the form of a working model will not only consume months of time, but a lot of money as well. Let me say that the individual who thinks he can invent a projection machine modeled along present lines, and have a world beater which will immediately be grabbed by the exhibitor to such an extent that his fortune will be made, is most likely entitled to at least twenty-six more guesses.

The trouble with the embryo Moses usually lies in the fact that he does not know, and does not take the trouble to find out, what things have already been tried and discarded. He does not know or realize the fact, for it is a fact, that some of the brightest minds in the world have been concentrated on the improvement of projection machines for years. He is not aware of the fact, for it is a fact, that ideas are presented to machine manufacturers literally by the hundreds, and that nine times out of ten of them, yes, I might say ninety-nine times of a hundred, they are discarded as having already been tried out and found to be of no value, or that some of the larger machine manufacturers have a corps of high priced expert machinists who do nothing from one year to another but build experimental models and test out the comparatively few ideas presented, which seem to have originality, and that nine out of ten of these ideas they do test are found to be in some way defective.

In other words, the ambitious inventor who starts out to evolve and improve projectors, usually blunders ahead without first taking the time to ascertain what has already been tried and discarded and what has not. He spends time and money, in large sums, only to discover that he has evolved a machine which he cannot find a market for, because there are already half a dozen others on the market which are as good or better than his own, or at least everybody but himself thinks so. And even allowing that he does succeed in evolving a superior machine, he will discover that, in order to prepare for its manufacture on a commercial basis, he must have a machine shop and thousands of dollars' worth of special tools, jigs, dies, etc., and that after he has these, he must, with an untried, unknown article, buck the established reputation of other manufacturers.

In the parlance of the street, my friend, it cannot be done without a make-up, and the make-up in this particular instance consists of practically unlimited money, combined with an idea or series of ideas materially better than any of those now incorporated in projection machinery. But we also have the inventor who gets an idea for some small article; say a wire terminal. He rushes into the patent office, spends anywhere from fifty to a hundred dollars for a patent and, nine times out of ten, even though the device has real merit, never gets his money back, because there are so many articles of a similar nature, also having merit, perhaps equal or superior to his own.

And now, lest I be misunderstood, let me clearly state the purpose of this talk: Do not rush into the inventive field until you have first ascertained what has already been done along the lines upon which you propose to work. I cannot emphasize this point too strongly. If you follow my advice in this you will be the gainer. If you do not, you are more than likely to be the loser.

From Indian Head.

From Indian Head, Saskatchewan, Canada, comes a letter in which a correct solution of the "Joke On Us All" is given, and in which the writer says: "Your Handbook received some time ago and I consider it the greatest work ever published." We presume, however, he merely refers to works pertaining to projection, since, to take his remark literally, we would swell up like a toy balloon, and possibly, in the end, explode.

Another Slide Coating.

Mr. C. L. Sniffen, Spring Valley, New York, comes in with the following:

> Recently I read in the department a suggestion for the use of Bon-Ami for slide coating. I tried this with more or less success, but think I have improved on it a little, and if the idea is good, perhaps it would be well if you passed it along. After having covered the slide with Sapolio or Bon-Ami, I take a piece of ordinary carbon paper and spread it carefully over the Bon-Ami. Next, I cut from the newspapers, any funny picture, such as a "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon, which I lay face up on the carbon paper and outline it with a sharp lead pencil. On the dark parts of the picture I make a cross, and when the entire picture has been outlined, I remove both the cartoon and carbon paper and erase, either with a sharp rubber or a piece of cloth, the white from the slide, leaving this part clear. In this way I have a comic subject well drawn on the glass slide. For example: I made a slide a week ago where Mutt was kicking Jeff out of the room. The room part of the drawing I omitted. Mutt and Jeff showed very plainly and, with a sharp pencil, I wrote on the slide: "Don't kick if the show is too long. Come when you like—go when you like—stay as long as you like." This caused considerable laughter and a general feeling of good nature prevailed. In closing, let me thank The Moving Picture World and Projection Department for its many excellent suggestions, among which I hope this one may be classed.

I think, friend Sniffen, there is no doubt but what your idea can be classed among those styled "excellent." I think here is something of which lots of use can be made by the careful man. I find, by experiment, that the same thing can be worked on gelatine; so that those having gelatine slide outfits can also do some experimenting.

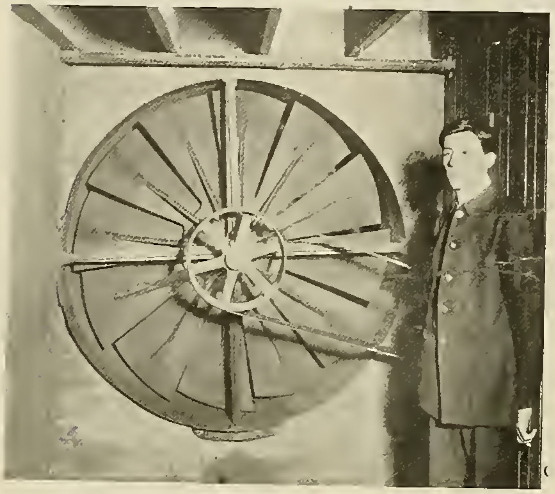
Wrong.

Manchester, New Hampshire, sends in a solution of the "Joke On Us All," in which he says that, inasmuch as Hays was using 60 amperes on the arc and ½ to ¾ of an ampere in the incandescent lamp, the main fuse block should be equipped with 90 ampere fuses, the operating switch protected by fuses of 75 ampere capacity, and the incandescent lamp by a branch-block carrying 6 ampere fuses. For the main circuit he says No. 4 wires should be used, and for the incandescent lamp circuits, No. 12 and 14. I would suggest to Manchester that he get a Handbook and study up on the action of the transformer (economizers, inductors, etc.). For his information let me say that an economizer delivering 60 amperes at the arc would only take somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 amperes from a 110 volt line.

Ventilation.

Mr. A. C. Evins, Secretary-Treasurer Vaudette Amusement Co., Atlanta, Georgia, sends in photograph and accompanying letter, as follows:

> This flashlight picture might be of interest now that the warm weather is coming on. The fan is situated underneath our stage, and there are two openings, one on either side of the orchestra pit, 4 x 6 feet in size (presumably into the auditorium—Ed.). We also have two 30 inch openings in the ceiling (presumably of the auditorium—Ed.) where we can put additional exhaust fans, though we have never had occasion to do so. Possibly this photo will be of value to some moving picture man who is now being called upon to solve the perplexing question of ventilation in hot weather. We got the idea of taking the air right off the floor, from The Moving Picture World. The fan has been in use for twenty-one months, therefore, we know that the idea is good.



Many thanks for your kindness in submitting the excellent photograph, brother Evins. We agree with you that it will no doubt be of value, though you have failed to be as definite as I would have wished, and have not given the size, diameter and speed of the fan.

Why It Shows In One and Not the Other.

Seattle, Washington, writes:

> What is the reason a broken condenser shows in the stereopticon and not in the moving picture? As there is a difference of opinion in regard to this, we would like to have your explanation.

Because, in the case of the stereopticon, the focal plane (object being projected, a slide in this case) is right up against the condenser; whereas in the other instance the focal plane (the film) is removed a considerable distance away.

Friend Cook Wanted.

Mr. C. A. Penn, Bijou Dream Theater, Dayton, Ohio, says that during the recent flood, he was trapped in the upper floor of the theater building, where he works, and than a man from New York City got caught by the water and ran into the same building. During the enforced imprisonment, he and the stranger had several long talks. He has forgotten the man's name and address, but says he owns a large airdome in New York City, of which his brother has active charge. He showed a cut taken from The Moving Picture World, which claimed he had the finest airdome in New York. Wants to know if he can get track of him from this faint description.

I would suggest, Dayton, that you address a letter to Frank G. Cook, care Airdome, at Manhattan Avenue and 109th Street, New York. I guess friend Cook is the got-caught-in-the-water party, though I never before knew that he took that article in such quantities.

What a Shock It Would Be.

Kansas sends in check for subscription renewal and says:

> In the May 3rd issue you ask what is wrong with the sketch, heading the article "A Joke On Us All." You are connected on the wrong side of the switch. I noticed this the time it was first run, but did not suppose correcting it was worth while. I am using an exhibition model, which has seen about five years of actual service. Maybe you think I do not get mine. I do not believe I would survive the shock should the management get a new machine, or expend sufficient money to put this one in first-class condition.

Possibly, Kansas, your audiences might die of shock also, if your employer should install an up-to-date projector. The exhibition model was a good machine in its day. Evidently, however, your manager is not aware of the fact that the world moves and that improvements in projection machinery are constantly being made. As to your reply to the "Joke On Us All," you, like many, many others, have missed the main point, all of which shows the need for study on the part of operators. Plainly, you, as well as a great many other operators, are not familiar with the action of economizers—a device you may be called upon to handle at any time. If you were, you would know that both lines of a circuit pass through the economizer, instead of only one, as shown in the sketch. I published this "Joke On Us All" just to see how many errors there would be in the replies sent in. So far, for every correct reply there has been at least ten incorrect ones, in which the main blunder in the sketch was not caught at all.

It is positively astounding how indifferent operators are in the matter of training themselves in the technical side of their work. The new Handbook has been going out at the rate of from 300 to 500 a month, but, were the operators and managers alive to their own interest the first edition of 10,000 would have been exhausted in sixty days' time. Please do not misunderstand me. So far as I am individually concerned, I am pleased at the reception the book has meet with and am gratified at the sales already made, but when I look at the other side of it and consider the thousands of operators and managers who need this book and need it badly, I am amazed at the comparative indifference shown.

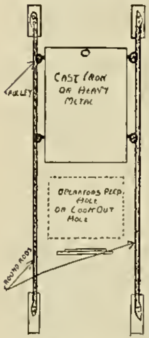
Nor is that all. On page 484, May 3rd issue, I offered, provided there be an adequate response from the unions, to propound, without any cost whatever, a series of questions which, if properly taken hold of by the operators' organizations, would be of vast benefit. This offer has been out three weeks and, to date, there has been but one response. It is surprising. I had supposed that at least such apparently live organizations as Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Baltimore, and a few Canadian unions, who have evinced a decided disposition to acquire knowledge of their business, would promptly respond; but they have not.

I am willing to do my share in these matters, but if you gentlemen are too dead to your own interest—too indifferent to the improvement of your own knowledge to take up such matters as this—why, in the parlance of the street: "I should worry and get a wrinkle."

A Wall Fire Shutter.

Mr. C. J. Kaho, Trinidad, Colo., writes, praising the handbook, and winds up his letter with:

> The book is fine. There is only one thing I dislike about it, and that is, your idea of the fire shutters. I think I have one that beats it. I enclose a sketch showing my idea. I am sending you, under separate cover, a star and shaft which I took off my Simplex machine. It is minus four points. Do you know what causes this?



The brother's wall shutter idea I do not consider as being superior to my own, for the reason that the shutter would not fit up very snugly against the opening. This, however, could be overcome as follows: brother Kaho's idea is to use rods and pulleys for guides, instead of the sliding ways as set forth on page 72 of the handbook. That much of his scheme is entirely practical, and is, in fact, I believe, an improvement over my own, but this would only hold good provided the rods be set on an angle to the wall or to the opening, and the opening be brought out so that the shutter in falling would, by the slope of the rods, be pulled in toward the wall or opening, and thus wedge itself down against the opening tightly. If any of you do not understand my meaning, let me know and I will make a sketch to make it more clear. As to the star, I cannot say certainly, but I believe, inasmuch as the same four points are broken, that is, the points in the same relation to the slots, it is due to some wrong adjustment of the intermittent movement. It must be remembered that these stars are very hard, consequently if the adjustment be so made that the pin would strike heavily against one of the points, it, the point, might snap off. I do not say positively that this is the answer, but it is the solution which appeals to me.

Wants Information.

Mr. S. V. Ayer, Houston, Texas, after expressing his appreciation of the department, and explaining his view of the "Joke on us all," says:

> We have just organized a local here with about 30 members. Would be very grateful for any information you can give us with regard to union affairs.

What is it you want to know, brother Ayer? Ask your questions and I will do my best to answer. Your reply to the joke, brother, is correct, as far as it goes. I trust the new union will meet with success. It has the best wishes of this department.

Problem in Optics.

H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, sends in an explanation of why the outside shutter need not cover all of the lens opening. Brother Smith is, for the most part, correct, but the matter is too highly technical, I think, to be understood by very many if I were to give it space. He winds up his letter as follows:

> Projection is A-1 in Fort Worth, and do not think that any of the houses elsewhere have anything on us. Every operator in this city is a live wire, eager to learn and produce results. By the way, can you give us a little information on that new Kinetoscope, United States patent 1,007,962, by Thaddeus A. Nolan; also the new vapor arc rectifier (the two and four arm tube), U. S. patent 1,009,494, by S. Ferguson, Schenectady, New York?

Glad to hear these good words about the Fort Worth boys. If the manufacturers or patentees of the apparatus in question will forward a description of same to this department, we will be glad to set it forth for the benefit of our readers.

He Is Going To Get a Big One Now.

Mr. Roy A. Goggin, Estherville, Iowa, sends a correct solution of the "Joke On Us All," together with a picture of the theater, taken during a matinee. He says:

> Like Park Falls, I have a "booth." It is 5 x 6, with a 6 foot 4 inch ceiling. We have as nice a theater as you will find in towns several times the size of Estherville (population 4,500), but like many another, they neglected the operating room. I do not blame the manager, as he was new at the business then, but the architect ought to have known better. His plan called for a room 4 feet 6 inches by 4 feet 6 inches. I told them they could not get the machine in that kind of a "room," so they stretched it out a little. However, as Blaine Day, Sherman, Texas, says, "Everything comes to him who waits," and brother Stanco, of Waterbury, Conn., says, "He got his." Well, I am going to have mine, for, in the near future, the theater will be remodeled, as it is now too small and, in the shuffle I will have an operating room 10 x 10 feet, with a 10 foot ceiling. I have not gotten one of the new books yet, but intend to in the near future.

GRAND THEATRE

It is a wonder that the architect thought of an operating room at all. Such a shameful waste of space—4 feet 6 by 4 feet 6. Huh! that is the worst I ever heard of. Glad to know you are going to have a decent operating room at last, but, for the love of Mike, do not let that particular architect draw the plans. Yes, I would by all means invest $2.50 in the Handbook, also, I would "do it now" if I were you.

Test for Ground.

New York City makes the following inquiry:

> Recently, at an examination, I was asked the following question: Suppose I close my operating switch and fuse blows. All connections are O. K., and no short of any kind, but every time the operating switch is closed, the fuse blows. How would I locate the trouble?

In the first place, New York, I think you were not asked that question at all. Such a question would be confusing; in fact, it would be an impossible condition, since there would have to be either a short, or a ground amounting to a short, somewhere on your lines or in your rheostats. I therefore, without using your name, went up to the examining board rooms and asked about this matter. They said the question as stated was not used at all. I do not, of course, care to say what the question is, since that would not be fair to the board, but if it is put the way they told me, it is a perfectly legitimate question and its answer is simple. The trouble is, there are too many of you who go up for examination and, instead of keeping cool and using your brains, get so excited and scared that you do not really understand the question put to you. Many a man has failed just on that account—because he became frightened and excited, whereas, had he remained cool, he could have answered every question correctly. Do not imagine that the examiners are trying to "get your goat." Nothing of the sort. They simply wish to determine your actual, practical knowledge, that is all. The fact of the matter is, they often ask a perfectly simple question, which the applicant, being in an excited frame of mind, translates into something extremely complicated and difficult, and I think that is exactly what happened in this case, New York. I think I may say, without violating any confidence, that what the examiners were after was to find out what you would do if you were running a show and your fuses blew. I believe you will agree with me that if you have not knowledge enough to get by on so simple a proposition, you have no business in an operating room.

From Friend Spraker.

Mr. R. E. Spraker, Rich Hill, Missouri, is with us again, as follows:

> Inclosed find draft for $2.50 for which please send me one of the new Handbooks. I have quite a budget of suggestions that I am going to send in to the department some of these days when I find more time. I will take time today, however, to tell the brother who wants a peep-hole in the front of his lamphouse to drill a small hole in the front wall of the lamphouse under the condenser mount, as high up and as near the center as possible. Then there will be an image of the crater cast on the machine table from which he can easily align his carbons. With d. c., I get an image as illustrated in sketch, when carbons are properly aligned. The image is not round because of the shadow of the lower carbon. The two points appear uneven because my pinhole is a little to the left (facing the screen) of the lamp, in order that the light rays may pass the condenser mount support. With a similar pinhole projector in the left side of the lamp house, and the proper position of the images on wall and machine table marked, I can set my carbons and locate the lamp perfectly, without opening the dowser until ready to start the picture. I am sorry that more of the boys did not respond on the question of tail-pieces between subjects of split reels. There is one operator in this neck of the woods, however, who occasionally splices in a piece of blank leader or Censorship film. Much obliged, friend of mine. Do it some more. In closing, I will say that 60 volt current is entirely satisfactory for picture show work when the voltage is steady. But I don't want to undertake to put on a decent picture when the pressure fluctuates. Our Brush outfit regulates within ½ volt with the arc burning. With this I put on a picture I am proud of. The other day, however, one of the spark plugs short circuited, whereupon the voltage began to play hop-scotch all over the meter dial, and I sure had troubles of my own. On 60 volts, one uses so little resistance in series with the arc that a slight variation in the line voltage makes the arc sputter, and you know a sputtering arc puts the kibosh on a picture. Your idea of a list of questions is good. Put them to us.

Your front pinhole suggestion is all right, friend Spraker, since it will give you the side line of the carbons, while the hole in the left side of the lamphouse will give you the other angle of the crater. We trust those other suggestions will materialize in the near future. There was considerable response to the tail piece business, but not enough. There should have been at least 5,000 postal cards; whereas, there was not anything near that number. I will not go before the manufacturers on a proposition of that kind unless I am able to show there is a general demand, and the response was not sufficient to prove that. Personally, I am inclined to favor 70 volts, for the very reason you name. A 60 volt arc is a rather delicate thing to handle. As to the questions, they will commence soon.

One Wide-Awake Union.

The following letter comes from Toronto, Canada:

> Local 173, I. A. T. S. E., of this city, has decided to take advantage of your offer, May 3rd issue, and to co-operate with you in any way you would suggest. To this end, I have been instructed to write you. The next regular meeting will be held May 18th. If there are any suggestions, outside of those appearing in the department, would be pleased to hear from you before then. The following committee has been appointed to handle the matter: W. D. Shank, Art Kerna, George Robertson and William Taylor.
> Fraternally yours, William Taylor.

And now, aren't you U. S. boys ashamed of yourselves to let a Canadian union get ahead of you on a proposition of this kind? I congratulate Toronto on its enterprise and, rather than disappoint even one union which has shown sufficient hustle and sufficient desire to improve its knowledge, to take this kind of action, I am going ahead with the proposition. I would suggest to Toronto the following action: (1) that the union offer a gold medal, suitably engraved, as first prize, and one of the pillows, described on page 700, May 17th issue, as second prize, to those answering the largest number of questions correctly. (2) I would then suggest that a series of numbers, from one to as many members as there are in the union, be made on slips of paper, and that the signature of the various members of the committee, or of its chairman, appear on each slip, as a means of positively identifying the slip, that these numbers be placed in blank envelopes and sealed so that the committee will not know which number is in which envelope, and that one number be given to each member of the union, he to retain that number until the end of the contest, and to file his answers to the various questions with the committee with his number appearing on each answer. (3) That a box, similar to a ballot box, be made, so that the members can at each meeting, deposit their answers without anyone seeing the number and seeing whose it is, and that these answers then be taken out of the box and posted on the wall of the meeting room, or the business agent's office, there to remain until the answers appear in the department, after which the committee can figure out the rating and mark the papers, keeping a record of the standing of the members in a suitable book.

The idea in all this is that many members will not consent to have their answers posted, for fear of ridicule if they should make a mistake. In this way, however, the answers can be posted without any one knowing, at least until long afterward, whose it is, and the posting of these various answers will be of immense benefit in stirring up discussion among the members.

Now here is something that the other unions can take up and get an immense amount of benefit out of, if it is carried out along these lines. The large, powerful unions, such as Boston, San Francisco, Chicago and others, can offer, if they wish, three or more prizes of very substantial value. For that matter, so can Toronto, if it wishes, but I should imagine that for the smaller organizations, a medal and one of those pillows would make sufficient and very desirable prizes. Another reason for keeping the names of the contestants secret, even from the committee, is that it will shut out, at least in a large measure, any charge of favoritism. Members should be cautioned not to divulge their number to any one, and the members of the committee, if they themselves take part in the contest (and it would be hardly fair to bar them), absolutely must not tell their own numbers to their fellow committeemen. If this plan is adhered to closely, the only possible clue would be the hand-writing. This, however, probably cannot be avoided, except by those operators fortunate to have access to a typewriter and possessing the ability to run it. The questions will be started some time in June, meanwhile let me hear from all unions desiring to go into the contest.

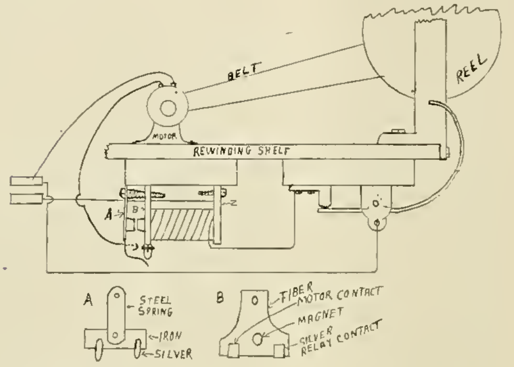
Correct.

Mr. E. A. Beyer, Elizabeth, New Jersey, sends in correct solution of the "Joke on us all." It is surprising how many have written, saying that the incandescent lamp was connected wrong, but have entirely overlooked the really bad error, viz.: the fact that the economizer is connected the same as one would connect a rheostat. I do not publish these wrong answers because I do not wish to embarrass those who have answered carelessly—for surely they know better.

Makes It Plainer.

Mr. William Hoffman, Kewanee, Illinois, writes:

> Wirh reference to the "Motor Cut Out" article, page 701, May 17th issue, I will try to make things plainer. The rectangles to the left represent the fuse block. My rheostat is a Power's 240 volt circular one. With the two halves connected in multiple it gave too much current, so I cut one of the operating room arc circuit wires in the basement, and inserted two coils from another rheostat. From the end of these coils I ran two wires to the fuse blocks shown in the drawing. The test of these wires shows 5½ volts and 19 amperes. I cannot remember having marked any line X, or find any place where you have either, so will have to let that go; but Z is only a support for the magnet and has no electrical connections; also B, being made of fibre, has none either, so I think the line you refer to must be the edge of the fibre block between B and Z, and there is also one between B and A. The circuit line is held under the screw-head of screw passing through A, and there makes contact with A, the silver contact springs of which, the one on the nearest side, makes contact with the piece of silver on the nearest side to B, to which one of the relay coil wires is fastened, while the other, on the farther side, makes contact with the piece of silver on the farther side of B, to which the wire, coming down from the motor, is fastened. Possibly you cannot get the idea from this rather lengthy sentence, but it is the best I can do. Permit me to compliment you on the most excellent copy of my sketch. I am rather glad I used purple ink on my drawing, for now it looks like something.



Huh! Well you need not bother with any more purple ink stunts, neighbor Hoffman, because if you do I am liable to let them go that way some time and then they will look like h-eaven. I have printed your letter practically as it is written, leaving it up to the department fans to dope the matter out for themselves. I guess it is plain enough now, though I don't quite understand your "5 volt, 19 ampere" test.

A Suggestion.

Mr. C. F. Lubine, Odanah, Wisconsin, contributes the following interesting letter:

> I hardly expected to see the letter in print that I wrote some time ago, and will say that there are some pretty live wires among the "profesh." Only answered 162 letters on the "Dandy Town" proposition. Only one of the lot did not comply with stamp, and I must say that I think him a dead one, for if he isn't dead he ought to be. The letter was pretty good after it had been worked out—"E vod lake do auevar yu get dem tonon dem meven picer plas avant to noby mal i send it me ret sone he dem mal." Huh! What the ——?? Will offer a little suggestion to the fellows who want to get in the game of "movies." There is any amount of places that have picture shows located in old store buildings. A new theater built for the purpose of showing pictures the way they ought to be shown, and to take away the sting of "any old place is good enough for the pictures" dump, will wipe the boards clean of the old "store" shows. After you find such a place, don't be afraid to buy ground and build. If you haven't the ready cash to build, look up some building and loan association and get them to put up the house for you. In nearly all states the interest charged will be only 8% per month on each $1,000 or $8 rent a month on each thousand. (80 you mean—Ed.) A good live hustler can do this and more too. And now just a word about posters. I have taken special notice of the posters I put out and will say that the Vitagraph are absolutely the best of the entire bunch. Why? Because each poster contains a short synopsis of the play advertised on the poster. It is a clean break-away from the run of the advertisements that are put out by the other film manufacturers. The only criticism I have to offer to the Vitagraph people is that they do not use any colors for the lithos, when color would help greatly. People stop to read these posters, and merely glance at the others. This is proof conclusive that the public takes an interest in the theater program, and the interest could be increased by the film producers if they would adopt the Vitagraph plan, plus color. To the operator who is troubled with a "chirping" noise in his Power's Six A, examine the governor, and I think you will find after you remove the casing cover that the brass contacts are not true. After you have trued them up, put a little fine graphite in the oil. This is what I did to the Power's Six A, I am operating. I wish to join the operators' union. Will some kind brother living in Wisconsin write me and let me know how it is done? I want to become a member of the I. A. T. S. E., fully realizing that organization is the only way to secure good conditions for moving picture operators. Can we, as reliable men, get the wages due us?

As to your suggestion that there are many places where store room theaters could be profitably supplanted by an up-to-date moving picture theater building, I am of the opinion that you are correct, though the matter of possible revenue would have to be very carefully gone into in each case, since the erection of a theater building calls for considerable capital, and the interest of that capital would have to be figured in as expense. Whether this item would more than offset the rental paid by the store-room man is another question. Quite likely in many cases it would not. Your ideas are, however, in the main, correct. I believe there are many openings of this kind. Wisconsin union operators might communicate with friend Lubine, and see if there is any way whereby he can be taken in. Your comment as to colors in the Vitagraph posters is respectfully referred to the attention of that company.

From Texarkana.

Mr. S. A. Kerr, Texarkana, Texas, writes:

> With regard to your answer to my letter, May 10th issue, I had my carbons already set as per your Handbook directions. However, I agree with you that the lamp should be angled a little more, but this cannot be done with a standard lamp. The trouble is not exactly a double spot, however, but a light-yellow streak above the aperture. This, nevertheless, should not be there. And now, I must mention a certain operator who dropped in the other evening while I was showing two other operators how to set their carbons, I being the only owner of a Handbook in Texarkana. This man proceeded to dispute me and say that the Handbook was wrong and that the carbon set should be what is known as the "jack-knife set," as per B. Fig. 98, page 209 of the Handbook. However, I wish you could see the picture projected by this would-be-instructor, who is operator at a suburban theater. That, I think, would be the answer.

Yes, brother Kerr, the result on the screen is always the "answer." The old jack-knife set has long since been discarded by real operators, but it is hardly worth while arguing with a man who is far enough behind the times to be still using it. He corresponds to the farmer who still plants his corn with a hoe, while other farmers are using the modern check-row corn planter. He is his own worst enemy. As to the streak of yellow light, if the field of your screen is clear I think you need not pay much attention to the discoloration of the light on the cooling plate, though, not knowing precisely what the condition is, I may be in error as to this. My regards to the Texarkana boys. Isn't there but one operator in that city who has enterprise enough to invest $2.50 in something to improve his knowledge of his business? Probably some of them would not think so very much of blowing in that sum in one evening, on something that would do no particular good—but invest two whole dollars and a half in a thing like the Handbook—monstrous!

Regarding Picture and Size of Curtain.

Mr. I. Wilt, New York City, writes:

> I shall be called upon to operate a machine in an auditorium 53 x 48 feet. The height is 11 feet at the back and 17 feet 6 inches at the curtain. Current 110 volt, 60 cycle, a. c. Can you advise me what would be the best size picture; also what curtain it would be best to use?

A picture anywhere from 12 to 15 feet wide will be all right, brother Wilt. Personally, I would prefer one about 13½ feet wide, since the auditorium is not deep and the person farthest away would not be more than 50 feet away from the screen. As to the curtain, I cannot advise you as to any particular make without causing all the other manufacturers to call me naughty names.

A Reliable Concern.

The editor of this department has from time to time had considerable correspondence with the J. H. Genter Company, manufacturers of the Mirroroide Screen, Newburgh, New York; particularly with Mr. J. H. Genter himself, who is not only the president of that corporation, but also its moving spirit. We have been particularly pleased with one thing, viz.: the stress that Mr. Genter has always laid on the desire of his company to deal squarely with every one, and to make right anything that is wrong—in other words, to thoroughly and completely satisfy the customer. In every letter, Mr. Genter has emphasized this point, and it speaks exceedingly well for both him and his company.

Operators Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

"A DANGEROUS FOE" (Biograph), May 29.—A real Chinaman has a role in this picture; he is "the dangerous foe," a laundryman whom a thug had illtreated. By chance he is the means, not only of bringing the thug to justice, but of preventing him from doing harm to the child of a judge. These climax scenes take place in the rich home of the judge and in them the two men, thug and chink, are pitted against each other, essentially as in other Biograph burglar pictures. It is not a convincing story nor is there much strong acting in it. The photography is not up to Biograph standard.

"THEIR BABY" (Essanay), May 29.—If the situation pictured in this offering had been made convincing, it would have been very amusing. It is not convincing enough for a comedy and it seems not quite lively enough for a first-class farce. There was a little laughter and the audience seemed to be taking interest in it which was due, in part, to the intelligent way in which it was acted and to its pretty scenes, though the photography didn't do it full justice.

"THE ONLY VETERAN IN TOWN" (Vitagraph), May 29.—This is the best Decoration Day picture we have seen this year up to date; but it is only a commercial offering made to fill the demand this week for such pictures. Built along conventional lines, and with effects plainly contrived, it deals with things that are, in themselves, emotional (there is nothing more so to Americans) and so it stirs us deeply, in spite of its lack of logic. With good music, it is sure to impress any not critical audience. The insincerity of that part of the picture in which the old soldier is neglected and "thought too old to enjoy the parade" by his son and daughter-in-law (how palpably false as shown) is hidden by the deep feeling that we all have for such a grand old veteran (Charles Kent) with an armless sleeve. Neither producer nor author deserve credit since both worked in a hurry; but Charles Kent in the title role and Adele De Garde deserve high commendation. The photography didn't do the picture justice.

"THE EX-CONVICT'S PLUNGE" (Selig), May 29.—A slight and short offering that is, and was intended to be, a sort of conundrum picture. A convict is set free and a detective sees him acting as though he were about to do something and he wonders and we wonder. We are interested watching the detective get down to the fact that the man is in love and then the picture ends. It is commendably acted by William Stowell as the convict; Harry Lonsdale, the detective; Adrienne Kroel, the girl, and Joe Hazelton, as the warden. There is a poor policeman in it. The photography is clear.

"SCENES IN MANILA" (Selig), May 29.—On the same reel are some reasonably instructive views taken in the chief city of the Philippines, and they include some impressive sunset pictures, perhaps the most impressive ever made. It is too short and wastes time showing us an old fort that can be seen on postal cards. The photography is fair, but is inclined to be a bit misty.

"THE ROMANCE OF THE OZARKS" (Lubin), May 29.—A melodrama along conventional lines and very poorly acted. It is the moonshiner, bill-girl and revenue-man story. The scenes are rather uninteresting and the photography, though clear, lacks art.

"WHITE LIES" (Patheplay), May 29.—A thunderstorm has been most realistically pictured in this offering. It has been wonderfully contrived and is a true thrill, although if it were possible to have had a ripple flash of levin rather than the romantic forked bolt, it would have been better still. The story is not worthy the storm scene and, for the most part, it was very poorly acted. The photography is commendable.

"THE FOSTER BROTHERS" (Melies), May 29.—A picture dealing with bush life and with white men and natives. It was made near Yarabah in Australia and in extremely interesting backgrounds. It tells a good story that has been acted in a dignified, convincing way and has been clearly photographed. As an offering, it ranks high, for it not only interests but gives valuable instruction, as showing the bush men in their native lands.

"TANDJONG PRIOK, THE HARBOR OF JAVA'S CAPITAL, BATAVIA" (Melies), May 29.—On the same reel is this film, an eye-opener in its way, as showing how busy a port Java's capital has. The photography is clear and the views full of atmosphere and well chosen so that they are instructive. It is worth while seeing.

"LOVE AND WAR IN MEXICO" (Lubin), May 28.—A melodramatic picture of revolutionary times in Mexico. It is in two parts; but would have been better in one. The scenario was worthy of artistic treatment, but is very poorly acted. The scenes too, are poorly composed and, with dull photography, are more of a hindrance in that they give the mind something to be dissatisfied with, when it would prefer to think of nothing but the story. The opening is particularly dull and without the snap that it ought to have and, in these early scenes, the "degenerate husband's" brutalities are annoying. Some people left the theater, others laughed and made fun of them. In the end, this man has become a very devout priest, thinking his wife dead. Twenty years later, his son, whom he has never seen or heard of, is to be shot by the Federals and runs to the church. The priest promises the captain to bring the fugitive in an hour and sends for the boy's mother, a woman of the village, whom he doesn't know is his wife, until they meet.

"BORROWED PLUMAGE" (Cines), May 27.—A farce depending on the fun in freak photographs taken by a man who is pretending to be a photographer in his friend's studio. It made laughter now and then.

"THE CHAMPION FIXER" (Cines), May 27.—A farce depending on the preposterousness of the things it shows, beginning with a serenade on a drum. This is a well-made, light offering and is really amusing, since everything in it is near the height of the ridiculous. There are some people who see nothing in this sort of stuff at all, and some in the audience didn't.

"IN SOMALILAND" (Cines), May 27.—A double tinted picture of Italian middle Africa. It is short, but has a glimpse of a Somali school which is truly worth seeing.

"THE WORDLESS MESSAGE" (Selig), May 28.—A Decoration Day love story that makes no appeal to patriotism and that, showing men in blue coats with the G. A. R. badges on, has little to do with them as such. The young people, or rather the girl, is the center of interest. The opening of the picture's love story is very poor; a city man comes prowling around the porch and the girl runs away with him to be deserted. On Decoration Day she goes to a picture show and sees her father faint during a parade while it was being filmed—that is the wordless message. Colin Campbell produced it from Hettie Gray Baker's script. The photography has little art except now and then. There is one lovely picture of Bessie Eyton at her sewing machine after she has been deserted. Thomas Santschi plays a village blacksmith and Wheeler Oakman is the city youth with whom the heroine runs away.

"ON THE JOB" (Essanay), May 28.—It might have been called the predicament of a flirtatious drummer, and when it gets down to its real situation, to its joke, it brings a good, deep laugh out of everybody in the house. This funny part is toward the end, we must admit, but the whole is never really dry although a bit old. The best of it depends on John Steppling, a drummer; on Eleanor Blanchard, his wife, and on Margaret Spooner, Miss Busybody who had tried to get him into trouble with his wife. She was right; but John's friend, Howard Missimer, was too cute and between them they get Miss Busy in wrong. The photography is clear enough. A very fair offering.

"THE FUGITIVE" (Patheplay), May 28.—The realistic way in which it was produced is the chief merit of this offering. The story is far from being fresh, but it is played in a very lively way and this makes us think that it is real, it convinces us by its snap. Its thrilling scene is when, near the end of a man chase, in which the innocent man makes his escape, his horse and he take a terrible fall together. Only a bit of this is shown so that the mind is kept from seeing its brutality. There is very fair photography and clearly pictured scenes.

"MR. NEWCOMB'S NECKTIE" (Edison), May 28.—A clever farce comedy that brought out a good deal of hearty laughter; it seems to be a fair hit. Mrs. C. J. Williams as Mrs. Newcomb gives a tie to her husband (William Wadsworth) and even the black and white picture of it is a stunner. Newcomb, do what he will, can not get rid of it and there's fun in the office of which he is boss. Perhaps Yale Boss, as office boy, adds most fun of all the lesser characters. Margaret Weston's scrubwoman deserves mention, as does Andrew Clark, the boy who picks it up on the sidewalk after Newcomb has thrown it out of the window. Elsie McLeod and Edward Boulden make up the rest of the office force. The script is by Alice Williams and was produced by C. J. Williams. The photography is clear.

"CUTIE PLAYS DETECTIVE" (Vitagraph), May 28.—Some extremely able acting gives much quality to this picture of which the story, though fair and effectively handled, is along well trodden lines. Courtenay Foote, as Lord Goodbluff, an aristocratic scoundrel who is making a social splurge in the town, gives one of his characterizations that hide his personality, his age, his natural walk and demeanor completely. Mr. Foote is a very finished player. Wallie Van, as Cutie, does a good female impersonation. As serving maid at the Trevor's where he had been asked not to call any more, because Mrs. Trevors (Louise Beandet) wanted her daughter (Zena Keefe) to marry the lord, he does some detective work and gets the noble lord arrested. As a picture, it held the audience and will go well everywhere. The photography is a bit harsh and doesn't do justice to the faces, but the scenes are very pretty. The script is by J. V. Hurley, and Larry Trimble produced it.

"CAPTURED BY STRATEGY" (Kalem), May 28.—A melodramatic picture that is very unconvincing and full of improbabilities. The hero (Boyd Clark) saves the man who didn't want to be his father-in-law from being robbed by tramps and wins the heroine (Marian Cooper.) About half of the photography is very good. There is nothing in it that is not old except one incident, by way of sensation, that is plainly not probable and surely not exciting—it is the way the hero is let down on the deck of a passing steamboat from a derrick on a dock.

"JOHN BURNS OF GETTYSBURG" (Kalem), May 31.—The story of John Burns is widely known from many accounts of it that have been printed, and for this picture, Bret Harte's poem furnishes the scenario. Quotations from it serve as subtitles. The picture is not a great success. It was taken is some sandy place not at all like the country about Gettysburg, and its battle scenes have nothing that even afar off suggest the great battle. The story, such as it is, is clearly told and the picture has some good scenes. The photography is not perfect, but fair in much of the picture. Kenean Buel's Burns is a striking, interesting figure and he deserves commendation for it. Guy Coombs plays the old man's son who enlists and is brought home dead with a sharpshooter's bullet through his heart. Mrs. Courtot plays Burns' wife and Anna Nilson, his daughter-in-law.

"THE BANDIT'S CHILD" (Kalem), June 2.—There is very little in this picture that we haven't seen before several times, though not in just this order and arrangement. The climax and ending scene has been used so often that we fear it will not impress many. One doesn't get truly interested in such a story as this. The producer shows a faculty, selecting good backgrounds and of making interesting scenes; but the camera man didn't follow him very effectively; the print seems too misty for real life.

"AN ALMOND EYED MAID" (Edison), May 31.—This offering stands in its grace and the prettiness of its backgrounds rather than on its dramatic strength; for the story is commonplace. The producer was fortunate in being able to get a great deal of Japanese material in his backgrounds and has made a delicately exotic picture. The almond-eyed maid is played by Mary Fuller with a good deal of grace, but little fire. Richard Tucker, a white man saves her from slavery and his fiancee, Gertrude McCoy, takes her into her employ as a maid. The Japanese girl is in love with her protector and jealous of his fiancee. But when she sees some of her own people about to murder the man, she forgets her desire for revenge to save his life, getting (as usual in such stories) the knife in her own breast. The photography is very fair.

"ONE CAN'T ALWAYS TELL" (Vitagraph), May 31.—The rich aunt (whom the three girls have never seen) is coming to choose an heiress. So the slavey is discharged and an efficient woman is sent for. The aunt comes first, is taken for the new servant and decides to keep up the deception, even making the maid, when she arrives, play that she is the aunt. None of the three girls proves to have the kind of temperament aunty is looking for (this is unusual in this story) so she apparantly adopts the new cook. Mrs. Maurice, as the aunt, gives to the offering its best fun; but Kate Price, as the new cook, does her share. It is pretty well photographed.

"IF DREAMS CAME TRUE" (Vitagraph), May 31.—On the same reel is this which has no story in the real sense, and yet, by the work and personality of the players, made a few laughs. Hughey Mack and James Lackaye have roles.

"WHAT GOD HATH JOINED TOGETHER" (Vitagraph), June 2.—A good story of humanity in the rough; it has been originally thought-out, effectively pictured, and seemed to make an impression on the audience. It deals with life in a hovel village in the West, showing us the slatternly street, the bar-room and one of the poor cabins; but by its convincing showing of human fates that are not sensational nor abnormal, it has assured itself of our interest all through. We wouldn't like to live in that village, nor be those people, but circumstances might compel it, anyway, we can understand it all. Anne Schaefer, as the woman, carries the important role with well sustained truth and naturalness. She is ably supported by George Stanley. Robert Thornby and Major J. A. McGuire have parts. The camera work is fair.

"ALKALI IKE'S MISFORTUNE" (Essanay), May 31.—A lively farce in which eccentric camera work furnishes a very laughable climax. Much of it is old, but all of it is full of good fareical spirit and it will amuse; indeed, the audience seemed to like it a good deal.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 23," June 2.—There is nothing this week that is of very especial note; but we find the usual items, such as a glimpse of kings and queens (this week it is the rulers of Denmark and of Sweeden), a tornado in the West, some Baptist ministers, and the best item of all, a good view of Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the eminent Chinese revolutionist, as he is on his way to vote.

"THE RANCHERO'S REVENGE" (Biograph), June 2.—An ordinary story, very fairly acted, but not perfectly photographed. Lionel Barrymore plays a ranchero who advertises for a wife. Claire McDowell and Harry Carey play a pair of crooks who scheme to get his money. The woman goes West, marries the man and while she is planning to rob her husband, begins to fall in love with him. The other man comes out to demand that she keep her bargain with him and it is made to look as though he were going to make trouble. All he wants is the cash in the safe which he makes the woman open for him. There is a struggle scene and then a chase scene with the husband coming in at the climax to save both the woman and the money. It fails now and then to hit the bullseye squarely; but it makes an interesting offering, speedy and exciting.

"HIS MOTHER'S SON" (Biograph), May 31.—This is an imaginative picture of unusual characters which are convincing enough to awaken sympathy, partly because they are played carefully and consistently, and partly because the plot has been cleverly planned to hide the artificiality of one or two of its speedy incidents, such as that in which "his mother's son" kicks the lunch room proprieter about his kitchen. That vigorous-minded mother is a new character and, out of her, the situation is made to spring very convincingly. In the development of this we find the same traits appearing in her son; but now they are used not tyranously, but valiantly to save the weak old father, the sister and the poor boy (a favorite character with Biograph) and this gives the offering a very pleasing ending. Walter Miller plays the son; W. Christie Miller, the old father; Mae Marsh, the sister and Robert Herron, the poor boy. All the players do clear cut, commendable work. The photography is not as clear as in the best Biographs; but is very fair.

"LONE DOG, THE FAITHFUL" (Lubin), May 31.—An Indian story with the usual action expected in such. It aims at pathetic sentiment, like the classic Indian offering, "The Broken Doll"; but in a somewhat different way. It is not so effective a picture. We have the Indian attack on the white man's cabin and Lone Dog goes to bring help from the village, but arrives too late.

"THE SQUAWMAN'S AWAKENING" (Patheplay), May 31.—This story, with much that is old, has unquestionable freshness and has been convincingly made, except that its climax seems doubtful. The squawman has lived long with the red men and has almost forgotten civilization when two of his companions capture two white women and he rescues them. For this, he is condemned to die; but with the help of his half-breed child, escapes taking the child with him. He warns the caravan of the impending attack and later helps some of the women to escape. His Indian wife sees him with one of these white girls and shoots him. While he is wounded and helpless there is a struggle between the squaw and the woman in which the woman is easily victor, when the half-breed child comes to its mother's help, so the man gives the child to her and sends her back to her people.

"WHEN THE CIRCUS CAME TO TOWN" (Selig), June 2.—A little story of sentiment built on an impossible situation; but with a wholesome, human quality that will charm many spectators, especially in small communities. It deals with the natural desire of children to see the circus and shows how three raggedy kids, as a reward of honesty in returning tickets that they found, were given seats and peanuts. The small boys helping to water the elephants makes a good bit to go with such a picture. Roy Clark, "Smoke" Ferguson and "Baby" Lillian Wade are the kiddies. Written by Edward Hungerford, it was produced by Colin Campbell, and will make an acceptable offering in most places. The photography is only so so.

"A WOMAN'S HEART" (Lubin), June 2.—A melodramatic picture by Wilbert Melville. It is set against a background of ranch life and in one scene a part of the action consists of reflections in the quiet waters of a pool. The story is too improbable to be interesting. The photography is not always clear.

"PROFESSOR WILLIAM NUTT" (Edison), June 2.—A very enjoyable comedy picture by Alice Williams, with, as its chief character, a vegetarian who practices what he preaches though his wife is fond of all kinds of good things. The best fun comes when Nutt, after a lecture, is invited home to dinner by an old friend who had forgotten that he is living up to his name. There is a good comedy in the getting ready of that dinner. It is wash-day and catastrophy day too and these scenes are full of humorous house-keeping lore with a touch of reality that will tickle old memories in many a spectator. Dan Mason plays Nutt like a lover of Dickens, making much fun. Mrs. C. J. Williams, as the wife who has to get a dinner ready on short notice, keeps on human ground right through. Maggie Weston is a washerwoman; William Wadsworth is the young husband, and Madeline Adair, is Nutt's wife. This is the most worthy offering today in our estimation; it is clearly photographed and cleverly produced by C. J. Williams.

"WHEN A WOMAN LOVES" (Cines), June 2.—A three-part romance, pictured in some indefinite kingdom in modern times and on the brink of popular revolution. In the opening scene, which is a reception at the royal palace and in which is shown the stately entrance of the queen, we find that the story's leading character, a duchess and one of the queen's attendants, is in league with the conspiritors. We soon find her falling in love with a fervent youth who is arrested for preaching "the cause"; the duchess is able to get him out of prison. There is another woman in the case and jealousy, revenge and remorse, carry it to its end. The leading woman is not a perfect choice for her role; there is little in her of either the great dame or the conspirator. The acting, as a whole, is what was wanted, yet at times it is not sure of its intention. The ending is luridly sensational and. as an offering, the whole will appeal strongly to the uninstructed. There is much of grace in posing, sets and the photography.

"LET NO MAN PUT ASUNDER" (Essanay), June 3.—A good offering that was clearly pleasing to the audience.. Francis X. Bushman plays the lead in it ably supported by Ruth Stonehouse. One will also find many fine things in the lesser characters as acted by John Steppling, Joseph Allen, Bryant Washburn and others. The story is clear and chooses a significant situation, so truthfully human and worth while that a plain, simple development of it would have stood up well. In fact, the picture had a better "punch" up to the time the foreman was conventionally shown to be a coward, than it did at any time after. A man and woman had been divorced, because the man couldn't control his temper. The man had left the city and, to make a man of himself, had got a job in a mine which, later, through a legacy, becomes the property of his former wife. The man, at the works, has to see the foreman making love to her. What a chance to show that the man had now learned to govern his temper! The picture fails to do it very clearly, and loses its golden crown to rake among the dry straw of conventional melodrama. It is pretty well photographed, on the whole.

"A JEALOUS HUSBAND" (Lubin), June 3.—Emmet C. Hall, the author of this picture, took a situation that has been used before and has made a very melodramatic offering of it, wholly conventional in characters, situations and general business. It has been produced by Arthur Johnson and we enjoyed it all the way through, because of its lovely photography, its pretty sets and the work of its competant players: Lottie Briscoe, Florence Hackett, Howard Mitchell and the producer.

"RIGHT FOR RIGHT'S SAKE" (Edison), June 3.—A poor picture, carelessly made, indirect and somewhat confused. The players deserve credit, especially Laura Sawyer and some of the lesser figures. Then the sets are very fair and the camera man (an important personage in picture making, if counted with the laboratory force) has done his part acceptably. Something much better might have been done with this story.

"THE IRONY OF FATE" (Cines), June 3.—This story is fairly interesting, because it has been sincerely acted and the players (they are not too well known) are personally pleasing. But it is discursive and not concise enough; it lacks the piercing power of an arrow that is logically straight, has a barb of reality and has been flung out with some will power. The backgrounds are fine, some of them show grotesque, lava-covered hills with rocks twisted and bent or lying like torpid snakes; but we could wish for clearer photography in many of the early scenes.

"DREDGES AND FARM IMPLEMENTS IN THE WEST" (Patheplay), June 3.—A picture of big things doing; it shows how machinery helps in carrying on great labors. The photography is clear. Such offerings are primarily for the men, men who do things, and they seem to drink them up, so interested that they don't know it. It is like a fairy tale, anyway.

"A MARKET IN KABYLIA" (Patheplay), June 3.—On the same reel is this travel picture taken in North Africa. There is a good, clear map shown, so that all may know where Kabylia is. The photography is only fair.

"AN UNWILLING SEPARATION" (Edison), May 27.—A Decoration Day story that is not effective, because we are kept from believing in it by the palpable improbabilities in it, plain to all. There are too many things that deny the possibility of the situations arising under just these circumstances, such things as the wealth of both the children, as the fact that the old woman could walk, while the automobiles owned by both children couldn't carry the father and mother together. Then it is plain that the Decoration Day sentiment is dragged in; it didn't convince in itself nor did it belong inherently with the story. The acting is not impressive even at its best and there is no art in the photography.

"THE GIRL AND THE JUDGE" (Selig), May 27.—It would be hard to think up a human situation more effective dramatically than this and it has been well developed by Lem Parker as author and director. It is one of the best stories in some time, just as it is; but if he had made it into two reels and explained it more in detail, it might have been even better. Yet perhaps the fact that we are left to wonder as to many things rather than being told in so many gestures or subtitles, is the thing that holds us. In quality, it is a feature offering, a strong, substantial picture, well acted for the most part, clearly photographed and gripping; there is a vital glimpse of life underneath it that all will recognize. Kathlyn Williams plays a girl who has been deceived by a judge's son (Herbert Rawlinson) and has been deserted by him. In poverty, she is taken up on the street (for what, isn't made clear) and arranged before the boy's father (Hobart Bosworth), who reprimands her and sets her free. The boy has escaped; she doesn't even know his right name; but, by chance, asks for employment in the judge's home. Next morning she is waiting on the table; but before the boy comes down, the judge recognizes her, and this leads to two strong scenes, one in the library, one in the hall, where the boy meets her. Eugenie Besserer and Gertrude Arnold play the boy's mother and sister.

"DOING LIKE DAISY" (Lubin), May 27.—A short and very slight farce with one good laugh. It is used as a filler with the other number on the same reel.

"THE YARN OF THE NANCY BELLE" (Lubin), May 27.—A burlesque sea yarn as told by "the ancient mariner" to three children. The best of it is its burlesque characters, they are fine and will amuse old and young; but the yarn, a well known ballad, is only for children. The photography is fair.

"THE NEW SHERIFF" (Essanay), May 27.—A very good story with a fine comedy punch at the end. The central character is a simple member of a Western town whom the cowboys think weak-minded. Three desperadoes are making things unpleasant for the community and have just killed the old sheriff. The new man is the only one who has the spunk to take the job, and the way he makes good will tickle the average spectator very much. It begins in a leisurely fashion, and takes its own gate all through; but never fails to interest. One drawback, its poor photography, is noticeable; but the story is clear and that is the chief point in this offering. Arthur Mackley's company produced it.

"TRICKS OF THE TRADE" (Vitagraph), May 27.—This a neat, nifty little offering that might have been called "Human Foxes." It introduces us (we remain at a safe distance) to two of the cleverest ever, a couple of crooks that are making an easy fortune out of the carelessness and the charity of their kind. It is well to see for ourselves the "tricks of the trade" of such as these and the picture provides something of an education. It is entertaining in marked degree and can be recommended highly as an offering to the people. W. A. Tremayne, the author, must have some friends who are detectives. The producer has made it convincing and clear. The crooks are played by Harry T. Morey and Julia Swayne Gordon. Robert Gaillord and Dorothy Kelly are the detectives who bring them to justice. The photography is clear.

"BULL FIGHT IN FRANCE" (Patheplay), May 27.—A picture of a bull ring with the bulls charging unarmed men. The horns are covered and they are roped to keep them from doing any great harm to the players. It is a picture of wooderful feats of agility. One player is hurt; but no blood is shed. The crowds attending make an interesting picture. The photography is clear enough.

"IN THE FORESTS OF COCHIN CHINA" (Patheplay), May 27.—On the same reel with the foregoing is this industrial, showing us how big trees are felled and how lumber is handled in the southern provinces of China. It is a very interesting offering, clearly photographed and instructive.

"EXCEEDING THE TIME LIMIT" (Cines), May 24.—A rough farce in which trick camera work has a part. It made laughs, particularly among the children.

"THE MAID AND THE YARN" (Cines), May 24.—A rough farce in which a player, who is something of an acrobat, hunts for a lost ball of yarn and breaks all the vases and furniture in the house. This, too, made the children laugh. There are parts now and then that are laughable even to older folks.

"CURING A WOULD-BE AVIATOR" (Cines), May 24.—The three on the same film are alike in this that they are all rough farces and depend upon clown work. This is of like quality as the others. Such pictures often prove acceptable to tired spectators, but, to review one of them seriously, is quite impossible.

"WAMBA, A CHILD OF THE JUNGLE" (Selig), May 26.—A two-part special offering with live lions playing an important part at the climax. In quality, it is interesting and does not lack dramatic suspense; indeed, it is a very fair offering as a feature. Its worst defect is rather misty photography which keeps the scenes from having art effects, they don't seem to be in themselves alive, are even, in places, artificial. It is not the best wild animal offering the Selig Company has produced, but will go very well. We have already reviewed it at length in a former issue.

Independent

"A HEN-PECKED BURGLAR" (Solax), May 28.—A farce (with Fronie Fronholtz and Blanche Cornwell) that is new to us and that certainly "got over." It is the acting that makes it go; but it is well-written. The photograph is clear.

"SCHOOL DAYS" (Pilot), May 22.—Many will think this a rather suggestive picture and there is a good deal that is vulgar in it. We know from experience that there are some audiences that will like it the more for these things. There are some perfect sets in it and some extremely well chosen backgrounds. Also it is well acted and clearly photographed. The story, in main, is conventional, but is not dull.

"LOVE AND WAR" (Bison), June 17.—A story of a one-armed man who wanted to enlist with the others, when "Old Abe" called for volunteers to put down the rebellion. The fact that he seemed to be of no great use in time of war is shown as telling against him in his love story. Respect, honor and love are falling to his rival who, at the front, has been promoted to a lieutenancy and seems to be a very gallant man. The one-armed rival goes to the front as a reporter and, at a time of fierce fighting, rallies his rival's company and leads them to victory and then writes the story up giving the other man the credit. After the war the lieutenant is conscience-stricken and confesses to his own cowardice, so that the one-armed man at length wins the girl. There are battle scenes that are full of action and the story is told clearly, and although it is a bit too romantic to be convincing—it isn't dull. In the acting there are some pleasing things and there are many very good scenes. The photography is clear enough.

"SILVER THREADS" (Gem), June 16.—This is not a lyric photoplay in the sense that a former offering, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," was; but it does make use of the well-known tune to inforce its meaning. It is a picture of sentiment with some fine scenes and some engaging characters, especially so are the three friends, three Beaux of before-the-war days. The picture opens a few years before the war breaks, and then there is a lapse of thirty years and we find the lovers, whom the war had separated, meeting again. The quality of the picture is poetic and there is what may be termed delicacy of fancy in the scene-making that pleases. The photography is very fair.

"THE SPIDER" (Eclair), June 8.—A tragedy enacted by members of the Imperial Theater of Tokio at Yeddo. It is a hand-colored film. The villain mixes in the drink of the lovers the poison of a spider. The rival drinks it. The girl escapes. When the poisoner and the poisoned fight, the girl takes a dagger from the murderer and kills him. Then she kills herself.

"HE COULD NOT LOSE IT" (Eclair), June 8.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this bit of Oklahoma comedy.

"THE GHOST OF SEAVIEW MANOR" (Dragon), June 16.—This picture is a bit spooky at times by reason of a shadow thrown through a hole in a wall. The shadow is the reflection of a figure of a doll dressed to simulate a ghost. The object is to frighten two women dwellers in the effort to induce them to leave the premises.

"THE MAN IN THE WHITE CLOAK" (Great Northern).—Here are three reels of fine stuff. One exhibitor who saw it said in his opinion it was better than "The Black Chancellor." It is at least as big a picture. The picture stands out by reason of its photography; scenes taken in snowstorms are marvelously clear—it is real snow, too. There is a bit of double printing, where a man follows a shadow through two opened doors and out into the grounds, which is finely done. There is suspense aplenty, especially in the scenes where the man imprisoned underground tries to escape, and to escaoe in time to attend the sale at auction of his sweetheart's estate. "The Man in the White Cloak" holds all the way.

"HOPES OF BELINDA" (Solax), June 4.—A French style farce, in which appear Darwin Karr, Blanche Cornwall and Marian Swayne. The picture depicts the trouble that follows the efforts of a maid to win several men, using the photograph of her mistress as a lure. The rage of the husband will cause amusement.

"THE GOVERNOR'S ROMANCE" (Pilot), May 29.—Good drama. The Governor, in an effort to break up a band of anarchists, falls into the hands of the men he is pursuing and, as he has also fallen in love with the daughter of the chief, he joins the band. When lots are drawn to determine the assassin of the Governor, it falls to his sweetheart to do the deed. At a reception, into which she has forced her way, she faces the Governor; she recognizes him and turns her weapon upon herself.

"FOR OLD TIMES' SAKE" (Pilot), June 5.—A drama featuring Lottie Pickford; she does some good work. There are excellent photographs of rural scens and effective double printing. The picture will entertain.

"THE KIDNAPPED TRAIN" (Victor), June 6.—James Kirkwood and Gertrude Robinson have the leads in this melodrama that at times is thrilling, especially so in the scenes showing the locomotive in pursuit of the train. There is an unusual number of men in the picture; these, together with the factory backgrounds, contribute to the effectiveness of a well-produced and interesting picture.

"THE RANCH GIRL AND THE SKY PILOT" (Frontier), June 8.—This picture is commendable for the good views of New Mexico, out on the range. The drama is not especially strong; but there are one or two good bits of comedy which lighten it.

"THE RUNAWAY" (Thanhouser), June 3.—A very successful offering indeed is this story of two children from the orphan asylum. It is full of clever and amusing effects and the Thanhouser children score another suc cess. The struggle in the well was exceedingly well done, considering the age of the participants. A good number.

"THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK" (Powers), June 13.—In this film the doctor saves a man from drink for the wife's sake and then falls a victim to liquor himself, dying on his own front steps. This is a story of good moral intention, but rather sordid as it works out. The photography is not very clear in places.

"BILLY IN ARMOR" (Gem), June 2.—A comedy reel featuring Billy Quirk and Violet Horner. Billy gets considerable humor out of the main situation, where he masquerades in a suit of armor and detects the count stealing jewels. Fairly entertaining.

"THE SCAR" (Rex), June 22.—The heroine, whose face is scarred, becomes envious of her more attractive girl chum. She chloroforms her and cuts her face with a knife. Later, filled with remorse, she allows her own blood to be transfused into the body of her victim. As depicted, this none too attractive plot was only fairly convincing.

"FRIENDLY NEIGHBORS" (Powers), June 18.—A knockabout comedy number, in which an Irishman and a German do rough character work. This appears on the screen like the reproduction of an ordinary burlesque act. The fun is of a low comedy sort and winds up with a burlesque prize fight.

"THE STOLEN IDOL" (Rex), June 19.—Although we have seen pictures of this mystic, Oriental type before, this one is very well handled and holds the interest fairly well. Robert Leonard appears as the young hero with a liking for detective work; Margarita Fisher is the Indian high priestess. The action centers about a stolen idol, the scene being transferred from India to New York City.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 64" (Universal), May 28.—This contains several features of interest, including views of the Shriners at Dallas, Texas, pictures of Secretary Lane and Speaker Champ Clark, Rosillo's flight from Key West to Havana, athletics at Springfield, Ill., and others.

"THE GRAND OLD FLAG" (Bison), June 10.—A two-part story of the Spanish-American War. The Cuban atmosphere is nicely suggested and there is plenty of action. The adventures of two young Americans, picked up from floating wreckage, hold the interest till the last half of the second reel, when a good reproduction of the capture of San Juan Hill is given. The American battleship shown in one scene was of too modern a type to fit the picture. The views of the rugged coast were picturesque, and as a whole, the number succeeds very well.

"SELF-ACCUSED" (Imp), June 5.—A well acted and gripping film is this. It has to do almost entirely with the seamy side of life. There is a dramatic scene at the opening, wherein an escaping criminal forces a dying man to sign a confession of a murder committed by himself. William E. Shay appears as the police commissioner and Frank Smith as the old man. The suspense is well sustained.

"THE NEW TYPIST" (Crystal), June 8.—A pleasing half-reel comedy with Chester and Pearl as the lovers. The woman playing the homely stenographer has a good comedy face and we should like to see more of her work.

"BLACK AND WHITE" (Crystal), June 8.—This, on same reel with above, shows how a revengeful girl "doctors" her friend's toilet water, but later it is used on her own face. As a whole, this is a good comedy reel.

"JUST A FIRE FIGHTER" (Imp), June 2.—Jane Gail appears in this comedy film as a stage-struck girl, and Matt Moore as her fireman lover. She refuses him, owing to her histrionic ambitions, but after her experiences on amateur night, and his heroic rescue of her from fire, changes her mind. Matt Moore was a trifle stiff in his acting, but has a good personality for such a part as this. An entertaining film.

"FALSE LOVE AND TRUE" (Crystal), June 10.—This is a full reel comedy drama. Prof. Toscani, desiring to get hold of his pupil's fortune, writes to a supposed Italian count, who comes and makes love to her. Grace is quite enamoured of him, but he disappears when she loses her fortune. The young detective locates him and shows him up as a well-known crook. A consistent story of average interest.

"THE PILLAR OF PERIL" (Frontier), June 5.—The hero of this picture is a young university graduate who enters the U. S. Forestry Service. The scenes are out of doors and quite picturesque, though the photography is not of the best. The scene in the cabin, where he rescues her from the drunken trappers is the strongest in the film.

"WHY?" (Eclair), June 4.—This is a three part film, containing some striking scenes and some fine photography. The motive of the story is to show the manner in which capital and labor clash. Much of it is socialistic doctrine, strongly presented. The hero in his dream sees children working on a factory treadmill, horses being killed because their owners would not insure them, women working at half pay and using blood to make red thread, a board of railway directors depicted as pirates and last of all the City of New York in flames. Many exhibitors will look upon this as too suggestive in certain parts. It is very strongly worked up and perhaps too strongly for many audiences.

"THE MADCAP OF THE HILLS" (Reliance), June 7.—A romantic story of the mountains which would have been stronger if the heroine had not carried her heart on her sleeve quite so much. Her fickleness is too apparent to keep the reader's sympathy. The action is brisk, and the plot, such as it is, well carried out. Irving Cummings appears as the hero and Virginia Westbrook as the madcap mountain girl.

"CALIFORNIA POULTRY" (American), June 9.—An industrial film, going quite thoroughly into the subject of chicken raising in California. Many varieties of the birds are shown, from babyhood up. Ducks, geese, turkeys and pheasants are also shown; quite interesting.

"THE REWARD OF COURAGE" (American), June 14.—This is an attractive film story with Warren Kerrigan as the hero. In spite of a sprained ankle he manages to foil the married man who is making advances to his sweetheart. The fall from the canoe and subsequent rescue was very realistic. A pleasing number.

"FROM THE SHADOW" (Broncho), June 18.—A two-reel offering combining Western Indian fighting and the old theme of a mother sorrowing for her lost child. The Western scenes are of characteristic interest. After the Indian massacre, the young officer finds a baby still alive in its cradle. Later in the film, this child is placed beside his demented wife in the bed and its presence restores her reason. This story has been done before in various ways, but as it appears here it is well pictured and effective.

"HEARTS AND HORSES" (American), June 12.—The pony which Uncle Dan sent to his niece was stolen by a band of horse thieves. The young hero gets it back across the Mexican line by strategy and brings in one of the thieves after an exciting chase across country. The others are then rounded up. A lively story of the border type.

"THE FAILURE OF SUCCESS" (Kay-Bee), June 20.—This is a two-reel story of a man who deserts his wife and child to search for gold in the West. He marries again after divorcing his first wife. When he has become rich many things conspire to show him that money is not the greatest thing in life. Remorse overcomes him and he bequeaths everything to his first wife and child, having separated from the second, and becomes a wanderer. There are characteristic Indian pictures in this and spirited fighting. The photography is good and the plot unfolds in a natural, convincing manner.

"THE FRATERNITY PIN" (Majestic), June 1.—This is a very attractive little photoplay, with a large body of pretty college girls dominating the first part of it. The president of the class befriends the poor girl. In later years, when their fortunes have changed, the girl returns the friendship in an appealing way. The picture is a good one as it stands, but the close was hurried and could have been much more effective. A pleasing number.

"THE QUEEN OF THE SEA NYMPHS" (Majestic), June 3.—Something that appeals because it is new and different. It shows one of those wonderful little child swimmers at the California resorts, winning a swimming race against a grown man. The story built around this is rather slight, but holds the interest. A good offering.

"MISS MISCHIEF" (Thanhouser), June 8.—There is no plot to this picture, but it contains a good deal of amusement. It is a series of mischievous pranks played by a girl sent home in disgrace from college. She flirts with two brothers and they fight a burlesque duel, which she watches from a nearby tree. Later, she gets up a rooster fight and indulges in further exploits of the kind. The girl is attractive and the pictures good.

"THE WORLD AT LARGE" (Rex), June 5.—One of the most graphic pictures of the underworld recently produced. The part of the erring husband, the sorrowing wife and the woman of the streets were admirably handled. The husband is lured from his wife and family and finally murders a man in a saloon row, for which he is sentenced to Sing Sing for life. A strong offering of its type.

"AN INDIAN'S GRATITUDE" (Broncho), June 11.—This single reel number tells a story of an Indian athlete who wins the daughter of a neighboring chief by his prowess. The squaw deserts him later and this brings about warfare between the tribes and later with the regulars. At the end there is a dramatic moment when the man whom the unfortunate Swiftwind was befriending shoots him by mistake. A pleasing story of Indian life.

"A HANSOM DRIVER" (Keystone), June 9.—Mack Sennet as the cabbie and Ford Sterling as his hated rival, have quite a conflict over the fair Mabel. There is a wild chase and Sterling takes refuge in a tree. Fairly amusing.

"FEEDING TIME" (Keystone), June 9.—This, on same reel with above, gives an interesting view of the way alligators are fed.

"A CAGED BIRD" (Thanhouser), June 6.—This is the story of a princess who pines to go out and live among the people. She releases her bird from its cage and runs away. Her experiences are unpleasant and later she returns. Marguerite Snow appears as the princess and William Garwood as the prince who eventually marries her. Entertaining and effectively pictured.

"THE SPEED QUEEN" (Keystone), June 12.—A comedy reel in which Mabel Normand goes bounding over hill and dale in a racing automobile. Ford Sterling appears as the motor cop who attempts to overtake her. She gets off because her father is the judge and she is carrying medicine to him. A rather entertaining number.

"AN EXPENSIVE DRINK" (Crystal), June 15.—Handled somewhat differently, this might have been rather amusing, but there is too much drunkenness in it as it stands. For some reason it is hard for a "jag" to get a laugh in a picture, when he would perhaps get many in real life. The part in which the wife and host get tipsy on what she thought was a liquor cure, has a certain element of humor in it.

"MRS. LACEY'S LEGACY" (Powers), June 11.—A good character comedy, with a man posing in the part of Mrs. Lacey. The disappearance of the chair containing the hidden fortune and subsequent events were very funny, though similar situations have been used before. A sure laugh producer.

"THE FLYING CIRCUS" (Great Northern).—A three-reel offering of one of those fly-by-night circuses which here serves as the background for a romantic story, extremely well put on and effective. The players are capable and one especially, a gypsy girl and snake charmer, is all that her role demands. She suggests the right type of woman, one of the passionate kind, who are good villainesses and good losers, too. A woman with whom one can easily sympathize and we are made to feel strongly for her, consoling herself with the smoke of a whacking big cigar. It is a good offering for any place where this Bohemian kind of picture is acceptable. The camera work is of high order.

TIPPETT LEAVES UNION FEATURES.

John D. Tippett, for some time manager of the Union Features department of the Eclair Film Company, has resigned to engage in other business. Union Features was organized as a department of the Eclair Co., for the purpose of handling state right subjects for that concern. It will continue to be operated along the same lines at the Eclair offices, 225 West 42d Street, New York.

THE CALEHUFF SUPPLY COMPANY.

A Thriving Philadelphia Motion Picture Store That Sells Everything With a Solid Guarantee.

By Hugh Hoffman.

RIGHT in the heart of the busiest business section of Philadelphia is a store that is the only one of its kind in the city. It is a store that caters exclusively to the needs of motion picture exhibitors. There are enough supplies needed in a picture theater to justify the existence of such a store in every large city, and Charles Calehuff was the first motion picture man in Philadelphia to realize that such an institution was necessary in that city. Mr. Calehuff's association with the business goes way back into the earliest days of the film exchange business. He entered the exchange business in 1906 in Philadelphia and for five years was the leading film renter there. He was the first to introduce the automobile delivery service to and from theaters; a bit of enterprise that brought him the biggest trade of any exchangeman in Philadelphia.

However, in Mr. Calehuff's opinion, it is one thing to get a customer, and another thing to hold him. With all his up-to-date methods of attracting business he never lost sight of the fact that a good business must be conducted on the level. He knew that his fine automobile service would avail him nothing if he did not treat his customers on the square. Consequently there grew up a flourishing business under his name, and that name stood for reliability. There never was an exhibitor in Philadelphia who distrusted Charley Calehuff and those who dealt with him banked upon his word, in the full knowledge that he could always be relied upon.

In the spring of 1911, Mr. Calehuff turned his business over to the General Film Company, when that concern bought all the licensed exchanges and declined the offer of resident managership, much to the regret of his former patrons. It was generally supposed that he would re-enter the renting field on the independent side, but the wide-awake young man knew of something that was more needed in Philadelphia than another film exchange, and that was a first-class supply house. While in the renting business, he had carried a small stock of supplies as a side line for the accommodation of his customers, but the heavy demand for supplies convinced him that selling supplies is a business in itself, and he resolved to take up that neglected branch of the trade.

Leasing the store at 50 North Eighth Street, he began his new business under the name of the Calehuff Supply Company. It was practically a transplantation of the former Calehuff organization. All of his former trusted employees would not consider working for another man as long as Charley Calehuff was doing business in Philadelphia, so they went along with him. The well-known Arthur Hyman is now the road man, covering Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and the South. F. William Knapp became the store manager, and Miss Kathryn Burd is still Mr. Calehuff's financial secretary, as she has been for some years. With this trustworthy organization the Calehuff Supply Company began business and is now entering upon its third year. From the beginning it has had the full confidence of local and out-of-town exhibitors who consider Philadelphia their base of supplies. From a stock that is complete at all times, these exhibitors know that they can get immediate delivery of anything in the line of supplies they want, such as: all standard makes of projectors, carbons, spotlights, dissolving stereopticons, current saving devices, rectifiers, slides, lenses, theater seating, cameras, machine parts, ticket choppers, tickets, wire, reel cases, exit signs, rewinders, fire extinguishers, motor drives, rheostats, etc., and what is more, these exhibitors know that if they buy anything from Calehuff and it isn't right, he will see that it is right. "If we can't guarantee it we won't sell it." That's the Calehuff motto.

There is one other fine feature about the Calehuff Supply Company, and that feature is Frank H. Stewart. Mr. Stewart is one of the highest consulting engineers and electrical experts in America. He came to the Calehuff Company direct from the Edison laboratories at Orange, N. J., where he was engaged for a number of years in designing and perfecting kinetographic devices of all kinds. Any exhibitor who is in doubt as to the proper installation of electrical and mechanical equipment for his theater will find a wonderful help in this big, broad-shouldered, sunny-faced gentleman who knows every inch of the projection business, and then some. Mr. Stewart is there for the purpose of advising and helping exhibitors who favor the concern with their patronage, and one would have a long search to find a better man than he.

WOULD-BE ACTORS' COMPETITION AT EXPOSITION.

With the sole idea of discovering unknown talent, a competition has been arranged whereby any man, woman, girl, or boy who has an idea that he or she has a talent for acting will be afforded an opportunity of showing how good they may be before competent judges at the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, to be held at the New Grand Central Palace, July 7th to 12th. Two sessions will be held daily during the week. The lady and gentleman who win at each performance will take part in the semi-final Saturday afternoon, and from these, twelve will be selected for the final trial on Saturday evening at 9 p.m. To the winners will be given a cash prize and an engagement with one of the reputable film manufacturers.

The scenario to be used is as follows: A man or a woman enters a room in a state of deep despair, sits at a table, then hearing a knock at the floor rises to receive a letter. The letter is opened and announces the fact that he or she has inherited $50,000 from an unexpected source, which naturally causes the actor to show surprise, joy, and excitement. The envelope which has been lying face downward on the table is then turned over, and is found to be addressed to a totally different person. Surprise and disappointment are shown, then the funny side is noted, and the scene ends with a hearty laugh. This story is simple, but there is plenty of opportunity for action.

GREAT NORTHERN FEATURES WITH UNIVERSAL.

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Co., of 42 East Fourteeth Street, has entered into an arrangement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., whereby the latter concern will until further notice handle all the feature subjects manufactured by the Great Northern Company. For some time past these features have been supplied for lower New York and New Jersey by the Improved Feature Film Co., but under the new arrangement it is expected that the service will be greatly accelerated by the Universal Company in the territory designated. It has definitely been decided by the officers of the Universal, that the Great Northern features will be released as part of the regular program and in this manner it is expected, greater vogue than ever will be given to these sterling multiple reel productions.

Charles (Feature) Abrams, manager of the Great Northern Special Feature Film Co., explains that the shift from the Improved to the Universal Co., was made simply "for the good of the service."

"We have genuine features to deliver," said Mr. Abrams, "and our object is to have the lower New York and New Jersey territory covered adequately. With its methodical system and its chain of exchanges, we feel certain that the Universal Company will give the service that our feature productions merit. Our other territories are being looked after with equal care."

WOODS BACK ON BROADWAY.

Frank E. Woods, formerly "Spec" of the Dramatic Mirror, who resigned that position to join the producing forces of Kinemacolor last August and passed the recent season in Los Angeles, has returned to Broadway. "Spec" is looking fine, but is undecided as to just which of several forms of future activity he will take up. He had several tempting offers to remain in the west, but personal business compelled him to come east for a time.

COPENHAGEN FILMS COMING TO NEW YORK.

Richard E. E. Nathansohn, sole representative for the Copenhagen Film, Ltd., announces that he will shortly open an office in New York for the sale of his company's product. Mr. Nathansohn sailed last week for Copenhagen to make final arrangements for the New York office and will return immediately to offer a fine line of motion pictures to American exhibitors.

NO DEARTH OF FEATURES.

The Thanhouser offices report that they are feature-busier than ever: that there is absolutely no dearth in their own feature output. Ouida story is one of new multiple reelers —which will be welcome news to admirers of this firm's "Under Two Flags." A Lonergan story written especially for them will feature Flo La Badie and James Cruze—"The Snare of Fate." Thanhouser will offer "Tannhauser," too, in two reels. Maude Fealy, the legitimate star, appears in "King Renee's Daughter," which marks her photoplay debut.

"The Fatal Grotto" (Itala).

THIS is a good picture. It is well acted and splendidly photographed. The story is above the average. It is of a count who has failed in a conspiracy; the fact that the failure was to his country's injury as a success would have been to its welfare is in the view of those in authority no mitigation of his offense or rather it would not be if his connection with the disturbance should be discovered. In his effort to hide his arms and ammunition he discovers in the grotto which he determines to use the presence of a smuggler, one Vargas. The violator of the customs laws imposes silence on the disappointed patriot. Vargas later tells Count Marquez that he has decided to marry Nerina, the count's only daughter, and hopes he "will make no difficulty about it." Nerina and Andrew de Sarigny are already in love. Marquez pleads with his daughter to marry Vargas. Finally she consents; she sends for Andrew to tell him why her father has already rejected his suit.

Scene from "The Fatal Grotto" (Itala).

The lovers meet at night in the garden to say farewell. They discover the smugglers carrying away their goods. Andrew seeks an entrance to the cave whence the men have come. He learns the truth and makes preparations to trap the smugglers the following night. Marquez has determined at the same time to destroy the grotto by an explosion. He enters the cave from the sea. He places his powder and arranges the fuse, and to the latter he attaches a clock. After his departure the smuggler enters, also from the sea, and is soon followed by Andrew, from the garden. The father goes to the garden to tell his daughter about the coming explosion which will destroy the evidence against him. The girl tells him that Andrew is already in the cave seeking the smuggler. Then comes the attempt to save the lover. The girl enters the cave as the father hurries around to the entrance from the water.

In the cave the two men are shooting at each other. When the smuggler discovers the thin trail of smoke from the fuse he tries to extinguish it, but fails. There is an explosion. Two large pieces of rock fall on Vargas, killing him. Andrew and the girl are at the same time imprisoned in the cave, both exits being closed. A stream of water steadily fills the narrow space in which they are confined. Outside the father and a force of men are frantically working to release the imprisoned lovers. They succeed when the water is dangerously high. There is a pretty ending.

There are many fine settings, both of gardens and interiors. The suspense at times is marked, especially when the father is trying to save the lover of the girl from the dangers of the explosive he himself has planted. Also there are tense moments when the rising waters appear about to overwhelm the imprisoned couple. The picture is well worth seeing.

PICTURES TO ATTRACT LUMBERMEN.

D. J. Norton, head of the Ontonagon Lumber Company, operating in Michigan, announces that he believes that it will be necessary to install a motion picture theater within easy reach of the lumber camps in order to get lumbermen to stick to their jobs. Just now lumbermen are needed in the woods to peel bark, but the operators are having a hard time getting the requisite number of hands.

Cherry Kearton Animal Pictures.

An Educational Sensation Now Being Placed on State Right Plan by Adolph Zukor.

An unusual series of animal pictures, with many startling educational and sensational features, are now being presented on the state right basis by Adolph Zukor, who has organized the Arab Amusement Company to exploit these rare films. The pictures were secured by Capt. Cherry Kearton, who stands pre-eminent as the greatest living explorer of the jungle and the world's most daring animal photographer, after years of unremitting labor, severe hardship and privation. Capt. Kearton has devoted his life to a diligent study of the beasts of the universe, and the results of this vast knowledge and experience are recorded in these motion pictures.

The series comprise a wide range, covering a complete review of zoological life, from an ant to an elephant. Capt. Kearton secured these views from opportune vantage points, at obvious peril of life and limb, thus obtaining the most natural reproductions possible of the lion, the tiger, the ourang-outang, and many other beasts of the jungle, not a few of the pictures being the first ever taken with a motion picture camera.

But perhaps the most thrilling reel of the whole set is that one devoted to the native lion hunt in the heart of the African jungle. On the screen are seen Capt. Kearton and a little band of naked savages attacking at top speed the so-called king of beasts, unaided by the white hunter's modern resources or the high-powered rifle, in native fashion subduing and spearing the infuriated beast. Capt. Kearton evidently risked his life to bring these thrilling scenes, with all their movement and dramatic value, before the eyes of the civilized world, and incidentally secured the most remarkable animated photographs of the noted warrior race of Africa, the Masai, hunting and spearing lions as their ancestors have done before them for a thousand years, armed only with spear and shield.

But Africa alone has not been his field. In Borneo he has penetrated the jungle and taken moving pictures of the ourang-outang, the nearest approach to man, swinging seventy feet high amid the trailing rotan vines—the first motion picture ever taken of this interesting cousin of the human family. In India he has made a twenty-days' trip on an elephant's back, bringing away with him films of surpassing interest, obtaining a wonderfully close view of a tiger from behind a screen of leaves, as well as a remarkable picture of a python, the largest reptile in the world, measuring thirty feet in length.

But it is not always the big game that has attracted him while in the wilds of the jungle. The intimate life of birds and reptiles, and even insects, he has caught; chameleons of new species, ants and bees, and even a caterpillar during its metamorphosis into a chrysalis, an evolution which is consummated in exactly forty seconds, and which required six years of constant vigilance to record in motion pictures.

These films were enthusiastically endorsed by Ex-Pres. Theodore Roosevelt, America's most distinguished hunter of big game, who personally appeared at the Playhouse in New York City several months ago to introduce Capt. Kearton to his first American audience. Col. Roosevelt met Capt. Kearton in the jungle on his last hunting expedition, and became greatly interested in Capt. Kearton's work.

BROMHEAD SUCCEEDS BLACHE.

Herbert Blache, for several years the American representative of the Gaumont Company, has resigned his position as manager and severed all connection with that concern. A. C. Bromhead, who has been the managing director of the Gaumont Company of London since that concern was formed, has been appointed vice-president and general manager of the American Company in Mr. Blache's stead and is now in charge of the Gaumont interests here. Mr. Leon Gaumont, of Paris, is now in New York perfecting plans for the extension of the business of the firm.

TRADE OPPORTUNITY IN MALTA.

Advices from the American Consul at Malta (Island of Malta), have been received to the effect that S. L. Cassar, a professional photographer of Valletta, Malta, desires to represent an American picture house for the taking of motion pictures. There is a large military garrison stationed at Malta and it is one of the chief naval stations of the world. Naval reviews, picturesque religious ceremonies, local feasts and other interesting subjects are frequently obtainable. Corrspondence may be in English.

Universal City Elects Officers—Suffragettes Get a Look-In—Other News Items of Interest.

THE suffragettes of Universal City, Cal., captured ten of the twenty-eight offices at the first annual election of the municipality held this week. Universal City is the new town which has been organized on the Oak Crest ranch of the Universal Film Company near Los Angeles. The number of permanent inhabitants may be judged by the fact that, despite certain restrictions as to length of residence imposed upon the voters, there were nearly 700 votes cast.

Aubrey M. Kennedy, general manager of the company, was elected Mayor. The full ticket elected on the results of the official count is as follows:

City Attorney—James Dayton.
City Auditor—Belle Bennett.
City Assessor—Grace Cunard.
Tax Collector—Grace Skinner.
Police Judge—Jeanie Macpherson.
Chief of Police—Laura Oakley.
City Council—Edna Maison and Jessalyn Van Trump.
City Treasurer—Phyllis Gordon.
Board of Health—J. E. Singleton, M. H. Fahrney, Phillip Smalley.
Street Commissioners—Lincoln J. Carter, Wallace Reid, Harry Pollard.
Park Commissioners—A. E. Christie, Jack O'Brien, William Clifford.
Fire Commissioners—Donald MacDonald, Eddie Lyons, Bob Leonard.
Board of Public Works—Mae Costello, Ed Wortham, Frank Ormston.
Board of Censors—Margaret Fisher, Allan Dwan, Otis Turner.

Every member of the Kinemacolor company employed at the Pacific Coast branch in this city was given his two weeks' notice this week except the chauffeur and one of the employees in the developing department. Even David Miles and L. E. Dougherty, who recently left the Biograph company to take charge of the scenario department, were included in the list. The explanation of the wholesale dismissals which is current here is that it does not mean that the company is to close, but that there is to be a general reorganization. The expedient of letting all the members of the company out in order that a part of them may be taken back immediately under new contracts is one of the time-honored expedients of the theatrical business. It is the simplest and easiest way of cutting out the dead timber, and it seems likely that this may prove to be the case with the Kinemacolor company.

After four futile efforts to adopt a new constitution and by-laws at a general meeting of the club members, the Photoplayers have decided to hold a two weeks' election to decide whether the new regulations shall be adopted or rejected. The constitution was proposed by tbe board of control at a regular meeting, but action was deferred until a larger attentance could be obtained. Three times thereafter meetings were held, but at each succeeding meeting the attendance shrank and the board of control was unwilling to have a matter of such importance acted upon unless the action could be taken as the general sentiment of the members. Accordingly it has now been decided to place a ballot box in the club rooms for a period of two weeks, during which most of the members will have an opportunity to express themselves.

Announcement has been made that the management of the Lyceum theater, one of the second-class legitimate theaters of this city, has signed a contract with a local independent motion picture company whereby in the near future a complete expose of the mysteries and tricks of the motion picture business will be revealed to the public at a small admission fee. Mercury lights have been ordered and all the other necessary equipment is on hand for regular studio work. Pictures will be made on the stage at all the matinees and evening performances and persons in the audience will be invited to ascend to the stage and be photographed in the scenes. Later these same individuals by paying another admission fee will be able to see themselves on the screen at a run of the pictures in the same theater.

George Melford, Kalem producer, is continuing to make two-reel pictures of the kind which has been earning him a reputation extending outside trade circles within the last six months. He has just completed and sent East an Indian and military drama in two reels called "No Home, No People," which promises to be fully the equal of his "Last Blockhouse" picture, and he is now working on another double-reel production dealing with the underworld.

After an existence of about a month, tbe Graphic Motion Picture Company is no more. The studio on East Avenue 55 is vacant and a formidable legal document tacked on the front door of the office announces that pending the settlement of a claim of $74 against the company the property is in the custody of the sheriff. Anyone who can scrape together enough money to buy a camera and a few feet of film can start a motion picture company nowadays. The problem is to keep it going afterwards.

Tsuru Aoki, an exceptionally clever Japanese actress, has been working with the Majestic company, under Fred Mace's direction this week, in a comedy called "Mimosa's Sweetheart." The members of the company who worked with her predict that the film will present a very interesting new personality to the picture fans.

Wilbert Melville's Lubin company, which is being enlarged as a preparation of the making of a series of spectacular and intensely dramatic productions, now comprises two leading women instead of one. Velma Whitman, a comparatively newcomer in the picture art, but a well-known leading woman in stock and road companies, has joined the company. The other leading woman is Carmen Sobranes, formerly leading woman with the American company at Santa Barbara. Delbert L. Davis, crack photographer of the Lubin Philadelphia studios, who accompanied Mr. Melville back from the main factory when he made a recent trip East, is to have charge of the technical department of the Western branch it is said.

There will be no State censorship of motion pictures in California for another two years. The bill proposing to establish a commission, which was considered by the legislature during the session which has just closed, failed to pass. The reason was that at the last moment, when the State Printer's office was paralyzed by the rush of last hour bills, the discovery was made that someone had added a cipher to the salaries of $2,400 each provided in the bill. It was too late to have the bill reprinted and the legislature was not willing to authorize three salaries of $24,000 and so it was allowed to die.

Oliver Morosco and Charles Eyton, two local theatrical magnates, are among the principal stockholders in a company which has been organized to manufacture and exploit a motion picture camera for which they hold the patents. The feature of the new machine is that it is so small that one may take it with him in a suit case on a vacation trip, and so inexpensive as to be within the means of anyone who can afford to buy an ordinary camera of the better grade. Another advantage is that with an attachment it is possible for the amateur to use the same machine for projecting his pictures in his own home.

Griffith's Cafeteria, located opposite the Universal Hollywood studios, has become a famous gathering place for motion picture people. The proprietor was associated for a long time with Harry Matthews, now a director with the Evan's Powers Company, but formerly one of the Universal directors. Griffith claims to be the only man who ever had the courage to retire from the motion picture business, and on busy days, when everyone orders the things that are short and refuses the things that were provided in plenty, he wishes he hadn't. There is no need of formally introducing the individual of whom the accompanying cut is a likeness. He is known throughout the trade as Charlie "Feature" Abrams. The smile on his face was not coaxed out by any photographer; it is natural, and I doubt very much if anybody in or out of the trade ever saw him when he wasn't in the same mood. He swears that he is not an Irishman, and we haven't the time to investigate; but I do know that "he is there" when it comes to talking about films and film values, especially features. Abrams is one of the pioneers of the industry, and was one of the first to recognize the commercial value of the multiple reel feature subjects. The Great Northern Special Feature Film Co., of which he is general manager, was launched about three years ago, and since its inception has always been a paying investment to its owners and will continue as such as long as Charlie "Feature" is at the helm.

MAYOR VETOES PICTURE BILL.

Says Dowling Measure Is Against Public Interest—Hopes Proper Bill Will Be Passed.

By J. P. McNeill.

Mayor W. J. Gaynor, of New York, returned with his veto the Dowling ordinance regulating moving picture shows in Greater New York and accompanied his veto with a characteristic statement, saying among other things that selfish interests were responsible for the measure in its present form. The Mayor urged the Board of Aldermen to enact equitable legislation to regulate moving picture houses before the expiration of the year.

The Mayor's statement to the Board of Aldermen gives among other reasons for vetoing the measure, that if the Dowling ordinance went into effect it would do great injustice to proprietors of moving picture houses by forcing certain building regulations upon them, but restrict them by the elimination of galleries.

The ordinance known as the Folks measure permitted a seating capacity of 600, and in order to give the benefit of this larger attendance to the exhibitors where the auditoriums were small, galleries were to be erected.

The Dowling measure was identical in verbiage, etc., with Folks measure, with the exception of the galleries, which were not to be allowed to be constructed under the ordinance. The measure will come up again for consideration by the Aldermen, but it is not likely to receive enough votes to carry it over the mayor's veto.

Mayor Gaynor said that the provision, in the Dowling ordinance, prohibiting the erection of galleries in moving picture houses was a vital defect since it would discourage the construction of large moving picture buildings and encourage the unsafe, little structures which flourish at the present time. Incidentally Mr. Gaynor again went on record as to censorship of the films by stating that the criminal law could deal with immoral pictures, although he said none had been exhibited in New York.

"The cheap theaters of the city," said the Mayor, "have no limit put on them as to audiences. They early banded together to oppose this motion picture ordinance unless the provision for an audience of 600 was cut out of it and the audience kept down to the old number (300). Their purpose was purely selfish. I trust they shall not be able, in the end, to defeat it. It is time they were told they are not to rule in this matter."

Taking up another phase of the question and answering the argument that the Dowling ordinance was a "party" measure, Mr. Gaynor says:

"Others of your honorable body, whom I spoke to about the matter, told me that the measure was a party measure and they had to vote with their party.

"I asked them who made it a party measure and I ask you who made it a party measure? Are these owners of cheap theaters able to make it a party measure simply because most of them are petty politicians and petty district leaders of this party or of that? Did any party convention ever have a plank in its platform that this matter of safeguarding moving picture shows was a party measure? Did any head of any party here stand forth and make it a party measure? And if so by what right?

"This matter of party measures and political partisanship in the city government has been a curse. It is time to be rid of it. I have done all I can to rid the government of it. This measure is no party measure."

The mayor attacked certain members of the Board who own vaudeville theaters for blocking his plans and finally made this appeal to the City Fathers for help:

"The deplorable condition of these moving picture shows should not be permitted to continue and I appeal to every man among you, who is not financially and personally interested or under the temptation or control or leadership of some one who is, to dispose of this matter without regard to politicians or to parties, and pass the ordinance which the commission reported (Folks Ordinance.)"

GAUNTIER PLAYERS GO OVER TO JERSEY.

The Gene Gauntier players have erected and are now at work in an open-air studio at Coytesville, N. J. The leasing of the land, the purchasing of the lumber and the erection of the structure was accomplished in a few days under the direction of Jack J. Clark, who during the convalescence of Sidney Olcott from a recent operation for appendicitis had charge of the company. Mr. Olcott arrived in New York this week from Jacksonville. He is not yet quite his old self, but expects to take up work very shortly, possibly next week.

MISS LEAH BAIRD WITH IMP ENGLISH COMPANY.

With the acquisition two weeks ago of Miss Leah Baird, a former leading woman of the Vitagraph Company, who joins King Baggot of the Imp Company, another well-known and highly popular star has been added to the list of those now appearing regularly in productions of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Miss Baird sailed last week for Europe, where she will join Mr. Baggot and Mr. Brenon and appear in a series of pictures which will be produced in England. This series will take up important incidents in the history of the British Empire, and will be staged in localities where the many events of the English dynasty of the last two hundred years actually occurred. Mr. Brenon, who went to England several weeks ago, has made all arrangements for the taking of the pictures, and together with Mr. Baggot is now awaiting the arrival of Miss Baird before the actual work is begun.

Miss Leah Baird.

Previous to entering the picture field, Miss Baird was featured for three years with William A. Brady productions, one of the biggest of which was "The Gentleman From Mississippi." Prior to that time she was a member of stock companies with Arthur Byron and Mortimer Snow. Her theatrical experience began eight years ago at a salary which managers alleged to be $25 a week. "But I only received $20," declared Miss Baird, "which was a good percentage of the original sum promised, considering the uncertainty of pay days as far back as eight years ago.

"I have always been an admirer of the work of Mr. Baggot, and it has been my ambition to appear in pictures with him. When the Universal Film Manufacturing Company offered me the opportunity to go to Europe and taking a leading part in some of the biggest feature productions the concern has ever made, I simply could not resist the temptation to accept. From what I have been told of the intentions of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in regard to the pictures which will be made abroad, they will be something entirely new, and are bound to create a world-wide sensation. At any rate, I am going to do the best I possibly can to help do it."

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS.

The Moving Picture World desires to acknowledge a call from Mr. T. J. West, Baron P. A. De Robbiate and Mr. E. Seville Williams. Mr. West is from London and is on his way to Australia; he is widely known as the founder of "West's Pictures." He left New York last Tuesday, for Vancouver, B. C., from which point he will sail for Australia to look after his business interests there. Baron De Robbiate is the head of the Milano Film Company, Milan, Italy, and will remain in New York for a few weeks to arrange for a better market for Milano film in America. Mr. Williams is the managing director of the General Film Agency of London, and is in New York for the purpose of securing the foreign agency for American manufacturers.

GREAT NORTHERN HAS NEW OFFICES.

The Great Northern Film Co., of which Ingvald C. Oes is general manager has leased spacious quarters on the nintth floor of the World's Tower Building, 110-112 West Fortieth street and will take possession about June 15. Mr. Oes was reluctant to leave the old offices at 7 East Fourteenth street, where he has enjoyed prosperity for five years or more, but the quarters became somewhat cramped, he decided to join the field of film industry to the northward. The new offices are modern in every respect and will facilitate the handling of the company's increasing business.

Mr. L. J. Gasnier.,
Pathe Frere's Studio,
Jersey City Heights, N. J.

Dear Mr. Gasnier: I note with surprise the report published in this week's issue of the Moving Picture World. I refer to the article in that paper which states that I am going with the Reliance Company.

They are quite mistaken, I assure you, as I have no such intention.

I wish to authorize you and request you to make a full denial of this statement through the columns of that paper. With best wishes, I remain, very truly yours,

CRANE WILBUR.

INDEPENDENT EXCHANGE COMPANY MEETING.

A meeting of the Independent Exchange Company was held in Chicago, on June 2. The meeting was held at the offices of the General Counsel of the Company in the City Hall Square Building and P. A. Powers was elected to fill a vacancy on the Board of directors. William Oldknow was ejected from the office of president and from membership on the executive committee. Vice-president Frank T. Bailey was authorized to act as president pro tempore until an election for president of the company could be held, and Mr. Powers was elected to fill the place of Mr. Oldknow on the executive committee.

"PHILLIP MARCH'S ENGAGEMENT" (Essanay).

Phillip March becomes annoyed at the announcement of his engagement to Mary Adams. The society debutant, having never met March, becomes rather peeved herself at the outrageous announcement. March decides to absent himself from the scene of embarrassment. Mary concludes that she will visit a friend of hers in the country until the affair blows over. The funny part of the story is that both go to the same town. The intoxicated baggage man at the depot gets the trunks mixed and sends Phillip's trunk to Mary, and Mary's trunk to Phillip. When Mary discovers the mistake, she takes it with a grain of salt and dons Phillip's new dress suit, just for the fun of it. When Phillip opens Mary's trunk he is more than surprised to discover the contents are nothing but ladies' wearing apparel. Phillip's brother, whom he is visiting, suggests that the former put on one of the dresses and call on a friend. Both Phillip and Mary are astonished when they meet, and discover that they are wearing each other's clothes. Phillip makes a hit with Mary and proposes to her. The closing scene shows a telegram addressed to their friends in the city stating that the engagement announcement was perfectly legitimate. "Smiling Billy" Mason as Phillip March keeps his audiences in a continual uproar with his excruciatingly funny facial expressions. Beverly Bayne as Mary Adams more than grasps the situations which she has portrayed excellently. The comedy is a dandy from start to finish.

Scene from "Phillip March's Engagement" (Essanay).

This production is booked for release Friday, June 6th.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

Mr. Will C. Smith, Assistant General Manager, has been on a short business trip, attending conventions at Richmond, Va., Wilmington, Del., and Philadelphia, Pa. The following installations have been made: One No. 6 Cameragraph to Weiting Opera House, Worchester, N. Y., through Rex Film Exchange, Albany. One No. 6A complete to Frank Horton, Arcadia, Florida, through Consolidation Film and Supply Company, Atlanta, Ga. Two No. 6A to John Beella, Trenton, N. J., through Calehuff Supply Company, Philadelphia. Two No. 6A complete to H. S. Slagle, Sixth Street Theater, Coshocton, Ohio, through Oliver Moving Picture Supply Company, Cleveland, Ohio. One No. 6A complete with motor and mechanical speed control to Jones Theater, Fulton Street and Grand Avenue, Brooklyn, through S. Rosenbaum. One No. 6A complete with motor and mechanical speed control to T. J. Henreham, Nevada, Iowa, through Laemmle Film Service, Chicago.

"HER FAIRY GODFATHER" (Majestic).

She was a good enough cook, as cooks go, but the trouble was that her heart was not in her work. The master of the house complained bitterly that when she should have been studying how to make chicken a la Maryland, she was wasting her time reading sensational novels or flirting with a policeman.

Under the circumstances her employers felt justified in refusing to grant her favors, so when she asked permission to attend a picnic nearby they did not hem and haw about the matter, but told her frankly that she could not go, then to make her perfectly happy, they went themselves. The girl had her revenge, however, for she found that although she could not attend in person, she could attend in spirit. For she had a delightful dream in which, as she explained afterwards she made "the queen of the May look like the second cook in a poor house." It was all the work of her fairy godfather whom she found to be a spirit every bit as effective as a fair godmother. He wore a blue uniform, it is true, and instead of a wand used a club for his incantations, but he got results, and what more could be asked.

Yes, the girl is very fond of her fairy godfather, and she hopes the civil service board will make him a police captain some day. This subject was released May 27.

"LEGALLY RIGHT" (Thanhouser).

A wealthy man left his estate to his daughter, intending that his only brother should be her guardian. The document was awkwardly constructed, one of the sections reading "My daughter must live under the same roof with her uncle until she is of age; and be married under that same roof before her twenty-first birthday or else her fortune goes to the aforesaid uncle."

What the man really meant was that his daughter could not wed without her uncle's consent before she was twenty-one. What he really did say was that she had to marry under his roof before reaching her majority.

The fortune was fairly large and the uncle was tricky. He determined not to let the girl marry any one and thereby secure the money himself. For a time it looked as though his scheme would be successful, but a shrewd man found a way to circumvent him. This resourceful individual was a justice of the peace, and a great friend of the girl's father, and the sheriff of the county with whom she was in love. He put a job on the crooked uncle just five days before the girl's twenty-first birthday. The uncle was arrested for fighting and sent to the county jail for five days. The jail is the sheriff's home, and under these circumstances it was also the uncle's roof, so the justice of the peace married the girl and the sheriff under "the uncle's roof," (the prison corridor outside his cell). It was still the uncle's roof when the girl reached her majority, for the uncle had to serve out his term, while his niece and her husband naturally set up housekeeping in the sheriff's quarters.

Thus did a crook find that there is more than one way to interpret a will. This subject was released May 25.

NEW FEATURE FILM COMPANY OPENS.

Cleveland has a new feature film exchange—The Liberty Feature Film Company, a branch of the Liberty Film Renting Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and has opened an office at 224 Columbia Building, and already has an excellent list of features ready for booking. E. A. Wheeler is manager of the exchange.

Among the films now ready for service are "Tom Butler," an Eclair; "Maritza," an Ambrosio; "The Marconi Operator," "Unlucky Horseshoe," the entire "Lieut. Rose" series, and many others. It is Manager Wheeler's plan to release a new feature every two weeks.

"Hunting the Game of a Large City" is a feature soon to be offered in three reels, and this is a Kinograph production composed and staged by Elnar Zangenberg. "Maritza" is by the makers of "Satan" and is a strong story in two reels.

"THE KENTUCKY FEUD" (Satex).

A real treat is in store for all those who love picturesque mountain scenery in the latest three-reel feature just released by Warner's Feature Film Company. Miss Martha Russell, who has starred in two noteworthy features since February, plays a dual role in "The Kentucky Feud." As the story opens, she takes the part of the mother; as the story unfolds, the settings change to the mountains of Kentucky and Miss Russell plays the part of the nameless girl. Men's passions and their hatred for one another are graphically told in this stirring production. As the adopted daughter of the Cains, who are engaged in a feud with the Aftons, she falls in love with the son of her foster father's enemy; but when the clash comes, she takes up arms against him. Events follow one another in rapid succession and the story ends dramatically when the mountain girl discovers that she is the daughter of Jim Afton and is free to marry Paul, whose real name is Browning, and who is only an adopted son.

AT THE RELIANCE STUDIO.

Director Lawrence McGill is making a specialty of children and dog stories. "The Dream Home," released on June 16th, has the following interesting juvenile cast: Runa Hodges, Rosanna Logan, Clifford Perry, Viola Siddons, Helen Conelly, Gladys Eagan and Hazel and Alberta Perry, all well under the ten-year mark, with the two rival dog actors, Peggy Apfel (Rowdy), and Gypsy McGill well in the foreground.

Oscar C. Apfel has the ground plans completed for a three-reel starring vehicle to introduce Rosemary Theby as a Reliance standard bearer. "The Tangled Web" is the name of the drama which will be released on June 28th.

Thomas Mills and Irene Hunt will be seen as the two crooks in "Wallingford's Wallet," which will be presented on June 21st. Edgar Lewis is responsible for the stage direction of the drama.

Rodman Law is on his way to St. Johns, New Brunswick, where he will find the highest spot, above the St. Johns Falls from which he can slide down a rope and plunge into the raging waters as the hero of a coming Reliance drama. Edgar Lewis, with a company of Reliance players and four camera men, will join him there in the near future.

The convict ship scenes for the two-reel dramatization of "Half a Chance," the well-known novel by Frederick Isham, were taken on the old convict ship Success, built in 1790, which is now moored in the Hudson River. The result lends a particularly happy realism to the drama which would have been impossible under ordinary circumstances.

"THE MADCAP OF THE HILLS" (Reliance).

The beautiful outdoors scenes of this picture appeal to the eyes, long used to studio settings—and its sweet story makes just as strong an appeal to the heart.

Virginia Westbrook presents a very pretty picture as Tess, the madcap, and has some exceptionally fine business. Miss Claire Kroll plays her sister, and Paul Scardon, her father.

Irving Cummings, as Phil, Tess' faithful lover, does the usual good work that we have come to expect of him, and Alan Hale makes the role of Ford, the city chap, stand out noticeably.

Scene from "The Madcap of the Hills" (Reliance).

Tess falls in love with Ford, who after amusing himself with her, for a time, returns to the city. And in the days that follow Phil's real worth is realized by her and she finds her happiness in his arms.

HERBERT BLACHÉ JOINS SOLAX.

Herbert Blaché has joined forces with his wife, Madame Alice Blaché, and together they will guide the destiny of the Solax Company. The Solax Company's feature policy, which includes the plan to increase the feature output from one a month to one a week, has made it imperative that Mr. Blaché, who has a particular aptitude for feature production and executive direction in these matters, take up the work with his wife. Mr. Blaché, besides devoting the greater part of his time to the producing department, the department of the industry for which he has a preference, will also assist wherever he can be useful. Madame Blaché has painstakingly developed an effective producing force, besides having built up a smoothly working organization and general result-getting equipment. Now with Mr. Blaché to co-operate, the Solax Company will be doubly strengthened. The business is increasing steadily and the Solax feature department has grown to be as large as the regular release department, which produces regularly two a week, a comedy and a drama. The Solax foreign office, conducted by J. Frank Brockliss, it is reported, is doing big business, and it is said that Solax is one of the most popular American brands abroad. With their interests so rapidly developing, the Blachés felt that it was imperative that they work together and that Mr. Blaché disassociate himself from his other interests.

"TOM BLAKE'S REDEMPTION" A NOTABLE AMERICAN.

In "Tom Blake's Redemption," scheduled for early release by the American Film Manufacturing Company, a big locomotive of the Southern Pacific Railroad was used. The picture carries plenty of action and a stirring fight occurs in the cab of the fast-moving locomotive between Jack Kerrigan and Jack Richardson. Some novel effects were obtained with some new lens attachments enabling the cameramen to photograph from the interior of the parlor car some action occurring on the observation platform. Altogether the film will make a remarkable impression for its strong story and interesting camera effects.

"THE SUFFRAGETTES" (Great Northern).

This is a pleasing and harmless little comedy dealing with a timely subject. Miss Hampton is not only a nardent advocate of equal suffrage, but in capacity as president of the society, she advocates the denunciation of men and classes them as a luxury. Miss Nancy Lander is one of her followers, but Nancy in the course of time becomes engaged to William Hawtree, a promising young architect. One may well imagine the chagrin which overtakes Miss Hampton when she hears this news and she at once makes plans to teach the Hawtrees a lesson. During the absence of the young husband, the militant leader invades the home and causes all the furnishings that appear to her to be too elaborate to be removed to the basement. Rugs, portieres and upholstered chairs are carried into the depths below and in their place are substituted plain, ordinary furniture of the sort that was considered fashionable in other generations.

Scene from "The Suffragettes" (Great Northern).

When Hawtree returns from his office he is dumbfounded, but he decides upon a novel plan of action and leads Miss Hampton to believe that he is a believer in the principles of the society of which she is the head. Incidentally he makes love to her and during an embrace she carries on her cheek a smudge of ink which Hawtree had prepared. Wifey enters and there is a scene, but Miss Hampton is unaware of the fact that she wears an ink stain on her fair cheek.

Hawtree tells his wife of the plot that he has concocted and when Miss Hampton again calls at the family home she receives a chilly reception and departs in anger after she sees that the original furnishings of the house have been restored to their proper places. The comedy pleasingly acted by the Great Northern players and the element of fun is kept prominently in the foreground.

CLEVELAND'S JUDGMENT WINS.

W. S. Cleveland, founder and manager of the Cleveland circuit of vaudeville theaters, is called by many the "King of popular-price vaudeville brokers," on account of his many unique and strikingly original methods of holding and developing business for the theaters he represents. That the managers have implicit confidence in his judgment and are willing to go to almost any lengths to carry out his ideas was very forcefully demonstrated last week in two instances.

Theaters in two different cities on the Cleveland circuit complained that their business was not all that they thought it should be, so Cleveland decided to look them over. In both places he found that the gradual growth of the cities had carried the business center away from the theaters in question, and also that the architecture of the houses was old fashioned. In other words, the managers had not kept abreast of the times. In each case he told them that the proper remedy was to build a new and up-to-date theater, and to do it immediately. He picked out new locations and telegraphed his New York architect to send a representative to both towns at once. Before the end of the week the real estate transfer had been made, and in one town the work of wrecking the standing buildings had been commenced. Both new theaters will be ready for occupancy by the first of next September.

PILOT PREPARED FOR BIG BUSINESS.

For the past several days a number of carpenters have been at work on a piece of land back of the Pilot plant, which they have recently leased, erecting a large stage, for summer use.

Owing to the fact that Pilot is turning out only one release a week, they found they did not need the studio every day, so started renting it to feature film makers for about two or three days of each week. Then they found such a demand for the studio, which is exceptionally equipped, that they decided to rush the outdoor stage. As soon as this stage is completed it is believed both stages will be worked to full capacity every day, and probably nights as well.

"A WOMAN'S HEART" (Lubin).

A very romantic Lubin picture taken in California. The story is full of adventure and typical of the ranch and "Romany" life. It admits of picturesque scenery and atmosphere and will doubtless enjoy a popular vogue.

Nell Logan, the ranchmen's daughter, is in love with Lon Hardman, the foreman. All goes well until Lon meets Roma, a pretty gypsy girl, who is one of a band of fortune tellers. The girl pretends that she has sprained her ankle and Lon carries her into the camp. He is temporarily smitten and has many meetings with Roma, much to the annoyance of her tribe lover. One day Lon has to go to the bank to get the payroll and he leaves a note on the well, telling where he has gone and for her to wait. Roma tells her sweetheart and they plan to rob the foreman and kill him. Nell has interviews with the gypsies and they tell her to look into the old spring and she will see Roma in Lon's arms. Lon goes back to the well and as the gypsy girl induces him to show the roll of money, her lover strikes him from behind and he falls into the well. Lon's horse arrives at the ranch riderless. A posse is formed, they catch up with the gypsies and capture them. Lon is rescued from the well and Nell in her sweetness forgives all.

Scene from "A Woman's Heart" (Lubin).

ECONOMIZER AT NEWBURGH, N. Y., SATISFACTORY.

J. H. Hallberg "The Economizer Man" has just received from F. M. Taylor, Prop., Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., a letter under date of May 22nd, 1913, reading as follows: "I thought it might interest you to know that we did not get your A. C. to D. C. Economizer connected until 5 P. M. yesterday, and therefore did not have any opportunity of testing it out before the performance; but when the current was turned on everything worked to perfection, and the results were more than satisfactory. It made the Kinemacolor pictures remarkably clear and steady." This letter speaks for itself. Mr. Hallberg reports that he has just booked an order from The Scenario Co., Newark, N. J., for a special 100 amp A. C. to D. C. Economizer for the operation of two M. P. machine arcs at the same time, and he has also sold this company 2 Simplex machines. To W. C. Brainard, Auditorium, Greenport, N. Y., one Powers No. 6A with Current Saver; to Thompson & Schmidt, Elizabethport, N. Y., Powers No. 5, with Hallberg Economizer and Flame Arc Lamps; to E. Lee Schrum, Newton, N. C., a Powers No. 5. An unusually large number of Economizers are being installed in open air shows all over the country.

"THE GREAT PEARL" (Lubin).

This picture while being fascinating is also an excellent lesson on the failing of covetousness which, though not exactly a crime, causes repulsion by fair-minded people. The idea is taken from an Arabic legend and will doubtless leave a strong impression on the minds of those who see the photoplay.

Walter Trask receives news of his father's death and the loss of his fortune. He takes a position in a lumber firm and making friends with Balk, the superintendent, boards at the same house. Myrtle Green, the landlady's daughter, is a flirt and encouraging both men plays one man against the other. The rivals become piqued. One day Trask strolling along by an old oyster bed unearths a wonderful pearl. The superintendent and Myrtle have followed and coming up at the moment, a quarrel ensues in which Trask drops the pearl. Myrtle quickly picks it up and rushes to the village jeweler. Trask and Balk follow and find her trying to sell the gem. Balk insists that she shall return the pearl to Trask, but he being disgusted with her refuses to take it and tells her to give it to Balk, who also refuses it. Myrtle still flirts with the two men, who discovering her worthlessness repulse her. One night in her room she is gloating over the pearl when it suddenly explodes. Thus exemplifying that "All is vanity and shall crumble to dust."

ERNEST SHIPMAN'S WORLD PLANS.

Within the next two weeks a syndicate of men will meet in New York with a view to arranging plans whereby they will make a cruise of the world in their own vessel, making moving pictures in all foreign waters.

Ernest Shipman, identified with some of the recent moves in the picture game, is back of the movement, and a market for 7,000 feet of film per week is already contracted for.

A picked company of twenty players, three directors, four camera men, two scenario writers, etc., will be carried, it is said, and the best mechanical equipment that money can buy.

It is expected that one or two newspaper men and magazine writers will accompany the expedition, also that a noted professor will be one of the party. It is expected that some very valuable scientific and natural history films will be secured by this means.

In addition to dramatic and humorous subjects describing the customs of the peoples of foreign countries, travel pictures, and films depicting the military, civil, and industrial customs of the various countries visited will be made.

It is stated that data is now in hand for nearly every craft that is available in American and British waters, including the Nourmahal, the yacht of the late John Jacob Astor, which is now riding in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro.

Mr. Shipman is optimistic as to the great possibilities of this foreign trade. He has piloted theatrical companies round the world several times, and exploited "The Kilties Band" in a 25,000-mile jaunt.

His handling of the Burns-Johnson championship fight pictures netted over $200,000 for Hugh D. McIntosh, the Australian promoter, during which time he exhibited the films in almost every corner of the world.

It is estimated that by the first of November, these foreign-made films, manufactured aboard the first floating studio in the history of moving pictures, will be ready for the public of all countries.

"100 YEARS OF MORMONISM."

H. M. Russell, manager of the Golden State Moving Picture Company, is en route for New York and London for the purpose of selling the State and foreign rights to the six-reel feature film entitled, "One Hundred Years of Mormonism." Three companies operating in the States of California, Utah and Nevada are said to have played to large receipts at the fifty cent scale of prices.

Contracts have been let with an Eastern lithograph firm for a big edition of four-color work, and arrangements are under way for opening up a foreign office to exploit the European, Asiatic, and Australian fields.

Mr. Russell has closed contracts at Chicago for a number of the Western States, operating from the Sherman Hotel, and will be registered at the Waldorf Astoria in New York City.

"HALF A CHANCE" (Reliance).

This two-reel production was made from the book of the same name by Frederic Isham, by special arrangement with the publishers, Bobbs, Merrill & Co. Oscar C. Apfel, who staged the picture, has made an exceptionally good thing of it. Some of the scenes of the story are laid aboard a convict ship, and to get a better effect, Mr. Apfel arranged to take these scenes on the old convict ship, Success.

The spectacular storm at sea and the sinking of the vessel as Frisco Pet, the convict, jumps overboard and swims to the life boat with the little girl who had been forgotten, his own coming ashore on a raft and his later life alone on the desert island makes the first reel of this film intensely interesting. Years later Frisco Pet returns to London and becomes a criminal lawyer by reason of the knowledge gained on the island from an old box of law books washed ashore from the wreck. He meets the child he saved and they fall in love. But it is not until, through some clever detective work he clears his name, tarnished years before by a degenerate nobleman who was willing to let another suffer rather than expose his name to scandal, that he speaks to the girl of his love. Then he shows her the locket given by her years before to the poor convict for whom her tender child heart ached. When she sees this she knows that the man before her is the same who jumped from a sinking vessel and saved her life almost at the risk of his own. A pretty love story is the result.

George Siegmann makes a fine characterization of Frisco Pet, the brute who later regenerates. Irene Howley plays the girl, and little Rosanna Logan is the child. Others in the cast are Eugena de Lespine, Stanley Walpole, George de Carlton, Sue Balfour and Ralph Lewis. This film will be released on June 14th.

CORRESPONDENCE

ILLINOIS.

MUNICIPAL interest in the picture show in Illinois continues very keen. The City council at Rock Falls, which by the way is the sister city of Sterling of the six-day shows, has voted down the Sunday shows. A petition to show the best class of pictures and in addition some clean vaudeville was refused by four of the six aldermen. It is only a year ago that the seven-day show came to Decatur, but steps have been taken to oust it. A laymen's movement is responsible but the plan has been given impetus through the Ministerial Association. A committee of five persons from each evangelical church was called to a meeting and a central committee to work out the plan is contemplated. A decision was given a year ago in the case of the City of Decatur against Thomas P. Ronan, which showed that an ordinance will have to be passed before the Sunday show can be abolished. It is hoped by the agitators to secure a referendum vote of the citizens which will cause the council to pass such a measure. Wilmington wants to protect and encourage home industry, so the council is discussing the advisability of changing the $50 a year license ordinance so that natives who run picture shows will be exempt. The matter of charging a license is up at Woodstock, but Mayor Olson is inclined to be fair and named a committee from the council to confer with the picture show men. Ottawa has a policewoman—Miss Viola Miller—and, as every move she makes is watched by the public, attention has been drawn to some picture houses which, to a certain extent, have been aiding in violating the curfew law. Miss Miller is declared to have entered the houses and taken home some youngsters who should have been in bed.

Mayor Latham of Hillsboro has delivered himself of a few sentiments upon the matter of fights for business between picture show managers and where it leads to. The Opera House had advertised a program containing the Thaw-White episode. It is said a protest against it was started by Albert Anthony, superintendent of missions of the Baptist church, and the Methodist and Baptist church made formal protests to the city council and Rev. Mr. Keller of the Lutheran church scored the picture in a sermon. The picture was canceled by Manager Ed Fellis.

"I don't want to be considered too nice or too good," declared the mayor, "nor do I want to limit the people's pleasures too much, but as long as I am mayor I hope to maintain a reputation for Hillsboro being a clean, orderly, decent town where decent respectable people will want to live and raise their children. The present fight being waged between our local picture shows tempts the managers of these shows to put on pictures that will cause talk and bring the crowds to their places, but if I can prevent, and I believe I can, there will be no questionable pictures shown here and no rough stuff permitted by traveling vaudeville people who have no sense of decency and who think they can't be funny without being nasty."

The newly incorporated Ideal Amusement Company, of Canton, has taken over the leases of the Princess and Varietie in that city. E. R. Miller and L. B. Woodruff who have had charge of the Varietie will manage both houses, William Duffield stepping out at the Princess. The Varietie will be an exclusive picture house while the Princess will play pictures the first half of the week and vaudeville the last half. The new concern, which has been incorporated with a capital stock of $20,000, has elected officers as follows—president, L. B. Woodruff; vice-president, E. R. Miller and secretary-treasurer, E. R. Beam. The company has opened a business office at 24 West Elm Street.

J. C. Kendall has decided not to make room for a picture show in the new building which he is erecting in Hillsboro.

Miss Maxine Swan, the little daughter of Burr Swan, manager of the Knights of Pythias Opera House at Pittsfield recently celebrated her sixth birthday anniversary with a "picture party." A regular program of films was given to her little schoolmates and a four piece Italian orchestra furnished music.

Manager Alger of the Crystal at Paxton is bringing the Boy Scouts of that city into deserved prominence by having their band play in front of his place. The boys are admitted to the show free.

Fairview is now without a picture show.

The picture show, which has been operating in the village hall at East Alton, has closed. It is rumored that a new house may be constructed there before next fall.

Rev. W. W. Aylesworth, pastor of the Fourth Street Methodist Church in Sterling, mentioned in a recent issue of the World as advocating the use of moving pictures in the church is going just a little bit stronger. He has announced his intention of going before the church board and asking them to purchase a machine which can be used in the services and hold the young people now attending and to attract more.

C. L. Gordon of Arcadia, Mo., has opened a picture show in the building at Greenview which has been occupied by a skating rink.

The Lee County Fair Association believes that moving pictures will be a paying attraction at the next exposition and the Green River Amusement Company has been awarded the concession.

Business changes at Pawnee have crowded the Royal theater out of a location.

The Gulf Educational Film Service Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000 to manufacture moving picture supplies. The incorporators are Arthur E. Nelson, William W. Mackay and Roy F. Mitchell.

The Rex Theater at Petersburgh now is without opposition, the Crown having closed its doors.

Business in Roberts is so good that Seng Brothers will operate their show two nights a week instead of one.

After eighty souvenir spoon nights, Manager Swan at Pittsfield has discontinued the practice. In that time, he estimates, souvenirs have been given to 12,000 women.

The Grand Theater at Kewanee has changed its policy and is playing two acts and three reels of vaudeville for the summer. Three shows daily are given. George Bowley of Chicago has accepted a position as pianist with the house.

The Family Theater at St. Joseph has gone out of business leaving the field to Frank Rice who is running a show in Woodman Hall. It is reported that James Reese, owner of the building in which the Family was conducted may re-open the place.

R. C. Schroeder, the new manager of the Colonial at Galesburg, was host recently, to about 200 newsboys of the city.

Louis Frick, Jr., has sold his lease on the new opera house being constructed at Albion to the Majestic Theater Company, which will install Ben S. Mayne as manager.

Miller & Woodruff have opened the Airdome at Canton for the summer with a program of pictures.

The Engineers' Club of James Millikin University, Decatur, recently gave a moving picture show at the high school showing the manufacture of steel. The Decatur high school has purchased a machine and this shows one of the purposes it may serve in any educational community.

According to newspaper reports Pekin is to have another picture house. It will be located at Fifth and Court Streets in the old Post-Tribune building and will be operated by a Mr. Meyers of Peoria, who has been in the dry cleaning business.

The Morse Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $3,000 to operate theaters. The incorporators are Israel Slavin, Abe Jacobs and Eugene Qugby.

Freeport has been having some competition over the local film question. The Orpheum and the Lyric had on exhibition at the same time some reels of Freeport. The Orpheum had the pictures taken but Manager Hopper of the Lyric used his own taking machine. Hopper contemplates doing considerable work in and around that city.

The Gaiety Theater in Galesburg may be rebuilt.

The Profitt Building at Saybrook has been remodeled for the Woolley Brothers moving picture show.

Cy de Vry, animal trainer at Lincoln Park Zoo, gave his picture show before the Elks Club of Rockford recently at a twenty-five cent admission. In the afternoon the trustees gave a free show for the children of the city.

The city of Alton has been acting as host to a good many conventions recently, and it is noticeable that many programs include a visit to the Princess.

W. W. Fields opened the Grand Theater at Eighth and Lind Streets, Quincy, May 3.

The protestant churches of Litchfield, have circulated petitions asking for the closing of moving picture houses and pool rooms on Sunday, and it is likely that the new city council may take action upon the proposition. There are but two houses in Litchfield, but as Sunday is their banner day, they are anxious to find some way of preventing the closing. The pool room owners have already begun a movement to fight the change.

P. W. Barclay, of Oak Park, has suggested to the citizens of that city that the moving picture theaters be allowed to open on Sunday. He declares that young people often go to other cities and towns in which the moving picture theaters are not as well regulated and conducted as in Oak Park, and that provision should be made for their entertainment and education at home. He cites many towns in the West where this plan has been satisfactorily worked out.

The Illinois Congress of Mothers, in its annual convention in Jacksonville, passed a resolution in which it placed its own record as taking a definite stand for the uplift of the social life of the young people of today, and to this end protested against the ultra-modern forms of dancing, uncensored picture shows and uninvestigated plays of local stock companies. A committee from the Rock Island Woman's Club, of Rock Island, met the members of the city commission of that city and a general discussion was held upon the subject of moving picture shows and pool halls. The idea was to better conditions, but nothing definite came of the conference, although it was announced that plans would be outlined at a later meeting. The Village Improvement Association, a woman's club of Upper Alton, is co-operating with J. J. Reilly, of the Ouatoga Theater, and lends its indorsement to the class of shows put on at the Princess, by acting as an agent of the house. Manager Reilly furnishes them with rolls of tickets which are sold at the regular price, and the club is allowed a commission on all sales.

An unusual advance in esteem for the educational motion picture shows recently was witnessed at Dixon, where six reels, showing the process of cotton textile manufacture were shown, under the auspices of a number of dry goods merchants of that city. Not only were the public schools of Dixon dismissed for the performance, but a delegation of young folk from all over Lee county, some of them from the rural schools, were present.

The Seaver Amusement Company, of Peoria, is to build another new house in that city to be known as the Duchess. A lease has been taken on the Comstock property on South Adams Street and a new three-story building to cost $75,000 will be erected before October 1. The upper stories will be used for office purposes. The place will seat eight hundred persons and will be an exclusive motion picture house. It will be equipped with pipe organ, chimes, orchestra pit, etc.

Henry King has suspended business at the Comedy Theater in Murphysboro.

Because of an epidemic of scarlet fever at Granite City the moving picture theaters were instructed by the mayor not to permit children under 16 years to attend.

Lemon & Mann are giving nightly picture shows at Burns' hall in Huntington.

The American Cinematograph Company, of Chicago, has increased its capital stock from $5,000 to $100,000.

The Majestic at Peoria called off its picture show until 5:30 p. m., the week of May 19-26, to give way to a cooking school, conducted by the Peoria Star.

The moving picture theaters in Sterling gave extra programs the last Sunday night they were permitted to run.

The Madison Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000, to operate places of amusement. The incorporators are Aaron J. Jones, Adolph Linick, Peter J. Schaefer.

The Star Theater at Lincoln has reduced its price for matinees to five cents for all except the Saturday matinee which is five and ten cents.

Rev. James Potter, of Rock Falls, delivered a sermon against the Sunday picture shows declaring that the pleas for opening ignored the real issue which was the money there was in it.

J. B. Stine has decided to open a moving picture show at Hoopeston. Nelson Petry, who is in the moving picture business at Watseka and other Central Illinois towns, also contemplates invading the Hoopeston field. He may build a house which can be used for road shows as well as for photoplays.

E. L. Hammer and F. Ackerson have built and opened the Starlight Airdome on Sixth Avenue near Fifteenth Street, in Moline. The place has accommodation for six hundred persons.

The Illinois State Medical Society used a great many motion pictures at its sixty-third annual meeting at Peoria, May 20, 21 and 22. Eight reels treated with various nervous and mental diseases were shown by Dr. Theodore W. Weisenberg, of Philadelphia, Pa. One reel was devoted to the care of the baby. The Edison Company had a man present to demonstrate to the physicians the making of motion pictures of clinics and the value, to medical science, of these clinics.

The Grand Opera House at Plano is closed on Monday and Tuesday nights. Pictures are shown on Wednesday nights and vaudeville and pictures Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights.

The Plaza theater at Mt. Vernon has purchased a new pipe organ.

The Star theater at Elgin has switched to the Mutual service.

Petey Wales who has been operating moving pictures in a number of northern Illinois towns, has decided to construct an opera house at Lanark. He is asking the public to assist by the purchase of tickets for the opening performance.

William Duffield, who was manager of the Princess theater in Canton, prior to its absorption by the Ideal Amusement Company, will remain upon the staff of the Princess theater.

An airdome has been opened by the management of the Daley theater at Carlinville. A picture policy similar to that of the theater will be conducted and vaudeville will be run when good acts can be secured.

Harry H. Hofer, manager of the Highland Park, at Quincy, has been in Chicago, arranging for moving pictures and vaudeville programs for his resort.

The city council at LaSalle ordered an investigation made of charges that managers of moving picture theaters were charging ten cents when their licenses specified five cents.

Harry Blosten, who has been managing the Wildey theater in Edwardsville for a year, has announced that his lease expires June 30. He will manage the place for another year.

R. C. Schroeder, manager of the Colonial theaters—one of which was known as the Colonade—gave carnations to all ladies who attended the re-opening of the Colonial.

The Valley theater at Moline has ended its vaudeville and musical comedy season and will re-open with a picture program. Manager Rosenfield of the Family has opened an airdome at Fifth Avenue and Fourteenth Street which will play stock.

Moving pictures will be used for teaching geography and history in the schools on the east side of Aurora, if the plans of the Board of Education of Aurora are carried out. Investigation of results in other cities has begun its plan to run a number of industrial films.

Vandals who defaced a large number of windows in Galesburg with a diamond or a glass cutter, left an indelible "5" upon the box office of the Colonial theater.

Theodore Holly, Peru, is at the head of an enterprise which will conduct an airdome in Cedar Point, this summer.

Gardiner & Leonard's airdome at Virden was visited by fire, May 12, suffering a loss of $200.

C. A. Keller has moved his moving picture show into the Dalrymple building at Chrisman.

The summer season of moving pictures at the Warrington theater in Oak Park commenced May 19.

Mrs. Ella Rose was granted a judgment against Mrs. Emma Ream and others for $200, an action in a distress warrant for rent for the Iris moving picture theater in South Main Steet, Rockford. The Iris has been closed since the suit was filed.

Cameramen were numerous at Quincy when the state convention of the Travelers Protective Association was in session. G. W. Helmrich of the Motograph Company, of St. Louis, took some films of the delegates and of the points of interest of the city for the Bijou, and B. E. Newman of the American Motion Picture Company made some reels for the Gem and Savoy theaters. Later Schwindeler & Nelson, proprietors of the Colonade, had Osgood, the Galesburg, Ill., cameraman take a number of pictures to be shown at their house.

William Tifft of the Vaudette, at Sterling, closed a contract with the Advance Motion Picture Company, of Chicago, to take a set of pictures in that city, May 22.

The Lyric theater at East St. Louis, featured for a week two reels of local pictures, including inauguration of Mayor John M. Chamberlin, the inaugural parade, a baseball game between the newspaper men and the city officials and other local events.

Owing to opposition, moving picture shows in Homer Park on the Illinois Traction System, near Homer, will not be operated on Sunday.

The Randolph Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000 to operate a theater. The incorporators are Aaron J. Jones, Adolph Linick and Peter J. Schaefer.

J. H. McClelland, chairman of the committee in Decatur, which is fighting the Sunday picture shows, has named five men to investigate conditions.

An unusual campaign is being conducted in Joliet by two of the largest corporations of that city—the Illinois Steel company and the Chicago & Joliet Electric Railway Company. The traction company takes three hundred to four hundred school children daily in special cars to the steel works club, where the safety expert of the steel company entertains them with a lecture upon the accidents common to children. These lectures are illustrated by moving pictures.

The New City Theater Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000, to conduct amusement enterprises. The incorporators are, Arthur Rosenthal, John A. Bussian and Joseph Strauss.

The ordinance providing for the opening of moving picture shows on Sundays in Rockford, has been adopted by a vote of ten to three. There was much discussion over the measure. Alderman Wilson made a plea against allowing them to open on Sunday evenings. He declared the owners and managers advertised that no performances would conflict with religious services. An amendment specifying the hours from 2 to 5:30 p. m. and from 7 to 2:30 p. m. was adopted. When a substitute ordinance proposed that all show houses be placed on an even footing at $100 a year license, Alderman Wilson moved to strike out the license fees for moving picture houses, vaudeville and the grand opera houses. He contended that if places are as elevating in their character as was portrayed they ought not to be licensed any more than the council would seek to license a printer or a baker or a candlestick maker. The photoplay managers, however, are willing to pay the license fee and that section went through. The ordinance places amusements under two sections instead of four. The first includes moving pictures and theatrical attractions and the second class includes circuses and similar attractions. Provision is made that children under fourteen years will not be permitted to attend before four o'clock in the afternoon of school days unless accompanied by an adult. A board of censorship consisting of the mayor, chief of police and a council member will see that immoral, obscene, indecent, vulgar films, or films of a suggestive, vulgar, or indecent nature, or posture position, or pose, or any film representing, portraying, or describing any prize fight, murder, robbery, holdup, hanging or execution, is not shown. A local photoplay manager present at the meeting wished an explanation of this, declaring that the day before in Chicago, he had seen a murder film which had a strong moral. The explanation was not forthcoming and a change was not made. At an earlier meeting Alderman Johnson, socialist, wanted a provision made for the regulation of prices on Sundays.

The new Drexel theater at Joliet is giving two box seats for every home run made by a city league player during the local baseball season.

Lightning recently struck a wire running into the Colonial theater at Galesburg and threw John Cater, an operator, against the wall of the operating room and stunned him. Fred Gerloff, the other operator was hurt by flying glass. The piano players, Miss Hattie Pearson and Miss Fay Randall, helped to quiet the audience, Raymond Schroeder, proprietor of the Colonial, writes to friends in Joliet that he has a plan to use handsome calendars to advertise his house.

The moving pictures made for the Bijou at Quincy, included a picture of "Albert D. Cashier," the only woman who went through the entire Civil War. She has for years been an inmate of the Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' home at Quincy, posing as a man. The officials kept her sex a secret.

"The value of this new form of recording cases is that they remain accessible to the profession long after the abnormal parent has disappeared," declares Dr. T. H. Weisenburg, professor at the medico-chirurgical college of Philadelphia, in showing delegates to the Illinois Medical Society at Peoria moving pictures of micro-organisms. The professional men present declared the films were miraculous. "The beating of a living heart will be reproduced by the cinematograph within a short time" announces the professor.

The Reliance three-reel feature, "The Bawler-out," has proved a very popular attraction in Illinois. There has been a great many local crusades against the loan sharks, and all opposition to the film has been profitable to exhibitors.

Moving pictures are one of the evening attractions at Al Fresco Park at Peoria.

Walter McKillop who has been conducting moving picture shows at Hamilton, Ohio., will open a picture show in the Brown building on Galena Street in Freeport.

The Colonade theater at Quincy is conducting a voting contest in which three women will be given free trips to California. Five votes are given with each admission.

Especial attention will be given children in the Saturday afternoon programs of the new Star theater at Evanston, which has been opened by Bodkin and Kean.

J. W. Royer, Urbana architect, has been ordered to draw plans for a new moving picture theater which will be erected for E. C. Bleane of Kankakee. It is hoped to open the place the first week in July.

It is reported that a third picture show will be opened at Havana. The two theaters, the Varsity and the Havana, are now conducted by the volunteer fire department. Havana has a population of but 3,500.

Ned Alvord, who operates theaters at Hammond, Ind., and Waukegan, Ill., is contemplating building an opera house in Freeport.

The Layor Amusement Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000, to conduct amusement enterprises. The incorporators are Sam Kuhl, Marcus Helman and Frank Meyer.

The request of the managers of moving picture theaters in Mattoon to operate on Sundays has been refused by Mayor Johnson, it is reported.

A correspondent at St. Augustine, makes the following wail: "What this place neds is an up-to-date moving picture show. Every night, when the sun goes down here, everybody puts on his best bib and tucker and lights off over to Abingdon, where the pictures are all the go now. I say, for St. Augustine, if we wish to make good, we've got to keep up with the march of civilization."

Clarence Shaw has sold Dreamland theater in Canton to Miss Dora Kelley, who has taken charge.

The Gem theater, at Hillsboro, played the "Passion Play" for the benefit of the Ladies' Aid Society at a Saturday matinee.

Isaac Wright of Peoria may erect a new building in Minonk to be occupied by J. A. Williams, of Walworth, Wis., with a moving picture show.

The tension in Hillsboro's little amusement war has loosened a bit. Dr. Fred Rogers who recently opened the Grand Central Airdome has leased the place to S. E. Hurst, manager of the Gem theater. Hurst announces that he will give an exclusive picture show at the Gem, and pictures and vaudeville at the Grand Central.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

MANY athletic meets in the United States have been filmed but none in the novel manner in which the Industrial Moving Picture Company, of Chicago, and the Springfield High School, took the Corn Belt meet in this city. A scenario was written after the fashion of one of the popular boys' stories. One of the stars of the Springfield track team was kidnapped by envious rivals and locked in an abandoned tool-house at a local park. Through the eavesdropping of a fair high school girl the plot was learned and by the assistance of a speeding automobile he was rescued and arrived at the field just in time to go in a race and snatch victory from defeat for his beloved school. A few other films have been secured and the picture will be shown at the local high school auditorium at 25 cents admission, after which it will be sent to other cities where the young folk are interested in the doings of the Springfield high school.

Just where the Sunday closing war in Springfield is going to end is hard to tell. When the time came for hearing the latest batch of warrants against men charged with violating the Sunday closing ordinance the prosecution was not on hand and the cases were continued until May 17 with the understanding that at time they would again be continued until May 27. The defendant picture show proprietors and the other photoplay men who are naturally interested were on hand. The butchers, who caused the whole mess, declare they are going to keep their shops open if the other businesses continue to operate on Sunday and nobody will conjecture what kind of a tangle this action will beget. Mayor John S. Schnepp says he does not see any chance for having the ordinance repealed.

All the interest incidental to the appearance of a local actress is being exploited in connection with some recent Selig releases in which Mrs. Walter Winhelm, formerly Miss Marie Desnoyers, daughter of a wealthy shoe manufacturer of Springfield, takes part.

The Vaudette Amusement Company of this city has closed its engagement of "From the Manger to the Cross," at the Cort theater in Chicago. Other metropolitan engagements will be played.

The Beall bill requiring a seat with every ticket has passed the State Senate by a vote of 26 to 11. Senator Beall of Alton, is securing revenge for not being properly treated in a Chicago ball park, but if the measure is approved by the House of Representatives some manager of a picture house is going to sell standing room some time and then be hailed into court for it.

Women in places of amusement may not work longer than ten hours a day if a bill introduced into the Senate by Senator Bailey passes. The measure will hardly affect many downstate picture men.

Hopes for maintaining a ten-cent admission in Springfield have gone glimmering. The Lyric and the Vaudette, which have been getting a dime for three reels of late run Licensed service, have gone back to the five-cent show. One house gives as a reason the lack of business while the other declares it was satisfied. The three reel shows will continue at the new price and the same class of service will be given. The move will have considerable effect upon the independent houses in the city and those which have been showing older Licensed service, for five cents, as it is bound to divert some of the patronage. Photoplay men now say that it will be useless to attempt to again talk "quality" show. A representative of the Moving Picture World talked to a good many patrons of the two houses and they seemed about equally divided, some of them preferring a longer and better show at ten cents while others who sought chiefly amusement, attended picture shows as a pastime, were in favor of the popular price.

The Enos Feature Film Company, Room 5, Gaiety Building, is a new film exchange in Springfield. The concern will deal principally with the houses which have direct express connections with Springfield and can be reached quickly from this center. This opens up a large territory as Springfield is the center of a network of electric and gasoline-electric interurban lines and in addition is well supplied with steam transportation. Earl Enos has been connected with local theatrical houses for several years and also was with the Wortham-Allen Carnival Company in an executive capacity for some time. C. H. Rumsey, the other partner, has been in the show business for years and for a long time was manager of the Majestic, Springfield's most attractive show house.

The film "Toothache," which is backed by the National Dental Society, was shown at the Grand Theater in this city. The school board gave its approval to the film and to stimulate the interest of the youngsters, half price was given for all children attending in groups of not less than six and accompanied by their teacher. The Chatterton, the local legitimate house, has been taken over by Allardt Brothers, who also control the Majestic. The Chatterton has played a good many feature pictures and at times has gone into the five-cent show business. It is impossible to say just what the policy will be this winter.

The Automatic Electric Sign Company, which has a prominent downtown location for one of its changing slide projectors, has been carrying an advertisement for the Vaudette theater.

H. S. Moss of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, of Chicago, was in the city May 23, to attend the production of the commercial story "Springfield Wins," taken for the Springfield High School at the Corn-Belt Athletic Meet. This picture has attracted a good deal of attention all over the country because a scenario was written around what is generally a common place event. In connection with this film the Biograph "Oil and Water" was shown making the third time this release has been shown in Springfield.

Manager Fred Whitmer of the Vaudette theater is taking an active part in the preparation for the annual encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans which will be held in this city the latter part of June. He is a member of the committee which is arranging the program and entertainment. Whitmer served during the Spanish-American War and was for many years connected with the Illinois National Guard. He holds a high rank as a marksman with nearly every kind of rifle that has been used in military affairs in the last decade or so and is the possessor of several medals.

Attorney Clarence A. Jones, representing Adolph Kunz, proprietor of the Grand Moving picture theater, and other business men who were arrested charged with keeping their places of business open on Sunday, appeared before the City Commission and asked the repeal of the "blue law" ordinance under which the prosecutions were made.

The General Feature Film Company is the name of a new concern which has been formed in Springfield with offices in the handsome new Reisch office building. The members are Charles Rocchucciolo, until recently proprietor of the Casino theater, Frank Palmisan, manager of the Casino and Joe Wintrup of St. Louis. The company will do a general brokerage business in films and will rent feature films to Central Illinois theaters.

A. O. Anderson, of Springfield, has sold the Gem Theater at Lincoln, which he has been operating for a year to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Meier, of Springfield. It is reported that Anderson contemplates purchasing the Airdome in Lincoln.

W. W. Watts, president of the Vaudette Amusement Company, of this city, writes from Chicago, that immediately following the closing of the Kalem feature "From the Manger to the Cross," at the theater, five weeks bookings for other theaters in that city were made and more are under consideration. The other set of pictures under the direction of Arthur Simons is playing solid time in the Southern part of Illinois. The local office of the Vaudette Company has received requests for bookings from Burlington, Iowa, and from a Presbyterian minister in Ohio, who wished to play it in his church. Inasmuch as they have only the Illinois right they could not handle it.

Acting State Fire Marshall Frank R. Morgaridge, of this city, recently paid a visit to his home town of Sterling and while there in company with the chief of police made an inspection of the moving picture houses. No adverse report as to safety conditions was made.

The French & Sons Piano Company, of Springfield has shipped a two-manual Ferren & Votey pipe organ to the Katz moving picture theater in Mattoon.

Roy Sturgell, a student of the New Berlin high school, took for his theme in the oratorical contest of Sangamon County High schools, recently held in this city "The Motion Picture Show." Unfortunately for this champion of the photoplay in education he did not receive a place in the awards.

ST. LOUIS.

E. W. DUSTIN, manager of the Grand Opera House and well known in theatrical circles, resigned his position recently to become identified with the New Grand Central, the new picture house on Grand Avenue. For the past few years Mr. Dustin has been associatel with the making of motion pictures and the knowledge acquired will come well in hand with the taking up of his new position. Mr. Dustin has the honor of being the first man in the country to open a large theater showing motion pictures exclusively. This house was at Louisville Ky. Mr. Dustin will be succeeded at the Grand Opera House by Mr. Wallace.

The New Grand Central pronounced the handsomest picture house in the city, is under the direct supervision of Mr. Seavers who also supervises the downtown house now called the Old Grand Central to distinguish it from the new house of the same name.

The Empress at Grand and Olive, has inaugurated a series of complimentary matinees for the benefit of the various local charitable and industrial institutions. The first to benefit being about 65 children from the Masonic Orphans Home. Child pictures were shown exclusively. At a benefit to the Mount St. Rose Hospital 9100 South Broadway, under the supervision of Rev. J. T. Tuohy, motion pictures of "Joan of Arc" were shown in addition to various films depicting famous historical events of the world.

Passion play pictures were featured at the McKinley Theater, Jefferson and Ann Avenues, for the benefit of the Ladies of the Missouri G. A. R. Society.

The coming theatrical season in St. Louis next fall will see the passing away of the Garrick, Century, Columbia and Gayety theaters, all prominent houses devoted to the "legitimate." The Garrick will be operated as a moving picture house under an agreement reached with the Shubert, Klaw and Erlanger forces.

The Century closed its doors about a month ago with Julian Eltinge having the honor of playing the last engagement. The theater has been remodeled by the Scruggs, Vendevoort & Barney Dry Goods Company.

The Gayety will no longer be operated as a burlesque house, and it is understood will be turned over for the exhibition of exclusive feature films.

The Columbia, long known as the home of vaudeville, will be idle, and if rumors are ripe the building and theater will be replaced by a business structure. The changes in these erstwhile popular playhouses have come about through the insistence of the public for good pictures, on vaudeville and a gradual evolution in the show business which had its inception with the birth of the moving pictures.

That there is no limit to the capabilities of the modern picture man, was the sentiment expressed by the many people who visited the Garrick Theater recently to witness the silent yet pathetic drama woven around the efforts of that intrepid artic explorer. Capt. Robert Falcon Scott, who lost his life in an effort to reach the South pole. That actual scenes of the surroundings of that heretofore vast impenetrable forest of ice, a hundred miles or so from the extreme ends of the world, could be witnessed by passive spectators for a sum so insignificant in comparison with the wonders enrolled before their eyes as to make it almost nothing, marks a crowning achievement in the annals of the motion picture industry.

The films depict very plainly, life in the Antartic with whales, penguins, seals, siberian ponies and other exhibits of the region seldom, if ever, gazed upon by the average American, all brought out very vividly by the cameraman. The volcano, Mt. Erebus, is also shown and furnished a thriller.

The lectures for the pictures, gotten up by Robert C. Ponting, war correspondent, lecturer, artist and author, were highly instructive, making the exhibition of the Scott expedition, one of the greatest successes of its kind ever shown in St. Louis.

The Hamilton Amusement Company, 5900 Easton avenue, seating 4500 people and said to be the largest open air airdome in the world, opened under very unfavorable weather conditions April 26th. In addition to licensed releases, western vaudeville is booked. Last season the Hamilton had a record-breaking business, topping with 5,200 paid admissions in one night.

The Hippodrome, on 6th street, closed for the summer months May 24th. Announcement has been made that Frank L. Talbot, the local "vaudeville and picture impressario," is contemplating the erection of a sixteen-story building combining a theater and hotel at the southeast corner of 7th and Market streets, in addition to a seven-story building at the southwest corner of 9th and Walnut streets, the estimated cost of the proposed sites being nearly $2,000,000. To Mr. Talbot is due a great deal of credit for the livening of 6th street as an amusement center, and for the enhancing of real estate values in that vicinity.

The present theatrical season just closed here, has been the most disastrous ever known for the operators of the playhouses and producers of high class productions, with the possible exception of Julia Marlowe and E. N. Sothern. Old-time favorites like John Drew, Mrs. Fiske, Billie Burke, Wm. Faversham and others drew very little money and it is conceded that the day of the $1.50 and $2.00 production, insofar as attracting the masses at St. Louis, is a thing of the past. F. J. FEGAN.

CINCINNATI.

LOCAL exhibitors have done much toward the relief of the Ohio flood sufferers. Various moving picture houses have turned in their gross receipts for one day towards a fund for these unfortunates. A movement is now on foot among the members of Local Number Two of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to create a fund for the relief of the sufferers and already several hundred dollars has been raised.

Activity in the building lines as concerns the motion pictures in this city is on the increase. Several new houses are being constructed and will be ready in a short time. Among these is the Nordland Theater, situated on Vine Street in Corryville. About a year ago, the Nordland was closed for extensive repairs, following the opening of the handsome new Columbia Theater a square away. Immediately following the closing of the Nordland, the management incorporated a new company and work of razing the old theater was begun. Work on a new structure to cost in the neighborhood of $50,000 is being pushed rapidly. The new house will probably open late in the summer.

The Empire Amusement Company, which for several weeks, gave an exhibition of high class motion pictures at Music Hall, the largest auditorium in the city, closed its exhibitions Saturday night, May 3rd. Music Hall is situated many squares out of the theater district proper and this in part is attributed to the failure of the concern.

Recently the Commercial Tribune published a two column story giving an insight of the workings of a moving picture machine. This article was written by a one-time operator and was very interesting.

Redland Field, the home of the Cincinnati National League Baseball Club, was thrown open to motion pictures Sunday, May 4. That portion of the grandstand set aside for the accommodation of the motion picture loving public, was literally jammed at all performances. The pictures will be continued until late in the fall. Last summer and the summer preceding, motion pictures were given at the home of the United States League team in the West End. The movement was a big success. That the management of Redland Field will make a financial success of the venture, goes without saying. saying.

With the closing of the regular theatrical season in Cincinnati, the play houses are being given over to motion pictures. During the past week at the Grand Opera House, Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth" is being shown, along with other productions. Several singers complete the program. The admission price is ten cents.

McMahon and Jackson opened the Lyric Theater Sunday afternoon of last week to moving pictures to continue all summer.

This is the last week of the regular season at B. F. Keiths. The house will be reopened next Sunday with summer vaudeville and pictures.

Recently the Supreme Court at Columbus, Ohio, handed the City of Toledo a black eye in that city's attempt to run a moving picture show. This was the first decision under the new home rule amendment to the state constitution. The City of Toledo wanted to start its own municipal moving picture theater. The court rules the city has no authority to embark in the moving picture business, even if it had adopted a new charter under the home rule amendment. There are several provisions to be observed by cities before the home rule charter becomes effective in Ohio.

The city council of Cincinnati, recently passed the ordinance favored by the moving picture interests graduating the license of all theaters according to their seating capacity. Under the law regulation the fees will range from $100 to $300 a year. Sixty-seven theaters will be given a reduction, five will be increased and twelve will remain as they are. The latter are mainly the larger theaters, the Grand, Lyric and others of similar use.

On Friday, May 2, Judge Wanamaker of the Ohio Supreme Court at Columbus, announced the remarkable doctrine that a municipality under the home rule amendment can do anything it pleases in the way of business. According to the dissenting judge, in the case of the attempt of the City of Toledo, to maintain a moving picture show, a municipality, if it wishes, can go into the theater business, the saloon business, the barber business, etc. Judge Shauck, however, had sufficient members of the bench on his side and their decision that a city has no right to engage in the moving picture business was carried. Picture show proprietors are jubilant over the decision.

There will be no more giving away of cases of beer as prizes to patrons of moving picture theaters in this city. A dozen or more proprietors of these places have been resorting to the prize device as a means of luring more of the public to their shows, and have been putting up rings, alleged diamonds, watches, pecks of potatoes, and cases of beer as inducements and temptations. But Uncle Sam promptly drew the line on the beer. Every one of the theater men indulging in it as a prize has received a call to appear at the internal revenue office at once and pay license as a retail liquor dealer. Collector Bettman received orders from Washington that that was the proper course. Those caught at it must pay up. The others, Mr. Bettman says, can save themselves by dropping the beer prizes at once. Persisting in it they must pay or be prosecuted. The officials regard the arrangement as a lottery scheme.

That ground will not be broken until late in the summer for the proposed $75,000 combination moving picture theater, dance hall and roof garden in Norwood, ten miles north of Cincinnati, was the announcement recently made in realty and theatrical circles. The site on which the builders propose to erect the new structure is now occupied by an airdome, which was leased a few weeks ago. The lease does not expire until September 1st. At the expiration of the contract, it is proposed to begin work on the new structure. The airdome is situated on a plot of ground sufficient in size to allow the erection of a handsome building along the lines of the theaters in the larger cities. Sometime ago a company was incorporated, which had as its view, the erection of this structure, provided a suitable site could be obtained. As proposed there will be a rathskeller in the basement, a moving picture theater on the main floor, a dance hall on the second floor, and then the roof garden. The proposed improvement is to be made by the owners of the present Plaza Theater in Norwood.

NEW ENGLAND.

AFTER Senator Allen's amendments had been rejected, the Massachusetts Senate, on May 21, passed the bill, providing that only persons 21 years of age or over may be granted first-class licenses for the operation of moving picture machines. This bill, which is considered one of the most important of the measures to guard against incompetency in the operation of moving picture machines, was strongly championed by the Boston Local of the Moving Picture Operators' Union. The bill also provided that no person under the age of 18 may be employed in the booth as an assistant. It is the general opinion of the trade in this section that the passing of this bill is distinctly "as it should be," as it makes for greater efficiency and safety in the operators' room. It should also result, at least in the cases of some photoplay theaters, in better projection, which is greatly to be desired, even though the theaters are forced to pay a little higher salaries than before.

The Novelty Feature Films, Incorporated, was formed this week in Boston. This concern incorporated for $5,000, and was promoted by Samuel H. Steinfeld, Anna A. Heuke and Frank H. Baer.

The people of Middleboro, Mass., intend to watch the photoplays in peace and quiet. The moving picture fans who convened at the Town Hall nightly were disturbed while watching the pictures by the Middleboro Fire Department, and created such a fuss over the disturbance that said Fire Department has been ordered to avoid testing the fire alarm system of the town between 7 and 10 o'clock at night, and so all testing work, which was formerly done in the evening, is now finished before 6 p. m. Middleboro is evidently a town in which moving pictures are of supreme importance, before which all other things must give way.

A recent incorporation is the Majestic Theater Company, of Rumford, Me. This is a $10,000 concern, with the following officers: J. Abbot Nile, Daniel D. Leader and Albert J. Pine, all of Rumford. The new corporation intends to erect a first-class theater in this city, to be devoted to vaudeville and picture programs. The house will be up-to-date and thoroughly fireproof in every way.

"Silk Hat" John Hurley, mayor of Salem, Mass., who recently posed before the moving picture camera, is again getting free publicity, via motion pictures. It seems that Mayor Hurley recently attended a performance of photoplays at the Salem Theater, at which an oil company offered a gift of a lot of land in Texas to be given to the most beautiful and popular man in the audience. His Honor won the prize, although his friends claim that popularity counted 75 per cent, and beauty only 25 per cent. The mayor's peculiarities are gaining much free publicity for the Salem photoplay theaters, which is resulting in increased business for them.

It was a great game of baseball that was waged last Sunday between the married and single men of the Beacon Theater, Boston. And would you believe it, the married men put their rivals to shame by a score of 14 to 10, after nine innings of fast ball? Pitcher Turner and Catcher Abell did the slab work for the married men, while Messrs. Kiley and Rubin did the pitching for the single men, both throwing the ball to Catcher McLoughlin. Jacob Lourie, president and general manager of the Beacon Theater, was right on the job as short stop for the benedicts. Jake declares he played a good game! And we believe him—"nit."

A well-earned promotion was tendered George I. Appleby, of the Boston offices of the Mutual Film Corporation this week. George, as he is commonly known to over 95 per cent of the New England trade, is now assistant manager of the exchange, where he has a smile and a good word for everyone. William Murphy, who formerly was assistant to General Manager Eslow, is now in charge of a Mutual office at Waterville, Me. Mr. Appleby will no longer travel in the interests of Mutual service, as he will be busy from morning till night at 1106 Boylston street.

The Marcus Loew Boston Booking Agency was incorporated this week, for $5,000, with Victor J. Morris, Edward Small and William H. Lovey, named as the promoters.

Edward M. Barry, connected with the Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Mass., is telling his friends about his son, Edward L. Barry, who won the relay at Philadelphia, Pa., representing the Boston English High School. Mr. Barry, senior, is justly proud of his son's ability as a track athlete, which has attracted considerably notice hereabouts.

J. C. Cushing, formerly associated with the Empire Theater, Holyoke, Mass., has severed his connection with that house, in order to go with the Broadway Theater, Springfield, Mass.

A. A. Kellmann, manager of the Park Theater, Taunton, Mass., reports that business has increased remarkably well since he acquired control of the house. Feature pictures, and a good grade of vaudeville acts have filled the Park to its capacity, as a general thing, the last few weeks.

Joseph A. McConville, manager of the New Portland Theater, Portland, Me., states that the Kinemacolor pictures he is exhibiting are more than pleasing, both to his audiences and to himself. On this account, Mr. McConville expects to feature the natural color pictures indefinitely.

Manager Fred P. Dean, of the Hartford Theater, Hartford, Conn., gives programs that are mostly composed of high-grade vaudeville acts, but swears by the Pathe Weekly, which is a regular attraction at this house.

A new theater is now being erected at Hamilton, Canada, by the Dominion Theaters, Ltd., which will be devoted to programs of vaudeville and photoplays. A competition was recently held for the naming of the house, and the committee in charge selected the name "Lyric" as being the most frequently chosen. The new house is to be strictly up-to-date and fireproof, according to the plans and specifications.

The theaters at Keene, N. H., devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures, are all enjoying good business. Ray Snow, manager of the Majestic Theater, reports very brisk trade, with vaudeville and pictures, while Manager R. W. Worsley, of the Dreamland, remarks that he is doing a capacity business with programs of photoplays, no vaudeville being given.

The Back Bay Theater, Columbus avenue and Darthmouth street, Boston, was the scene of great activity on Tuesday, May 20, at 2 o'clock, when the Boston offices of the Mutual Film Corporation entertained about 300 New England exhibitors with the five-reel feature production of the New York Motion Picture Company. "The Battle of Gettysburg." The picture, made under the supervision of Thomas Ince, managing director of the Kay-Bee and Broncho films, won the unstinted praise of the very critical and somewhat balsé audience. Several war veterans were also present, by special invitation, and pronounced "The Battle of Gettysburg" to be the most realistic representation ever produced. During the exhibition of the reels, Mr. Pelton enlarged upon and explained the action of the story. As a massive production, this picture was voted unique of its kind, and made a profound impression on the trade. "The Rag Time Band," a Keystone comedy, preceeded the five-reel feature. The projection was unusually clear and distinct, a Power's No. 6-A being used. Music and "traps" were also furnished by Manager Eslow, of the Mutual's Boston offices, to whom is due much credit for the way in which he handled this special entertainment. Manager Eslow, together with Assistant Manager Appleby, were on the receiving line, with a handshake and word of welcome to all those present. We noticed Chief Licensing Clerk Casey watching the program with much interest.

Ralph Ward, manager of the Opera House, Lowell, Mass., has been engaged by the Bay State Street Railway, to superintend its string of summer parks. Mr. Ward will have full charge, and will select the picture programs, as well as care for all the general details. The various Boston exchanges are bidding for this business, but Mr. Ward has not yet decided which one will supply the films for him.

J. E. Mapplebeck is well satisfied with the business his Rochester, N. H., theater is doing, and expects to remain open right through the summer, unless business should take an unexpected slump.

Business at the Scenic Theater, Westbrooke, Me., evidently needs a stimulant, and Manager Reford has prescribed a rather peculiar medicine. Trading stamps are given away to every Scenic patron, and, although Mr. Reford finds that business has increased, the plan is of doubtful merit. It is most reasonable to suppose that the Scenic customers desire entertainment and instruction by means of photoplays. This being the case, why not try the idea of strengthening the show, by offering more and better photoplays? We would back a good photoplay program to bring in the dimes against a trading stamp show, every time.

A most persistent rumor from Hartford, Conn., is to the effect that S. Z. Poli has secured a lease on property at the corner of Main and Mulberry streets, for a long term of years, upon which he is to erect another theater. The location is an excellent one, only a block from Mr. Poli's large theater. If this rumor proves reliable, Mr. Poli will have three theaters in Hartford, which is not at all unreasonable, as he has two and three theaters in several of the larger New England cities.

The Palms Theater, Hough's Neck, Mass., has again opened its doors for the summer season, and Manager Levey finds that business is opening up in first-class style. Mutual films are used, and this cosy little theater should be busy for the next few months.

Joe Monahan, general manager of Whalom Park, Fitchburg, Mass., is to open the summer season on June 23, with a stock company. If this policy is not up to expectations, vaudeville and photoplay programs will be inaugurated.

The Lyric Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., will offer stock company attractions for the summer season, starting June 2. This William Fox theater will revert to vaudeville and picture programs again in the early fall.

M. Beaning, manager of the Empire Theater, Providence, R. I., finds that the Kinemacolor service he is using has found immediate favor with his audiences, and will continue with the natural color service indefinitely.

The State Board of Health of Vermont is using moving pictures to aid in its fight against tuberculosis. A complete moving picture outfit, and a portable lighting plant, has been purchased by the Board of Health, which tours all the smallest towns and villages of the State. The prevention of tuberculosis, and the supreme importance of a pure milk supply is taught the public by such instructive pictures as "The Awakening of John Bond." The Vermont Board of Health has conceived, and, what is more to the point, is executing, a mighty brilliant idea, and one that could be copied by every state in the Union with excellent results.

Two hundred eighteen Commercial street, Boston, is the address of the new poster department of the General Film Company, opened by W. P. Allen. The Poster Department has adequate quarters here, with well over 3,000 square feet of floor space, and has a complete stock of nearly everything with which to advertise moving picture theaters.

Live exhibitors in this section should get acquainted with Mr. Allen, whose chief business it is to "Make your business better."

Manager William Murphy, of the Waterville, Me., branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, is now accustomed to his new location, and sends word that he is to have a gigantic "run-off" of all Mutual releases for the last 30 days, in order to show Maine exhibitors just what kind of films he has to offer.

The Victor Amusement Co., of Worcester, Mass., was incorporated recently. Albert V. Pickering, Richard Pickering, Albert Fisk, George Walts and Frank W. Wellis are the promoters of the company, which is a $10,000 concern.

"Reddy" Wolffe, manager of the Scenic Temple, Paragon Park, Mass., opened his house for the summer season on May 18. "Reddy" claims his business is just as good as ever, and expects to "clean up" for the next few months, with moving picture programs of Mutual films. Mr. Wolffe has been in this business for years, and knows how to conduct a theater from A to Z.

The new theater, to be devoted to vaudeville and moving picture programs, now being built at Winthrop, Mass., should be ready by June 15, unless unexpected delays occur. The house is modern and of fireproof construction, and should prosper.

On Wednesday, May 28, the New Crescent Gardens Theater, Revere Beach, Mass., opened. This house has a most prominent location on the beach, being directly opposite the Crescent Beach railroad station, on Ocean avenue. The policy of the theater is vaudeville and moving picture programs, and, to judge from the opening attendance, capacity houses will be the general rule. The United States Amusement Company, composed of Frank R. Cauley, George Daly, Frank E. Wilder and Joseph A. Di Pesa, own the Crescent Gardens Theater. Frank R. Cauley will manage the house, a well known Boston photoplay exhibitor. The Cauley Opera House, of Charleston, and the Star Theater, of Somerville, were both managed by Mr. Cauley, who built up a large patronage in both theaters by his efficient work. The Crescent Gardens is the most up-to-date and modern vaudeville and picture theater at Revere Beach, being of brick and steel construction, and thoroughly fireproof in every way. The house represents an outlay of about $75,000, and has a seating capacity of 800. An unusually expensive air-cooling system has been installed, and is one of the features of the theater. The system allows the management to cool the theater to any desired temperature. The Crescent Gardens should have no difficulty in making good, and it will, if a good quality of vaudeville and pictures is persistently offered.

Manager "Nate" Brown, of the Broadway Theater, Everett, Mass., has discontinued his vaudeville acts from his programs for the rest of the season. The Broadway is now offering six reels of photoplays from the New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston. Manager Brown finds business to be holding out fairly well, and will keep his theater open for some time yet.

The Boston office of the New England Universal Film Exchange have distributed among its customers a very useful leather-covered folder, which will come in handy to managers who keep lists of all Universal releases for ready reference.

A recent incorporation is the United Motion Picture Corporation, of Boston. The firm filed papers of incorporation for $5,000, and the promoters are: Edward E. Cosman, Warren C. Brown and Edward A. Rafter.

Another new corporation is the United Motion Picture Theater Corporation, with $250,000 capital. Frank H. Baer and Samuel H. Steinfeld are named as the officers.

It is not generally known that there is a moving picture show in the State House at Boston. Down in the basement, in the offices of the district police inspector's department, there goes on, three times each week, a long, "continuous," four-hour show. And there are no intermissions, either. From 9 o'clock in the morning, until after one, reel upon reel of films are flashed upon the screen. The facts of the case are that it falls upon the district police to inspect all moving pictures used within their jurisdiction. As a result of this free show, many employees of the State House are able to slip away from their work for an hour and enjoy a quiet rest and recreation at the "theater." Chief of Police Whitney, has become an expert judge of photoplay productions, and is unusually adept in picking out any flaws that may appear in any of them.

Edward Renton is general manager of the string of theaters owned and operated by S. Z. Poli, but he also is a farmer—and a good one at that. Mr. Renton owns a large farm, eight miles from Bridgeport, Conn., and has over 70 acres of land under cultivation, besides raising cows, horses, pigs, chickens and other animals. Mr. Renton states that it is at "The Ranch," as the farm is called, that he conceives many of the novel ideas that are characteristic of the Poli theaters. Being in direct touch with all his houses by telephone and telegraph, Mr. Renton spends considerable time each week at "The Ranch," and delights in his life as farmer, fully as much as he does as theatrical manager.

On May 28, Winchester, Mass., was duly proud, as its first theater opened to the public at that time. The theater has a seating capacity of over 700, and is fireproof and up-to-date in every detail. A. W. Quinn, manager of the Opera House, Keene, N. H., will take care of the Winchester Theater. Stock-company attractions and vaudeville and picture bills will be given. The theater has a good location, and there is every reason to believe that it will prosper, under the right management, which Mr. Quinn is sure to give it, as he is thoroughly acquainted with all branches of the theatrical business.

The Bijou Theater, Fall River, Mass., has taken a new lease on life since it reopened under the new management. Charles E. Cook, well-known to all the New England trade, is now in charge of the Bijou, and is offering unusually good programs of vaudeville and pictures. There is no reason why this show house should not do very nicely, and business has been very nearly capacity of late. There is but little of this business that Mr. Cook has not mastered, and he is putting his best efforts into the Bijou Theater.

Louis M. Boas, of the Premier Theater, playing picture programs, Manager Walter Bigelow's Palace Theater, Manager Michelfelder's Lyric, and Star theaters, all of Fall River, report good business. Fall River is a big mill town, and supports the photoplay houses in good shape.

The Municipal Stock Company, which has been playing at the Academy of Music, Northampton, Mass., this season, has closed. Business has not been up to expectations, although the stock company was financed by Northampton citizens, and vaudeville and moving picture programs are a possibility for the Academy of Music, when the new season opens.

The Star Theater, Taunton, Mass., has reopened, after being closed for a short time, while some needed alterations were made. The Star had been playing straight picture programs, but alterations have been made to make it possible to use vaudeville acts also. The house reopened on May 26, and Leonard Brothers, the managers, state that business has improved considerably. HENRY.

BUFFALO.

THE Rev. C. G. Farr and the Rev. M. J. Winchester, pastors of the Methodist and Baptist churches of Fredonia, N. Y., have entered complaint against the opening of the picture show houses on Sunday in that town, and the village trustees have referred the matter to F. W. Chase, president of the village, with power to act. The owners of the theater have retained Attorney William S. Stearns, of Fredonia, to look after their interests.

The Buffalo Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is opposed to the exhibition of more than four reels of film for five cents. The league members claim that those who show more than four for this amount are able to do this because they rent films that are several months old and that have run out their usefulness. The use of such pictures, according to the league, is an imposition on the public and hurts the industry.

Scraboro Beach Park of Toronto, Ont., was opened for the season on Saturday, May 17th. Moving pictures and vaudeville are among the attractions.

A new moving picture law is now in operation in Ontario, Can. Among the features is, that hereafter, the examination of moving picture machine operators is to be made more rigid. In addition to being able to manipulate the machine the operator will be required to have a thorough knowledge of the wiring and other equipment necessary. Apprentice operators will be examined in Toronto, but arrangements will also be made to have demonstration lectures in booths throughout the country, where it is not possible for the applicant to attend personally in Toronto.

Harry Marsey, manager of the Happy Hour moving picture theater in Main street, Buffalo, is using to advantage in his advertisement a verse in which he advises his patrons to be optimistic and happy. He also tells them to see his show. An interesting feature of the rhyme is that the first letters of the lines spell the name of his theater.

Crystal Beach, a Canadian summer resort which has many attractions on its midway, including a moving picture show, opened for the season, Thursday, May 29th. Henry S. Fisher is general manager.

The new Lyric theater, which will feature vaudeville and Kinemacolor pictures, has a capacity of 1800. Mitchell H. Mark is owner and A. R. Sherry, manager.

Manager Harold Eidel of The Strand, a 10 cent moving picture theater, is making a successful effort to cater to women and children. For their benefit he will give daily matinees from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M., and will sell balcony seats at five cents. The Strand is cool, comfortable and absolutely fireproof and has a seating capacity of 1200. The house is luxuriously fitted out and occupies a valuable location on Main Street.

Judge George E. Judge, recently imposed fines of $25 each on a ticket seller and a ticket taker of a local moving picture theater. They were charged with violating the penal law in allowing the entry of a boy under 16 years to their house. Their defense was that the boy had passed into the theater in a crowd. "The practice of allowing young children to enter moving picture theaters unaccompanied by parents or guardians must come to a stop in this city," said the court.

The film "Satan" has just been featured at the Grand moving picture theater in Welland, a Canadian town near Buffalo.

The Como theater, a new moving picture house at South Park avenue and Triangle street, was opened recently. J. S. Savage, former owner and manager of the Park theater on South Park avenue, is manager. The new house is fireproof and up-to-date.

The Edison talking pictures are being used to close the bill at Shea's Theater. The Shea Amusement Co., will build a fireproof theater at 345 Pearl street at a cost of $130,000.

Celeron, a Lake Chautauqua summer resort, which has many attractions, including moving pictures, will be closed this season. The place is located near Jamestown, N. Y. A strike of the Jamestown street car men has caused the place to close. In connection with this feature, a recent report from Jamestown says: "It has been announced by the Celeron Amusement Co., a subsidiary corporation to the Jamestown Street Railroad Company, that it had cancelled all contracts for amusements at this resort, and would not open Celeron this season. This means that the theater there, and the band concerts, together with other attractions, arrangements for which had already been made, will be cancelled, and the little 'Coney Island,' will see its first dead season since it was opened in 1894."

The Buffalo Aldermanic committee on fire has voted against granting permission for the erection of a moving picture house at Delaware and Kenmore avenues. Charles Farrell, a promoter of moving picture houses, declared he would apply to the courts for an order compelling the Buffalo Common council to grant his application. The committee has also turned down the application of Daniel E. Knowlton to build a picture theater at 262 West Utica street, Buffalo.

The Star moving picture theater, Middleport, N. Y., will be remodeled by Mallison and Root of Medina, N. Y., the new proprietors.

Saturday, May 24, was the opening day of Carnival Court, a Buffalo amusement resort which includes moving pictures among its many attractions. Harry G. Johnson is president and general manager and Wesley McGrew, active manager.

The Nassoy Amusement Company, is seeking permission from the Buffalo Common Council to build a moving picture theater at Pennsylvania street and Prospect avenue, this city. The petition was presented to the councilmen by C. S. Weill. The company plans to convert a three-story brick building into a theater.

Much regret was expressed over the recent suicide of Henry Land, proprietor of the Savoy moving picture theater at Lackawanna, a suburb of Buffalo. Mr. Land was a popular member of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and was numbered among the jolliest members who attended a banquet of that organization last winter. Mr. Land shot himself through the right temple and his body was found by his young son. Although business reverses were given in the Buffalo newspaper reports as the cause for his act, the opinion has been expressed that if such was the case, Mr. Land's many friends would have given him plenty of financial assistance, had he only made his wants known. Several local motion picture men attended the funeral.

F. S. Hopkins has been manager of the Buffalo branch of the Victor Film Service for three years and judging from the heavy demand for the product of that concern in this territory his management is a marked success. The branch is at 35 Church street where the facilities are much better than at the former location, 21 West Seneca street.

The Warner Feature Film Co., has a new home at 45 Erie street, where it occupies an entire building consisting of two floors and a basement. This new location was necessary on account of increasing business.

The Star moving picture theater of Welland, Ont., has been sold and will be converted into a business block.

Vaudeville and photoplays are featured at the New Lyric theater which had its formal opening May 26. The house was built at a cost of $100,000, and the furnishings are luxurious. The theater is owned and operated by the Citizens' Theater Co., of New York and Buffalo. Mitchell H. Mark is president; Henry Hoffeld, vice-president; John Burke, treasurer; Eugene L. Falk, secretary. President Mark of the Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises, which owns and operates several vaudeville and moving picture theaters throughout the United States, is the official manager of the New Lyric. A. R. Sherry is resident manager of that theater as well as of the Family theater of this city. Mr. Sherry is a Buffalonian. His successful management of the Family for the past three years has helped to make it one of the greatest money-making houses in the country. His assistant is Isadore Moses. The Family no longer presents vaudeville but features Kinemacolor and other high class photoplays. Pictures showing the latest millinery creations and other fashions will be among the attractions.

A Buffalo newspaper recently used a picture of A. C. Behling, manager of the Fillmore Palace moving picture theater of this city. A write-up in connection with the photograph says that Mr. Behling is "extremely popular and is ably assisted by his charming wife."

ARE YOU UP-TO-DATE?

BEFORE answering this question consider carefully the motion picture machine you are using.

Projectors are like automobiles: they wear out, and besides, the modern Simplex machine of today so far outclasses the machines of three or four years ago, there is no comparison between them.

If your competitor has an up-to-date Simplex projector, and you are running an old machine, that may account for the falling off of your gate receipts.

WE HAVE CHANGED OUR POLICY REGARDING

"THE WAGES OF SIN"

The Three-Reel Moral Picture Enacted by Jack Rose, Sam Schepps and Harry Vallon

It was intended originally to release "THE WAGES OF SIN" to state right buyers. Inquiries by mail and wire from exhibitors within the last week have determined us to withdraw our offer to state right purchasers, and organize our own road shows.

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP

has placed its seal of approval upon this wonderful production. They saw the moral, and recognized its value. Critics have viewed the film, and in their comments upon it as a three-reel feature which contains a great moral lesson. They have been unanimous in their combined opinion : "Excellent."

HAVE BEEN ABSOLUTELY WITHOUT MERCY

We are now ready to receive bookings from

EVERY EXHIBITOR WHO WANTS TO SHOW A MORAL FEATURE

The work of Jack Rose, Sam Schepps and Harry Vallon, who have personally enacted the three leading roles in "THE WAGES OF SIN," has been endorsed by all who have attended the two private exhibitions.

All styles of posters, heralds, lobby photographs, newspaper cuts and other publicity and advertising material accompany each show.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

Author's Note: Being simply a romance inspired by the statement in Genesis that Cain went out of the presence of the Lord and dwelt in the land of Nod, where he knew his wife, this picture does not aim to accomplish more than your entertainment and amusement. It is neither historical nor theological: it is fanciful.

It is to be remembered that there are two accounts of the beginning of man: one, the Mosaic account, is inspired history; the other is the evolutionary theory based upon the deductions of Darwin and other reasoners. The first account conveys the information that man was created fresh and perfect by God, who blew the breath of life into his body. It would seem absurd to assume that such a being, possessed of all the attributes of man fresh from the hands of his Creator, were so dull of mind and stupid that he would fail to take advantage of the simple principles of material existence. Surely, he must have been as wise as Robinson Crusoe. If an inventor today can invent a wonderful machine before he is thirty years old, is it reasonable to assume that Adam, the very mighty product of God, and his progeny, continued to live naked, and in the dirt, nine hundred and twenty years?

A Word from Miss Gardner

No one could be more grateful than I am to the world of picture goers for their enthusiastic reception of our production "Cleopatra." And while that picture sets before me a high standard, yet I feel joyously assured that this one, "The Wife of Cain," upon which we are now hard at work, will attain even a higher plane of excellence.

Helen Gardner.

It has been assumed in this story, simply, that Adam and his wife and children were possessed of ordinary common sense, and that the almost obvious necessities and graces of human life were within their knowledge.

Respecting the people of the land of Nod, who are introduced in this story, and, more particularly, their origin, it is enough to say they are purely imaginative. Nevertheless, it is not impossible to deduce from the Biblical context a sufficient premise upon which to contend the existence of other men than Adam and his descendants. It is a matter about which anyone may think as he will, and as thinking persons do.

As stated above, this story does not aim to teach any principle, nor does it pretend historical accuracy even approximately. Its design is to interest and amuse through its poetic beauty and dramatic order. It is merely a fanciful story of the regeneration of the first crime — committed through the charming philosophy of a wonderful woman.

Part I.

This section of the story deals intimately with the first crime—the destruction of Abel by his brother Cain, the sorrow of Adam and Eve, the cursing, branding and driving away of Cain, his heavy sorrow and terror, his wanderings—and finally his meeting with Save, the daughter of Omar, the hunter, in the land of Nod. He is about to destroy himself when Save meets him and says:

"It is no sacrifice to lose thy life which thou lovest not:

It would be unfair to judge of the picture merits of a picture story by a picture drama is within itself—not an account of its story. "The Wife of poetic nature, but of high dramatic force. It is tragic, and, at moments, borne in mind that Miss Helen Gardner plays the role of the woman, that she play itself is written and directed by the same man who wrote and directed duce something not only out of the beaten run of productions, but a work of

(Excerpt from Genesis, Chap. IV.)

13 And Cain said unto the LORD, My punishment is greater than I can bear.

14 Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the LORD set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

16 ¶ And Cain went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

17 And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived, and bare Enoch: and he builded a city, and called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch.

but find that which thou lovest above thy life, and part thyself from that forever—that is expiation!"

Cain tells her that he loves nothing more than his life, and that he hates that. But the woman's wisdom is plain enough to him, and he starts out to find that which he will love more than his life, so that by parting himself from it forever he may expiate his terrible crime. Zeeban, a worker of magic, whom all people fear and obey because of that fear, announces that he will take Save for his wife, notwithstanding he already has one wife, a jealous woman named Januh. When Zeeban declares that Save shall become his wife Cain sees as by a flash of lightning that the thing which he loves above his life is—Save herself.

Part II.

It is shown clearly that Januh, the wife of Zeeban, means to murder Save. Zeeban discovers her intention, and has her put into the Pit of Death, a cave in which those condemned to die are made to starve to death. Cain, unacquainted with the customs and laws of Nod, and equally unacquainted with the intention of Januh, releases Januh by a trick. After the bridal ceremony in which according to the rites of the land Save becomes the possession of Zeeban, Januh sneaks into the nuptual chamber and stabs Zeeban to death. Save, not knowing how Zeeban came to his death, runs out of the chamber, her shriek bringing Cain, who has been in hiding, into the place. He is seized as the murderer, and, believing indeed that Save herself has committed the crime, he suffers himself to be led away and put into the Pit of Death. Save searches for Cain in the wilderness where she first met him. She meets Januh, who tells her that Cain is in the pit, and hastens there. She herself is believed to be an accomplice, and is thrown into the pit. There she finds Cain almost dead of starvation.

Part III.

Loving her with a great passion, Cain steadfastly refuses to take Save as his wife, convinced as he is that only by sacrificing some thing which he loves more than his life can he condone his great crime. Save herself is satisfied that he is right, and they resign themselves to death. Januh, unable to keep from them, climbs out upon a tree branch over the mouth of the pit, so that she can taunt them and watch them die. At a very dramatic moment the branch breaks, and, clutching the leaves to save herself, Januh's hair becomes entangled so that she is caught up, and her neck is broken in mid-air. Over her body Cain reaches the limb, and thence he reaches the outside. It is only a few moments before he has rescued Save. She discovers that the brand, put on his forehead by God, has vanished, and, taking it for a token of Cain's full forgivenness, Save and Cain leave the land as man and wife. Years after, and in accordance with the account by Moses, Cain builds a great city, and calls it Enoch, after his first-born son.

tersely written synopsis of its main motives and action. The merit of a motion Cain," as a picture story, is highly unique, possessing values not only of a sublime in its message straight to the human heart and mind. It should be is splendidly supported by players who are to the man real artists, that the "Cleopatra," and that neither expense, time nor study has been spared to prosurpassing interest and intrinsic beauty both in thought and action.

100 YEARS OF MORMONISM

In 6 Reels of Realism

DEPICTING the start, early struggles, loves, tortures, and assasinations of the Mormon people from New York State in 1813 to the Salt Lake City of the present day.

Its sensational features fully confirmed by American history.

Despite the large amount of unusual press comment which this subject aroused, there was not one adverse criticism on the picture.

Made at a cost of nearly $50,000. Half a year consumed in the making and over 1,000 people employed, including noted Mormon descendants.

Of universal interest to the peoples of every nation, and by reason of exclusive contracts, impossible to duplicate inside of 59 years.

Three companies toured the $2.00 houses of California, Utah and Nevada at the fifty-cent scale of prices, to a gross intake of over $22,000, and are still going. In some instances the gross exceeded $1,000 on the day. Facts which can be readily verified.

CURIOSITY MONEY. Everyone within riding distance of the theatres will see this picture ONCE. Some will review it frequently.

VITAGRAPH.

THE SILVER CIGARETTE CASE (June 16).—Thinking to retrieve his fallen fortunes, Leslie Torrence makes love to Rita Patten, the daughter of Graham Patten, millionaire. When Rita tells her old friend Dr. Hawley of her engagement, he is very much aggrieved, as he loves her himself and knows well the bad reputation of Torrence at the club.

Torrence has been carrying on an affair with Lola di Paoli, a beautiful opera singer, and has promised her marriage. When she sees the report of the engagement in the papers she is furious and determines to be revenged upon the girl who has taken Torrence from her. To this end she gets, through her manager, Herbert Corey, an invitation to a bal-masque being given by Patten in celebation of her engagement, the invitation being for a supposed friend, Count Rostrand. Disguised as a man, in evening clothes, Lola attends the ball.

During the evening, she chances to meet Dr. Hawley, who, like her, is masked, and offers him a cigarette from her case. Hawley greatly admires the case, which is of unusual pattern, and at the same time, comments on a beautiful ring, which the supposed count is wearing.

A little later on, while Rita is left for a few moments by her partner, Lola approaches her quietly and then suddenly plunges a dagger into her breast. During the confusion she is able to escape, and by the time that a search is made for the assassin, she is far away. Hawley looks after the wounded girl, who, after a few weeks, recovers from the wound.

Some time later, Lola, now stricken with remorse, is prostrated by a nervous attack and her maid sends for a physician. Dr. Hawley answers the call and while attending the patient, recognizes the cigarette case and the ring on her finger. Accused by him, Lola admits the crime and agrees to go with him to see Rita and tell her the truth of the affair. On hearing of the double-dealing of Torrence, Rita sends for him and hands him back his ring. Two years later, Dr. Hawley reaps the reward of his patience and devotion and marries his beloved Rita, whom he has loved so long.

THE COMING OF GRTECHEN (June 17).—When a letter arrives from Gretchen's sister, Anna, who is in America, inviting her to come and offering her a job in the store, Gretchen is overjoyed and decides to pack at once. Arrived in New York, Gretchen obtains work in the delicatessen store kept by Emil, her sister's husband. She is greatly surprised one day, when Hans, her sweetheart, who has been lonesome without her, suddenly presents himself at the store. Gretchen is none too well pleased with his arrival, as she has been able to make a decided impression on an American, George. Anna and Emil look after him and soon get him a job.

Hans invites Gretchen to go with him to the annual picnic of the German colony where they live, but she turns him down and asks George to be her escort instead. Her German lover realizes that she does not like his old-country clothes, and gets himself a brand new American outfit.

At the picnic Gretchen is suddenly deserted by George, who sees a pretty girl in the crowd and thinks that he would like a change of partner, leaving her to her own devices. George gets badly left, as he well deserves, when the girl he follows is claimed by her beau, a pugilist, who soon sends George about his business. He goes to look for Gretchen, but finds her in the arms of Hans.

THE DROP OF BLOOD (June 18).—When Slick, a pickpocket, hears that Carmina is to marry Albert Johnson, the detective, he swears to be avenged upon him. One day Johnson is followed by Slick, who plunges a stiletto into his back and leaves him dead on the ground. Carmina, who feels sure that Slick is guilty, fails to prove her case in court as Slick brings forward a strong alibi. She determines to take the investigation into her own hands and goes, disguised as a maid, to work at the house where Slick boards. It is not long before she discovers that Slick has a strange fear of blood stains and that he is much worried because of a stain on a coat sleeve. Slick removes the stain by means of acid, but Carmina, who finds this out, stains his sleeve again with red ink. When Slick sees the stain he is terrified, and begins to think that he is haunted. First in one place and then in another, Carmina smears the red ink, on the table-cloth under his plate, on his towel and on other clothes.

One night, Carmina pours a stream of red ink over Slick's pillow, awakening him. In the moonlight he sees the spreading stain and then sees a ghostly hand reaching in the window, holding a stiletto, apparently dripping with blood. Crazy with fear, he rushes shrieking from the room and meets Carmina, who discloses herself to him. Confronted again by the bloodstained coat, he confesses to the crime and begs for mercy. Carmina sneers at him and hotly denounces him, handing him at once over to the police. When he finds himself arrested and compelled to face the consequences of his deed, his mind gives way and he is carried off, a violent lunatic. Carmina has succeeded; her husband is avenged.

BUNNY'S DILEMMA (June 19).—John Bunny gets into an awful stew when he hears from his Aunt Eliza that she is coming to visit him and that she is bringing along her cousin, Jean, whom she wishes him to marry. He doesn't at all like the idea of abandoning his bachelor life and appeals to his friend, Jack Holmes, for aid. Jack is persuaded to masquerade as Bunny, whom his aunt has never seen, while Bunny himself gets into feminine garb and poses as the cook.

As soon as he sees Jean, Bunny wishes to disclose his identity but cannot very well see his way clear to doing it. He is racked by all the fires of jealousy whenever he sees Jack flirting with her, which happens frequently. Having himself very much fallen in love with the lady, he decides to tell her of the little deception, and writes a letter to her, pushing it under the door of her room. In the letter he asks her to meet him in the arbor at the foot of the garden early next morning.

Aunt Eliza hears Joan as she passes down the stairs, and rushing out upon her, catches her and brings her into the room. Then she sees the letter in the girl's hand and grabs it. Aunty declares that Joan shall not keep the appointment in the garden, but that she will go in her place. This she does, her face covered with a heavy veil so that it cannot be seen.

Bunny is delighted when he sees the lady coming down the path towards the arbor, and soon begins to flirt with her. He gets the surprise of his life, however, when he raises her veil to kiss her, and finds that he has been making love to his aunt instead of to his pretty second-cousin. Still more agony is piled upon him when he finds that Jean and Jack have been hidden behind the bushes, watching the whole of the proceedings. The sight of Bunny's crest-fallen face makes even the stern visage of Aunt Eliza relax a little, and she allows the triumphant Jack to bear off Jean, who goes as a willing captive. Bunny, after meditating on his sins for a while, makes up his mind that it is all right after all. No wedding bells for him.

DELAYED PROPOSALS (June 20).—It is sometimes decidedly difficult to get a little privacy on shipboard. Several times Jack Hardy almost reaches the proposal point with Marion Van Sicklen, but each time the fates are against him. Marion and her mother are on their way home from a vacation in Europe and board the boat at Liverpool at the same time as Jack, who is very much struck by Marion's appearance. After a little flirtation on the boat, he believes that his feelings are returned and is about to propose. Just then mama comes along with Count Brainlesse, whom she wishes to marry Marion. The proposal is postponed.

Again and again Jack tries to come to the point, being constantly interrupted by someone, either the count or mama, or the grouchy owner of the deck chair he has taken. First the grouch, then mama, and then the count, get sea-sick and at last Jack has Marion alone. Alas, the time has not yet come. Jack himself is suddenly seized with sickness and has to rush away just as the words tremble on his lips. The remainder of the voyage is spent by Jack in his bunk, from which he is too ill to rise. The steamer docks early in the morning before the steward has visited him and he does not wake himself until everyone is ready to leave the ship's side. He rushes to the deck, clad in nothing but his pajamas. Marion is with the count and her mother is nearby. It is obvious that the count is proposing marriage, but before he can place the ring on Marion's finger, Jack pushes in front of him, and falling on his knees, proposes to her in full view of everyone on deck. Marion joyfully goes to his arms and together they turn to pacify her scandalized mother and make the necessary explanations to the onlookers.

YOKOHAMA FIRE DEPARTMENT (June 20).—An interesting travel picture showing how the Japanese fight the fire-devil. Their fire-fighting apparatus contrasts strangely with that of other nations, but shows a great advance over that used in Japan fifty years ago, before European and American civilization made itself felt.

'ARRIET'S BABY (June 21).—'Arriet Rogers, the daughter of a retired costermonger, Tom Rogers, has two very ardent suitors, Bill Larkin and Bob 'Armon. Bill is a sailor at the London docks and is a very steady young fellow. Bob, on the other hand, is not nearly so steady, but makes a lot of money betting on horses. In this way, by helping him rake in several good pots, Bob curries favor with old man Rogers, who promises him that he shall wed his daughter, 'Arriet. They are married in great style and look regular toffs on their wedding day, driving down Whitechapel in grand style. Bill is abroad in his ship and does not hear of the wedding until long afterwards.

Luck is fickle and soon turns against Bob 'Armon, who loses not only all his own money, but all the savings of his father-in-law. Then he takes to drinking heavily and badly ill-treats his wife, who is about to present him with an heir. His drunken and thriftless habits are such that old man Rogers soon dies of a broken heart, leaving 'Arriet in the sole care of her now utterly brutal husband. Even after the birth of 'Arriet's baby, Bob continues his downward career. After a drunken row in a public-house, in which he severely wounds a pot companion, he is obliged to flee the country and leaves his wife utterly penniless.

'Arriet has now no means of supporting herself and the baby and is reduced to such straits that she is obliged to beg in the streets, to save herself from starvation. One day, when soliciting alms in a public house, she meets Bill Larkin, who has just returned from a long voyage. She recognizes him, but so weak has she become from lack of food, that she is unable to bear the shock and sinks to the floor in a swoon. Bill has her carried to her home and sends for a doctor. It is too late, however, for starvation has so shattered her health that she dies the next day, after receiving Bill's promise that he will care for her child as if she were his own. Bill faithfully fulfills his vow for the sake of the little woman he so dearly loved.

ESSANAY

ANONYMOUS LOVE (June 17).—John Binks, a post-office clerk, falls desperately in love with Mrs. Wilson, a society lady, who purchases a money order from the former. Binks reads the name signed on the money order, and that evening sends the lady a beautiful bouquet. The following day, Binks sends her a locket and chain. After having spent a few of his hard-earned dollars Binks discovers that he had sent the luxuries to Mrs. Wilson's colored maid, whose name Mrs. Wilson had used on the money order, having sent the money to the maid's mother. Binks collapses.

HILDA WAKES (June 18).—John Woods is instructed by his wife to engage a cook. John gets into a matrimonial agency by mistake. Hilda, whom John has taken for a cook, thinks she is going to be married to the handsome gentleman. Business takes John to the church. Hilda, follows him in. Mrs. Woods becomes very much aggravated when she discovers Hilda sitting at the table with her husband at the supper hour. Just see how John gets out of the scrape.

THE RUSTLER'S SPUR (June 19).—Sheriff Bradley, of Golden Streak, proposes to the fair Bessie Hargon. The following morning, the sheriff is notified that Harry Todd's horses have been stolen. The clue that the thief left, leads Bradley to Bessie's home. Bessie confesses that her brother is the horse thief. The thief escapes. Bessie's brother later sends a letter to the sheriff, stating that the horses were left at a nearby ranch. Bradley claims Bessie for his own.

FEAR (June 20).—Colonel Louis Jordan at a banquet given to a few of his friends, tells a story of James Hollander's bravery, during the war. Hollander is toasted by his friends. Later, one of the men determines to test Hollander's bravery. That night, when Hollander returns to his apartment, he discovers a note on his table, which tells him that at twelve that night, he dies. The nervous strain that Hollander is placed under gives a splendid foundation on this subject.

ALKALI IKE AND THE HYPNOTIST (June 21).—Alkali Ike eludes his wife and attends a performance at the Snakeville Opera House, where Prof. Hippy is demonstrating his wonderful hypnotic art. Alkali Ike is finally persuaded to go up on the stage. The professor hypnotizes him.

THE LAW AND THE OUTLAW (Special, 2 parts, June 4).—Dakota Wilson escapes from the Deer Lodge Penitentiary, and, after a period of quietness, secures a position on the Diamond S ranch, owned by Buffalo Watson. Ruth, the daughter of the ranch owner, one day sees Dakota's display of horsemanship, and the admiration thus aroused soon ripens into love, much against the protest of the family. Ruth's love for Dakota is increased by his heroic deed when he rescues her from the malignant attentions of a rushing steer whose anger is aroused by the flowing red handkerchief about her neck. Dakota, who is riding ahead of the cowboys on a round-up expedition, catches sight of the steer heading for Ruth, and, spurring his broncho into a break-neck speed, reaches the side of the steer, leaps upon its back, and, fastening his muscular arms on the frenzied beast's horns, brings him to the ground. In the midst of the ovation given him by the cowboys, Dakota is nabbed by Sheriff Mathers, who begins to march him back to the Deer Lodge Penitentiary. As the sheriff, his deputies and his captive are riding along a narrow mountain roadway, Dakota makes a daring leap down the precipitous incline, rolling down until he reaches the bottom, where he hides behind a projecting rock. The sheriff, in the meantime, has taken the long way down and follows for a distance, until he discovers the still form of Dakota behind the sheltering rock, and, thinking him dead, rides away.

Though free, Dakota is handicapped by the manacles. He manages to steal the gun and horse belonging to a sleeping shepherd, and by holding the gun between his knees, and placing the connecting chain of the manacles in front of the gun, he pulls with his teeth the strap which he has fastened to the trigger of the gun, thereby severing the connecting links. As he starts to ride away he is observed by a distant rifleman, who, by the aid of binoculars, sees the dangling steel wristlets, proving that he is an outlaw. He fires and Dakota falls from his horse with a head wound. But his left foot gets caught in the stirrup and he is dragged for a long distance with bullets flying around him. His foot eventually gets loose and he is left unconscious on the ground. When he regains consciousness, he finds himself again in the hands of the law, and just before he is about to be incarcerated he marries Ruth Watson, who bravely sobs as he is led away: "Good bye, my man, when you come back, I'll be waiting."

WHEN LILLIAN WAS LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD (June 16).—Lillian Brown takes the story of "Little Red Riding Hood" to bed with her, intent upon reading it, but her mother finds her and turns out the light. When all is quiet, she takes out the book, turns on the light and reads the story to the end. She falls asleep and, impressed with her reading, dreams that she herself is the little heroine. Then all the incidents of the story are vividly revealed, including the adventures with the crafty and hungry wolf. Recoiling in terror from the dangerous situation, she rolls out of bed. Half awake, with the spell of the dream upon her, she imagines the wolf is still in her room. As she comes to herself she realizes that she has paid the penalty for naughtiness in disobeying her mother, and crawling back to bed, hides herself under the covers in childish contrition, and falls into peaceful slumber.

TAMING A TENDERFOOT (June 17).—Willie Clever, city-born and bred, having been spoiled with plenty of money, thinks he knows it all, or nearly all. His father buys a ranch in Arizona and sends Willie out to run the business. He comes with "all the fixin's," and has not been on the place an hour before he tries to run, or reform the outfit. The cowboys decide he needs some experience and proceed to put him through "the third degree." He is persuaded to mount an outlaw and he is bucked higher than the price of wheat, then colliding with the uprising earth with emphasis. They put a bearskin on a burro to complete his scare. As soon as he recovers he discharges all of them; but, as he cannot run the ranch without them, he hires them back at advanced wages. They pretend to fall in with his plans, and urge him to show them how to handle a bunch of wild steers. He has a run for his life in this adventure, and faints from fear. As a result, he concludes that he knows nothing about the cattle business, and would rather brave the risks of the boulevards than the broad plains. He leaves for the far East amid rejoicing of all concerned.

MRS. HILTON'S JEWELS (June 16).—Frederick Hilton, a stock broker, is on the verge of failure, but he keeps his sad secret to himself, but his wife, a lover of all the gleam and glitter of life, further imperils him by her extravagance. She has a gorgeous set of jewels she desires to have expensively reset. He asks her to defer this for the present. She is perverse and impetuous, and does not understand such delay. He leaves the door of the private vault in their palatial residence open. She has just taken out the jewels and steps back into the vault to escape him, when he returns and closes the door with a bang, unwittingly imprisoning her. During the day the market swings in his favor, and he recovers from the cowardly thought of desperate suicide, to find his fortune safe. When he comes home, elated with the good news, he cannot find his wife, and at once jumps to the conclusion that the butler has made away with her in order to get the jewels. As they are struggling at the door of the vault, he hears a faint tapping on the inside. During the rush of the day he has lost his memorandum of the vault combination. Spurred by desperation, he secures the aid of two safe-blowers, who finally open the iron-room and the imprisoned woman is released, bringing new hope and happiness to his arms.

THE GOLD BRICK (June 19).—Reporter Jones, a hustler, discovers a gold-brick displayed in a jeweler's window and sees a fine "feature story" in trying to sell this real gold-brick to farmers at $2.00 per. The feature editor literally eats the idea, gives the reporter a requisition to buy the real brick and a duo of other reporters, heavily armed, to protect him on his way in some choice rural districts. After a number of unsuccessful attempts to sell their good gold brick, the reporter sends a letter back to the home office detailing their plans. The contents of this letter become known to an inquisitive person named Till, whose wife keeps a restaurant. He observes a good chance to make easy money, and gets a loan from his wife for that purpose. While the reporter and one of his assistants are dining, the other reporter of the party sells the real gold brick to a local jeweler and obtains an imitation brass brick, which he delivers to his comrades. He then leaves suddenly, called by a faked telegram. Till gets away with the brass brick, his wife gets after him with the sheriff. Cold, the jeweler, comes to the front, claiming the real goods. The sheriff arrests the reporter and his guard. They wire their predicament to the home office. The office boy, who has a grudge against the reporter, wires back, "They are fakers; lock them up." The reporter gets the long-distance telephone in the jail office, so that matters are finally straightened out and the prisoners released, but the paper has paid for a big sensation which they are ashamed to print.

THE FIGHTING LIEUTENANT (June 20).—Don Arguello, in order to get the fortune of his ward, Princess Irma, insists that she marry him. The high-spirited girl repulses him as equally unworthy of love or respect, but temporizes with him. About this time Captain Falconbridge, of the U. S. Cavalry, who is stationed at the Mexican border, is introduced to Irma at Don Arguello's home by Don Carlos, a high-grade young Mexican, who consorts with Americans. At a later visit Don Arguello happens on the scene and shows his immediate disapproval by insulting the American flag which Falconbridge has presented to Irma. This so incenses the soldier that he requests the ladies to leave the room while he gives the old roue a sound trouncing. He has completed this in satisfactory fashion, the furniture being wrecked in the struggle, when a detachment of Mexican soldiers arrive. Falconbridge escapes the vengeance of the reinforcements by leaping through a window. Irma, who is waiting the outcome of the fight in the garden, decides to fly over the border with the American and escape her vengeful and despised guardian. Don Carlos admires Irma, but unselfishly gives aid in this good cause. Close to the border the fleeing pair are forced to take refuge in an adobe. There they "stand off" the pursuing greasers until the boys of Falconbridge's command, hearing the firing, and scenting trouble, ride over the border and make a daring rescue.

LUBIN.

SILENCE FOR SILENCE (June 16).—Ray Hamilton, a young farmer, performs some necessary labor on Sunday; he is censured by Deacon Bentley. Ray endeavor to explain, but their words only bring on a quarrel that threatens for a time to break their friendship. Ray and Bess, the deacon's daughter, have long been sweethearts and have no intention of letting the quarrel separate them. While Ray is out taking pictures with his camera on a Sunday afternoon, he secures a few that are not very interesting to the deacon. As he has caught some snaps of the deacon which, if shown to the congregation, would show that he was quite a sportsman, even on Sunday. They come to an agreement of silence for silence and everything ends happily.

BOB BUILDS A BOAT (June 16).—Bob Thompson wanted a boat, and he and his son, Tom, and Clarence Dickson, a friend, start in to make the craft in the cellar. Many days and much hard work is cheerfully consumed on the job, which, when completed, is a vision of much enjoyment. But the engineering and surveying was at fault—they had not measured the boat and the exit of the cellar. These important qualities did not match and the question at point was, how to get the craft out. The idea of sawing the boat in halves was impossible, the only thing to be done was to knock in the wall of the cellar and dig an exit. This was done and finally the tub was carried down to the river. The proud ship-builders got in and pulled out, when it was discovered that it had not been well calked. It took water and was rapidly filling. Vivian, Bob's daughter, and the hired man saw the peril and Vivian really did love Clarence. John, the hired man, quickly got a motorboat and motored to the rescue. All lives were saved, and, as the three men at home soaked their feet in mustard and water, they declared, "Never again."

OUT OF THE BEAST A MAN WAS BORN (June 17).—Joe, the tramp, known as the beast, commenced teasing the Saint, known to all as the Kid, and would not permit him to eat any of their food. The glutton and the indifferent one objected, ruling the beast out of camp. The beast goes to the end of a division, and, knowing the good-heartedness of railroad men, asks for money. His appearance is against him and he is refused. He strikes the man down and takes what is not his own. The indifferent one, the glutton and the kiddie have gone on their way and arrive in the railroad yards in time to see the beast struck down while attempting to get away with his ill-gotten gains. The little Saint induces his pals to give succor to the beast. He is taken to an old hut and there nursed back to health by the child tramp, after being deserted by the others. The child later reveals to the beast the man within and secures from him a sacred promise through which the beast is regenerated and caused to turn to the love of God.

THE WEAKER MIND (Special—2 parts—June 18).—Bracey Curtis, an engineer, took Bob Glore to the superintendent after he had been discharged for drinking, and promised to be responsible for him. Bob, glad of the chance, sobered up and was beginning to make a man of himself, when, one day, returning home after a trip, he met his sister enroute to their cottage, and Beina Loeb, a drunkard's daughter, who tempted him to enter a well-known resort. By her fascinating ways she induced him to touch that which had caused his old father and sister the one sorrow in their lives. Mary, his sister, suspicioned where he had gone, went to Bracey and requested that he assist her in getting Bob home. He did so, and found the young man very much under the influence of liquor. Later on Bob met Beth, the engineer's daughter, and her goodness and purity struck him to such an extent that he returned from his evil associations to the path of rectitude. The chief offender is a drunkard, who, in one of his drunken frenzies fell and broke his neck and died. His daughter is taken into the engineer's home and there treated as one of the family. The truth, charity and environments of this ideal household soon has its effect upon the former temptress, and she bows low before the God that represents the home of Curtis, the engineer. Bob's reformation brings with it the reward of Beth's love, and Mary, who had always recognized the true worth of Bracey, gave him her hand in faith, hope and love. Then to the child, Beina, the adventuress, turned with a heart overflowing with thankfulness and appreciation.

A FATHER'S LOVE (June 19).—While telling his wife about the loss of his position on account of reduction of force, John Brown, machinist, discovers his little daughter in high fever. The doctor is sent for. The child grows worse. Lack of funds cause medical attention hard to find. Unable to pay the rent, John is notified to vacate. Gazing upon the little sufferer, John takes the empty medicine bottle and goes in search of a druggist who will trust him. His search is in vain. Of all the drug stores visited, not one cares to consider taking a chance. In hopeless despair, John continues his quest. A bank messenger, with two bags of coin, is entering a bank. John smothers his pride and determines to ask for assistance. Officials connected with a large financial institution have little time to give to a man in poverty, so the aristocratic bank president, who perhaps never has known the sting of want, orders John to take his medicine bottle and go. Humiliated by treatment as a beggar, resigning himself to the hopelessness of his condition, John turns to go, when suddenly his eyes fall upon the bottle in his hand, the cost of which, perhaps, means a life. He overpowers the banker and forces him to make the small loan. When relating the incident to his employees, the banker declines to pursue the man, recalling the fact that while thousands of dollars lies on his desk, the man did not touch a penny of it, being satisfied with the small bill asked for. John is about to enter the doctor's office when his attention is called to a little child in danger. At the risk of his life, he saves the child, and followed by the frantic mother, takes it into the doctor's office, where, later, the wealthy parent learns his name. A few days later the doctor is telling John that his own little girl is now out of danger, when the postman brings him a letter from the Mill Company, telling him a mistake was made in his suspension, enclosing a check for time lost and directing him to return to work. John and Mary are rejoicing in the glad tidings when a knock comes on their door. It is the wealthy parents of the little girl John saved. John modestly accepts their kind wishes, and is just about to take the extended hand of the father, when the men stare in mutual recognition—the banker and the hold-up man. John repays the loan by offering the check from his employees, and leads the banker to the bedside of his little girl, where both children have become fast friends at first sight. Further explanations are unnecessary; the banker understands, and, looking at the children, then at John, he hands him back his check, and offering a hand warm with heartfelt gratitude, tells him, "Your hold-up debt is paid."

HIS REDEMPTION (June 20).—Ed Cail and Jim Bold hold up a messenger carrying a payroll from the bank to the mine. They get away with the money, but as they near the state penitentiary, are pursued by the sheriff and posse, and seeing capture is inevitable, they bury the saddle bags containing the money. They are taken prisoners and given a grueling cross-examination by a shrewd detective in a last effort to make them reveal the hiding place of their loot. It is unsuccessful, and they are sentenced to ten years each in the penitentiary. During their confinement the differennt natures of the two men are shown plainly. Cail is liked by the warden for his pleasant manner, and in a short time is made a "trusty" and allowed the freedom of the prison. Bold is sullen and resents Cail's promotion to the warden's confidence. Alice, the warden's daughter, becomes interested in Cail and influences him for good. He finally decides to tell where the money is hidden, and gives her a diagram of the spot that it may be returned to the owners. The very day this happens, Bold plans an uprising. In the excitement he escapes, after wounding the warden in the arm. The warden's daughter, who believes that Cail has joined in the uprising in order to join his partner, goes after them, but when she arrives at the spot where the two men are standing over the hidden money, she realizes that Cail's intentions are honest, and when Cail, after subduing Bold, orders him to return to the penitentiary with the money, she knows that her confidence in Cail has not been betrayed. Later, the warden succeeds in getting a parole for Cail from the governor and Alice asks to be allowed to hand him the paper. Needless to say, her heart went with it, and their ultimate happiness is assured.

FROM IGNORANCE TO LIGHT (June 21).—Mary Menson, a country girl, is attracted by Paul Langford, who is spending the winter in the South. He devotes much if his time in leading Mary on to love him. For his sake she learns to read and write and is willing to study hard to be like other girls. The educational side is looked after by her old friend Jack Hardy, the schoolmaster, who, though college bred, is rusticated, and who himself loves Mary. He thinks that he is educating her to make her fit to marry his rival, but Mary suddenly discovers that the right man is Jack. At the happy ending Paul Langford and his real sweetheart, Gertrude Granger, return north, leaving Mary and the school master to the mercy of wedding bells.

A HERO AMONG MEN (Special—2 parts—June 9).—Ethel, daughter of Richard Menten, president of the Imperial Arms Co., is secretly engaged to Martin Bently, the secretary of the concern. Being in poor health she is sent to the country, and there, with her mother, lives with Mr. and Mrs. Landers. Harry Landers, the son, and Ethel enjoy many outings and eventually fall madly in love. Harry proposes, but Ethel tells him that she is engaged, and, being unable to combat her daily increasing love, urges her mother to take her back to the city.

Sometime later Menton, having a vacancy, induces Harry to accept a position in the company. He bids farewell to his parents and hastens to the city. Ethel knows nothing of Harry's presence in the office, until one day when she is leaving with her father and Bently, she encounters Harry at the door. Half dazed he goes through the formality of an introduction. He then realizes that Bently is his rival. Harry holds his love in leash and continues a friendship with Ethel.

Richard Menton has for weeks been contending with several hundred of his workmen, who demand a 10 per cent. raise in wages and Harry is taken into conference. He has looked into the homes and condition of the workmen and reports that the demand is not unfair. Menton still opposes the raise and refuses the demand. A mass meeting of the men is called and they decide to strike. Ethel sees the men marching to the plant and warns the startled officials. The day watchman, intoxicated, has descended into the basement and fallen asleep, while smoking a ciagrette. The cigarette falls into a heap of excelsior and sets the building on fire. In the corridors are stored many boxes of ammunition and powder ready for shipment. The officials of the plant, on seeing the mob, have fortified themselves in Menton's private office when the terrified watchman rushes up and tells them that the basement is in flames. The workmen, knowing of the ammunition in the building, beat a retreat. Menton hearing that the building is on fire swoons from heart failure. Ethel, who is also in the executive offices, is in hysterics. Harry drags Menton down the courtyard and instructs Bently to look after Ethel, who has fainted; he however, in a paroxysm of fear leaves her and dashes into the crowded yard. Harry places Menton in an ambulance and then learns that Ethel is still in the building. The explosion of the cases commences, but Harry, disregarding the danger, rushes in and drags her down the stairs amid the cheers of the mob of strikers. The strike ends and the firm gives in to the demand of the men. Ethel ignores Bently and Harry asks Menton for the hand of his daughter, which is cheerfully granted as the brave lover is pronounced "A Hero Among Men."

And Many Others.

A TOUR THROUGH TOURAINE (June 17).—This film is a personally conducted tour through beautiful Touraine, France, showing the various examples of architectural splendor which were built by the various kings of France from the Fifteenth Century to the Revolution. It shows the chateau of Villesavin, the chateau of Cheverny, the Court of Honor, which is adorned with a very pretty Italian fountain, the chateau of Chaumont (lying in the beautiful valley of the Loire River), and many others which make the film interesting, of great educational value and pleasing the eye.

RHODES (Asiatic Turkey)—(June 17).—The little city of Rhodes, the capital of the island of Rhodes, where the French inhabitants live among the landmarks and now ruined reminders of former Turkish magnificence.

THE SACRIFICE (June 18).—Jane Hunter, the wife of Cleveland Hunter, the noted illustrator, could not bear to see her husband spending so much time with his art, and, consequently, went home, with her child to her mother. Hunter, who was not in the best of health, soon found that he was a victim of the white plague and that it would be necessary for him to go to a sanitarium. There the physicians decided that blood transfusion was necessary to save his life and they sought someone who could make the sacrifice. When Jane learned of her husband's predicament she promptly volunteered. The operation was a success and Hunter showed signs of marked improvement, but the baby was left alone with his father, because Jane died.

THE OUTLAW'S LOVE (June 19).—"Dare Devil" Larpin, a notorious outlaw, wins the heart of Lillian Conklin. Her brother, Joe, objects strongly to the alliance and through his efforts Larpin is kept out of the vicinity. The outlaw writes to Lillian suggesting that since her parents have willed her and Joe an equal interest in the cattle she could cut out her share, sell it and start housekeeping with the money. Lillian is delighted with the idea. The cowboys discover someone rustling the cattle and inform Joe Conklin. Joe, not knowing the rustler is his sister, fires on her. She flees with Joe and another cowboy in pursuit. At a sharp turn Lillian is thrown from her horse and mortally injured. Her dying request is to see Larpin and although he knows that the authorities are after him he heeds her call, reaching the bedside just in time to bid her an affectionate farewell and as Lillian passes away the outlaw willingly submits to arrest at the hands of the waiting sheriff.

THE BURIAL OF A RICH CHINAMAN (June 20).—For the very many people who have never witnessed the burial of a Chinaman this film will prove a remarkably interesting entertainment. The deceased in this case happens to have been very wealthy and as a result no expense is spared to make a stupendous showing. The cortege is carried at the head of a procession followed by gloriously colored banners on which are inscribed the dead man's many virtues. The edibles and objects that he loved are buried with him and his family pay their farewell respects.

ANTIBES (FRANCE), AND ITS ENVIRONS (June 20).—The views of the old town at which Napoleon disembarked on his return from Elba in 1815. It is from this city that one may secure an idea of the beauties of the sunsets on the Mediterranean.

MONUMENTS AND CASCADES OF ROME (June 20).—A visit to the beautiful monuments and waterfalls of the capitol of Italy.

THE JURY'S VERDICT (June 21).—Henry Wilson, a celebrated lawyer, whose son has left home and secretly married the girl of his choice, is called upon to defend a girl charged with murdering her husband. After he has undertaken the case he learns that it is his own son whom the girl is accused of killing. He believes her innocent and makes an impassioned speech to the twelve men who are to decide and then exhausted from the strain awaits, breathlessly, the jury's verdict. Suspense is the keynote of this film and to all exhibitors who realize the popularity of a really dramatic production, this release offers an opportunity to book the kind of film that their patrons enjoy.

EDISON.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS (June 16).—The Princess Alicia was plainly bored. A baron stood behind her chair and two highborn ladies waited at either hand to obey her slightest summons. Later when a favorable opportunity presented itself Princess Alicia ran away. The heart of the Princess Alicia urged her to stop and play in the mud with some peasant children. For you see the Princess Alicia was only eleven years old, her heart was very like the heart of any other little child and she had never played in the dirt before in her life.

How Alicia brought her little ragamuffin friends back to the palace unobserved while the royal guards at the command of her distracted king were searching high and low for her; how they crept up to the nursery and made a magnificent mud pie with the earth in the flower pots there and finally how the king found them at this plebeian amusement and sternly sentenced the little peasants to come every day to play with the Princess Alicia, can best be discovered by seeing this really charming little play.

THE TWIN BROTHERS (June 17).—The two leading parts are played by the same actor. The twin brothers, Robert, a sober industrious chap, and William a drunkard, are both in love with Mary Leigh. Mary appreciating the distinction in their characters cares only for Robert. Misconstruing Mary's sisterly affection, William deludes himself with the notion that she loves him, and boasts to Robert of his good luck. Later, accidentally surprising Robert and Mary together, William discovers his mistake. Overcome with grief and regret he leaves immediately for the West.

Several years later Robert and Mary are married. A blackmailing Jew gets possession of an important letter belonging to Robert and demands money for its return. Robert calls on the Jew, knocks him down in a fit of passion and regains his property. Then fearing he has killed the blackmailer he hurries back to his office in a fever of uncertainty as to what he should do next. At his office he is unexpectedly confronted by William who has returned from the West. Robert hurriedly explains the situation and William with splendid generosity is arrested in his place. Robert discovering this, follows William to the station house and confesses his own part in it, only to find that the Jew was merely stunned. The brothers clasp hands.

THE EVIL THEREOF (June 20).—Mary Randolph has a hard time supporting herself and her little sister with the money she earns in a department store. Driven to desperation on rent day she summons all her courage and goes to the proprietor of the store and asks for a substantial wage. Her pleas meet with a stern refusal. Haunted by the stricken look in the girl's eyes, Kathryn Dolby, daughter of the proprietor, who has been listening, determines to investigate conditions by becoming one of the salesgirls. Unknown to her father she obtains such a position in his store.

On the afternoon following the unsuccessful interview with the proprietor, Mary, exhausted by the grind, faints as she is leaving the store. She is caught by a nice young man who, after accompanying her home, pays the insistent rent collector what is due him.

Several days later, owing to the increasing rush of customers, Mary again faints from exhaustion, and after a stormy scene with her father, Kathryn takes the weakened woman to her squalid home, where she learns of the discovery of a note from her brother, Jack, urging the woman to accept the money. Misunderstanding the note Kathryn takes it to her father, upon whom dawns the true state of things through parsimony he has made himself a virtual instigator of his son's evil intentions. Whereupon an immediate raise of wages is given all employees.

KNOWN THE WORLD OVER

As the greatest: the best projection surface the world ever produced. MIRROROIDE

The only metallic surface that cannot and will not turn black, tarnish, crack, or peel. Aluminum and other metallic-coated screens are known since 1899.

BUT

They never gave you the service. They tarnished, turned black; they cracked, peeled and moisture ruined them. MIRROROIDE

Is sold under a positive five-year guarantee. Of course, you are wise. Of course, you read our unsolicited indorsements. MIRROROIDE is as standard as gold coinage. We are the only people on earth who dare show you. Get our large free samples; produce pictures without glare, haze and eye strain. Clear as crystal. We sell ten screens to the combined output of the others. Why? Because we produce the goods. Don't doubt, ascertain facts.

Gentlemen:—I am well pleased. I candidly think this is the greatest screen I have ever seen and I have seen a good many, but Mirroroide beats them all. It makes the pictures stand out and look lifelike, just as though they were alive. You can actually see every facial expression. My patrons say I produce the greatest pictures they ever saw. They more than congratulate me and I am simply delighted with results.

Yours, respectfully,
G. M. FREEMYER.

sity of the city's servants. Employes of the various departments pass in armies. In the pageant there were 7,000 police and many thousands of firemen and street cleaners. Interesting pictures of Fire Commissioner Johnson and Commissioner William H. Edwards of the street cleaning department are given. In the reviewing stand, Police Commissioner Waldo stands at the right of Mayor Gaynor. This pageant occurred on the 17th of May.

HE WOULD FIX THINGS (June 18).—Mr. Buttinsky is a very benevolent sort of a chap and in trying to help his neighbors and friends who are in trouble gets into a lot of trouble himself. He nearly wrecks the automobile of one of his friends by pounding on a cylinder. Later coming upon a young man talking to his sweetheart at the gate, Buttinsky enters into the conversation and accompanies them into the house. Like a bugle call to his chivalrous soul he stops the leak in a waterpipe by placing his hand in the hole and tells the family to send for a plumber. The plumber, who was born with humorous tendencies, instead of stopping the flow of water immediately, goes into the cellar and smokes his pipe. He at length turns the water off and returns upstairs to find Buttinsky about exhausted from fatigue. The astonishment of Buttinsky is supreme when he finds upon removing his hand from the leak that water no longer flows.

MARY STUART (Special—3 parts—June 21).—The beautiful and much loved Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland, is one of the most unfortunate and sympathetic characters in history. Born in Scotland, educated at the court of Francis II of France, whom she married at fifteen, queen of France at sixteen, a widow at seventeen, beginning her reign as Scotland's Queen at eighteen, married to Darnley of the Royal Blood at nineteen—her life began amid turmoil and disaster.

Her husband, Lord Darnley, who after their marriage proved himself a vicious braggart and coxcomb, was intensely jealous of Rizzio, Mary's favorite singer and secretary. One night as Rizzio sang to the queen, Darnley and his band of night hawks waited at the foot of the narrow staircase for the singer. Down the staircase he comes full of youth and love. Darnley's hand shoots out of the shadow and Darnley's dagger finds its rest in Rizzio's heart.

Such marital dissensions, together with political factions and religious contentions, cause Scotland to rise in arms, and the queen in jeopardy of life and without followers, accepts the offered hospitality of England's queen, Elizabeth, who extends Mary an invitation to sojourn at Kennilworth Castle, in Warwickshire, until the broils of Scottish clans subside and Mary can return to her throne. With gratitude and haste, the Stuart repairs to Kennilworth, only to find herself trapped, a prisoner, by Elizabeth who really fears not only the Scottish queen's beauty and power, but her legal birthrights to the English crown. Elizabeth, not daring to openly execute her royal sister, tries secretly to affect her assassination but in vain, owing to the loyalty of Mary's servitors.

A charge of treason is then brought against her by the English crown. She is found guilty and sentenced to the block. Pending the signing of the death warrant by Queen Elizabeth, attempts to rescue her are made, one by a gallant and loving Englishman, Sir Edward Mortimer; but these only resulted in failure of plans, frustrated attempts on Elizabeth's life, and deeper confinement and unhappiness for Mary. In a meeting between the two queens, effected after much planning, Elizabeth taunts Mary whose proud spirit rebels and bursts forth in denunciations. After this disastrous interview and at the urging of Lord Burleigh, the Lord Treasurer, Elizabeth signs the death warrant and the martyr queen is led to public execution. The Earl of Leicester has been secretly in love with Mary but, fearing in his safety, deserts her when the crisis comes.

There is a white haired old man who follows her, with breaking heart, to the scaffold, and a gray haired old woman bowed down by weeping—these, her nurse and her physician, the remnants of her faithful followers. She mounts the scaffold, the charges of treason are read to the curious, hungry crowd watching. She forgives the headsman, offers a prayer for her too trusting soul, and bares her white neck to the axe. The film fades on Leicester bowed with grief and remorse on the stairs which Mary had just ascended on her way to the scaffold.

MELIES

THE LURE OF THE SACRED PEARL (June 19).—Produced in Java.—Freeman, a young American traveler, landing at Surabaja, Java, purchases a catch of Thursday Island oysters. Opening them, he finds in one a black pearl, the stone that is sacred to Buddha. A Buddhist religious fanatic, perceiving the stone, trys to wrench it from the American, but without success.

Freeman repairs to a hotel with his friends where the fanatic, disguised, makes an offer for the pearl that he may present it to Buddha; but his offer is too low and Freeman refuses. From that day on the American is shadowed from morning till night and at last is attacked and seriously wounded. Regaining consciousness, he discovers that the pearl has been stolen and suspicion is at once directed towards the fanatic.

Knowing the use the fanatic would make of the jewel, Freeman journeys to the temple of Boro-Budur, "the temple of the thousand Buddhas," where he disguises himself as a Buddhist priest and makes a search of all the statues for his missing pearl. Giving up almost in despair, he suddenly sees the fanatic coming to offer the pearl to "make merit" with Buddha. Freeman quickly calls in the police and the fanatic, caught with the goods, but fearing that Buddha, deprived of the pearl, will have revenge, gives his whole fortune for the gem.

DIVING FOR PEARL-OYSTERS AT THURSDAY ISLAND (June 19).—Interesting views of the method employed in getting these gem-bearing oysters from the highly cultivated and well known beds at Thursday Island, just north of Cape York Peninsula, Australia.

BIOGRAPH

THE SWITCH-TOWER (June 16).—He was a regular boy and his father a switchman. The boy determined to be like his dad and spent his play hours around, the switch-tower. Thus at the crucial moment he was able to save his father's honor as a switchman, when the struggle between love and duty came and later to come to the aid of his parents in the hands of the desperate counterfeiters, eventually causing their capture.

THE MOTHERING HEART (2 parts—June 21).—Always mothering something the girl came into her own. So through the mother spirit she yielded to her young admirer's persuasions. He was such a sorry young person. Soon her sacrificing heart brightened the path of the struggling husband—her own heartaches forgotten for her loved one. With prosperity came the idle woman and a young wife's struggle against the truth. A new light broke, then darkened, but shone again the clearer.

THE RISE AND FALL OF McDOO (June 19).—He reckoned without his better half with the inevitable result. At home the Prince of Knock-outs was a lazy husband; abroad, the ideal of the fair. The Misses McNeil quite lost sight of the Nilly boys when he appeared at the lawn party. Mrs. McDoo also appeared as official dishwasher at the party. That was how the youthful McNeils' ideal was shattered and the Nilly boys regained their rightful prestige.

ALMOST A WILD MAN (June 19).—Rooly, Pooly and Dooly were "picture sandwiches," but hardly shining lights, even in that capacity. Consequently they were "canned" by the management. A brilliant idea—one would play the wild man in the village square—a real live show of their own. Rooly and Pooly then basked in the society of fair country belles, but Dooly at length was rescued by Miss Smart, looking for excitement. She was not disappointed.

KALEM.

THE WHEEL OF DEATH (June 16).—John Brown, the mate on a river steamboat, rescues a small boy from the clutches of a villainous deckhand, thereby gaining the roustabout's bitter enmity. Absorbed over the events of the day, the mate fails to bestow upon his wife the usual home-coming caress. Annoyed, she greets the coming of the stranger as a possible foil to arouse the husband's jealousy in punishment for the slight. The flirtation all but ends in a tragedy with discovery by the husband, who does not understand her innocent act. He spares the stranger's life and leaves—as he vows—forever. The stranger promises to bring back the husband. Brown is waylaid by the rascally deckhand, who, with a companion, ties the mate to the wheel of the steamboat. The stranger boards the vessel as it pulls out. He discovers Brown's predicament and after a savage battle with the ruffians, rescues the mate from the whirling, churning wheel of death. Brown is carried to his home, where he is revived. Matter are explained and a happy family reunited. The stranger goes his way.

GOVERNOR JOHNSON OF CALIFORNIA (June 16).—California's chief executive has been much in the public eye of late and recently signed the widely discussed anti-alien land bill. The Kalem photographer has secured some interesting pictures of Governor Johnson.

THE ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENSE (June 18).—Norman Lewis, having been admitted to the bar, prepares to leave for the city, where he has been offered a position with a large law firm. He enjoys a farewell dinner with his sweetheart, Ruth Demarest, and in a spirit of fun they break a wishbone. They make a compact whereby each is to preserve a portion of the wishbone and return it, should love fail.

Norman meets with great success in the city and his stenographer, Louise Borden, a bright, vivacious young woman, falls deeply in love with him. Norman tells her of his love for Ruth and shows her the portion of the wish-bone, which he has had made into a watch-charm.

Louise determines to replace Ruth in Norman's affections. One day she notices that the ribbon of his watch-fob has become worn and offers to replace it. This enables her to throw away the charm and fasten a piece of another wishbone, the remainder of which she mails to the young lawyer. When the morning mail arrives she secretly obliterates the postmark and proceeds to purloin Ruth's letters when they appear.

Norman, in a spirit of pride, offers no response and endeavors to forget Ruth.

In the little country town Ruth has been study-

Gentlemen:-Having just installed one of your "Radium Gold Fiber-screens" I take pleasure in speaking a word of praise for it. I have seen several different kinds of screens but one that has never seen or used one of your "Fiber" screens would not believe hardly that they could be such wonderful improvement. My pictures stand out now very near like the actual person appearing on the stage. I would not be without one now for double the cost as they are fine. Thanking you for your kind treatment, I remain, yours respt.

THE MONTH AFTER

The above light bills show the saving to the Arcade Theatre, Denison, Texas, the first month after the installation of the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. This, together with a facsimile of letter written by Mr. W. R. Rowell, Manager of Palace Gem Theatre, El Dorado, Kansas, should demonstrate to you absolutely the real merits of the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN.

LIVE MANAGERS SAY: That the Radium Gold Fibre Screen will produce from 80% to 100% better picture, at from one-third to one-half less cost than any other screen on the market to-day.

IN CONCLUSION: We will say that if you are up-to-date—a live wire in the business—and anxious to prosper by the experience we have gained through thousands of satisfied users of our Radium Gold Fibre Screen—Don't put it off, but get in touch with us at once.

P. S.—A large screen is now on display at the Seventh Floor, Heidelberg Building, Broadway and 42nd Street, for the benefit of New York Exhibitors ing law, that she may be of assistance to Norman when they are married. Her heart is broken when she is led to believe that his love has grown cold. The next year she is admitted to practice and by a strange turn of fate she is called to the city to defend a case which Norman is prosecuting. An unexpected incident brings the lovers together and exposes Louise's treachery.

CUPID'S LARIAT (June 20).—When Stebbins returns home he is infuriated to find his daughter, Jane, in conversation with Burt, her sweetheart, as he has not looked upon the match with favor. He sends Burt on his way and locks Jane in her room.

Burt resolves to resort to strategy and his lariat offers a suggestion. Proceeding back to the house he throws pebbles at Jane's window and, attracting her attention, tosses her the lariat. She fastens one end to the door and prepares to slide down to the waiting arms of her sweetheart. Stebbins hears a disturbance and rushes to Jane's room. He cannot open the door because of the rope, but when Jane alights on the ground, father is precipitated down the stairs. Stebbins gathers himself together and follows in pursuit of the couple.

Burt and Jane, dashing away on horseback, see Stebbins chasing them and hit upon a scheme to elude him. They encounter a cowboy who steps behind the brush and removes his outer garments, which he tosses over to the girl, who exchanges with him. Father ultimately makes a capture, but of the wrong couple, and is obliged to grant belated congratulations.

SMOKED TO A FINISH (June 20).—Mrs. Brown and her friends organize the Anti-Nicotine League. The husbands are the victims. One day while his wife is away, Brown steals a smoke and notices that a draught carries the smoke up the chimney. He calls in his cronies, who emulate his example. All is going well until such a cloud of smoke proceeds from the chimney that a neighbor calls out the fire department.

ON THE BRINK OF RUIN (June 21).—Fred's prison sentence expires and he returns to his wife and child, determined to lead a new life. He finds it is no easy matter for an ex-convict to secure employment, but through the kind offices of Mrs. Edmond, who has befriended the wife in her time of need, he obtains a position in Mr. Edmond's office.

Fred's employer is quick to appreciate his employe's worth and soon promotes him to a position of trust. One afternoon Fred's wife arranges to meet him and he places his watch on his desk that he may leave promptly. To his watch chain is attached the key to the cash box. When Fred is called from the office to secure change for a large bill, Arthur, an unscrupulous clerk, takes the key and empties the cash box. Mr. Edmond, passing along the street, sees Fred in conversation with a desperate character and does not understand that the young man is endeavoring to reform an old companion.

"Once a thief, always a thief!" declares Arthur when the robbery is discovered. The office boy, having faith in Fred, rushes out to meet him and tells him of the incident. Fred, realizing that he will have difficulty in clearing himself, takes to flight. The old companion tells him not to return home, that that is the first place the officers will visit.

The husband, however, concludes that he must inform his wife and he is apprehended. When he is conducted to prison and is about to despair, his young friend, the office boy, succeeds in clearing his name and bringing about the conviction of Arthur.

A CALL FROM HOME (June 17).—Robert Leslie is engaged to marry Alicia. She is walking in the woods one day, when she is accosted by a tramp. She is saved from unpleasantness by Dave Hatton, who chases the tramp away. Alicia truly graceful, gives Dan a flower as an appreciation for his kindness. Walking they meet Mr. Leslie, who on seeing Dave becomes jealous. Dave leaves and Alicia and Robert quarrel. She breaks the engagement, still later the friendship of Dave and the girl ripens into love and they are married. Leslie who is a stock promoter induces Dave to invest his savings in some worthless stock. Dave received a letter from his father telling him that the mortgage on the farm at home is due and requesting Dave to send him $2,000. Dave goes to see Leslie about selling his stock and finds out that Leslie has decamped and that the stock is worthless. Dave badly in need of money, decided to follow Leslie and being informed that he has gone to Colorado, Dave goes there. There he meets Leslie and demands his money, but is nearly choked to death for his pains. Desperate, Dave determines to kill him and in the night steals to his room, he is about to perpetrate a foul deed when the proprietor of the hotel comes up to his room with a telegram from his wife, who has wired that she is ill and lonesome about the cause of his absence. The thought comes to him that he was about to make the girl he loves the wife of a murderer and he decides to go home. Before leaving, gold ore is found in the mine in which he owns stock and Dave sells at a big profit. He returns home and starts life anew, happy in the thought that the Call from Home saved his soul.

THE SMUGGLED LACES (June 22).—Belmont returns from Europe, bringing to his wife some smuggled laces. She is delighted with them until she receives a letter from a friend of hers, whose husband is employed in the Custom House, that the government had learned of the smuggled lace and advising her to get rid of it. Mrs. Belmont meets Mr. Jolly her friend's husband. She asks him to mind the lace for her. This he does and he takes some home. His wife discovers them and accuses him of buying them for some woman. He tells her he bought them for her and presents them to her. Later Mrs. Jolly wearing the laces calls on Mrs. Belmont, who is horrified to see Mrs.' Jolly wearing her beautiful laces. Later she meets Mr. Jolly and demands her laces back, he gives her a check for $650. Mr. Jolly informs his wife that the laces were smuggled and cost him $650. Meantime Mr. Belmont hires a gas man to pose as a Custom House Inspector to get the laces back from Mrs. Jolly, this he does and returns with the laces. However, Mrs. Belmont had bought other laces with money she received from Mr. Jolly. She was proudly showing them to Mr. Belmont when a real Custom House officer appeared and took all of them away. Mrs. Belmont explains to her husband that she had bought the other and faints dead away.

VICTOR.

HIS DAUGHTER (June 20).—A young girl, Gertrude, is the daughter of a thief. She induces her father to go to the country to begin life anew. They do this avoiding the old man's accomplice in crime, who is obnoxious to Gertrude.

They find quarters in a country boarding house. The minister of the village church, Jim, and the country storekeeper, both fall in love with Gertrude, and the fact that her father was a criminal is unsuspected. Gertrude secures a position as clerk in the store, and received the storekeeper's attentions unwillingly as she loves the minister. The storekeeper discovers that Jim is his successful rival, and becomes inordinately jealous. But the knowledge of her father's past life keps Gertrude from becoming the wife of Jim.

On an unlucky day fate brings the old man's accomplice to the village. He plans to rob the boarding house, and, in carrying out this design, is detected by the storekeeper, and by Gertrude's father. The accomplice at once recognizes the old man, and the storekeeper learning that the father the knowledge of her father's past life keeps Gertrude.

But love and Christian principles prevail over the jealous man's denunciations. The old thief's repentance is regarded as sincere, by the villagers. In time his sins are not only forgiven, but forgotten. And the culmination of the joy of their new life comes, when Gertrude becomes the wife of the minister.

POWERS.

FRIENDLY NEIGHBORS (June 18).—Schultz, the tailor, and Finnegan, the shoemaker, whose places of business adjoin, are about as amicable as a fat fishworm and a skinny sparrow. Tragedy in their simple lives is averted until a frivolous fairy invades their respective shops, toys with their dizzy hearts for the moment, then flitting away in dreamland softness, leaving in her wake all the miseries of romance and love.

Schultz catches Finnegan spying upon his love making—and Finnegan seeks relief by sitting in a tub of water merely because Schultz placed a hot tailor's goose against an anatomical district that required such treatment. Finnegan reciprocates the kindly feeling by inserting an awl into Schultz's physical being which made the faculty of sitting an unknown quantity.

Their attempts at love making with the frolicsome widow is strewn with rock and thorn, the tantalizing kids only too eager to abet in adding pangs to their throbbing hearts. Knowing the fire and flame of jealousy flickers in the breast of the tailor and the shoemaker, the kids suggest the survival of the fittest, and the two lovesmitten men don the gloves.

With the kids as an enthusiastic audience, Schultz and Finnegan repair to an isolated field and fight a long, bitter, battle. And when exhausted they lie prone, the fascinating widow chances to pass in clinging embrace with a "swell," and Schultz and Finnegan realize their dream is shattered. Disgusted with the tumultuous pranks of Cupid, they shake hands and leave arm in arm, satisfied with being just friendly neighbors.

THE SCAR (June 19).—Olga Drent never realized that the scar on her cheek was to mar her happiness, as well as her beauty, until she meets Stanley Sherwood and gives her love unsought. The arrival of her school chum, Marian Ormsby, with her fresh, clear beauty, causes Olga to curse the fatal scar, which she blames for Stanley's choosing Marian for his wife.

Jealousy of the most fiendish kind prompts her, in the dark hours of night, to mutilate her rival. She steals to her father's (Dr. Drent) laboratory, and procuring chloroform she goes to Marian's bedside and after her victim is unconscious, cuts her fair check with a nail file.

Her jealous passion subdued, remorse follows, and when morning breaks, the discovery that she has unintentionaly severed an artery in Marian's face, drives her frantic. Dr. Drent and the hurriedly called specialist decide transfusion alone can save Marian's life. Dr. Drent gladly offers his blood, but the doctor decides his heart will not permit it. Olga sees her chance for atonement and offers herself. Despite her father's remonstrance, the operation takes place, and both girls slowly return from the valley of the shadows. June sees the quiet wedding of Sherwood and Marian, and the forgiven Olga presses their hands and buries her face in the bride's roses.

THE STOLEN IDOL (June 22).—Professor Milton Hayes visits the interior of a temple in Egypt, steals a sacred idol and knocks down a native who tries to prevent the theft, the professor making his escape on the run. A caliph and several girls enter the temple, discover the robbery and the caliph denounces the native for his carelessness in allowing the American to steal the holy relic.

The native trails Hayes to his hotel, climbs the fire escape outside Hayes' room and peers in through the window, seeing Hayes entertaining several friends with the story of his trip. Hayes sends a letter to a fellow American in the town, a Professor Westerly, asking him to come to the hotel and try to decipher the hieroglyphics on the idol.

Having located Hayes' room, the native goes to Shedah, a beautiful Egyptian worshipper of the idol, and tells her of the theft. They plan to recover the idol and Shedah dresses herself as an American man. They also put a secret substance in a vase, place the vase in a satchel, and Shedah takes the satchel, goes to Hayes' hotel and rents a room, she being neatly garbed as a male American tourist.

Professor Westerly visits Hayes and discovers that the figures on the idol read: "If vandal hand ever removed, Death awaits he who disturbs my sacred resting. It is written.—KISMET."

While Hayes is absent from his room, the Shedah gains an entrance to the apartment, removes the idol from its place in a box, puts the vase in its place, and passes the idol out through the window to the native on the fire escape, after which she leaves the hotel.

On Professor Hayes' return, he finds the vase and an overpowering smoke issuing from it, causing Hayes to fall dead. Professor Westerly then engages detectives to investigate the tragedy while he alone visits Shedah's home and enters an office downstairs where Egyptian herbs are sold. Here Westerly finds a trap door which he opens, whereupon a native appears and stoically conducts Westerly to Shedah's room beneath. She pretends sleep, but Westerly covers the native with a revolver, handcuffs Shedah and she gets his permission to get a shawl. She does so and touches a secret spring, opening another trap door and causing Westerly to fall through the floor into the water beneath.

Westerly swims some distance and Shedah becomes furious at the prospect of Westerly making his escape. She has the native dive down into the water and he and Westerly fight, the American beating the native in the natatorial battle.

Seeing that Westerly will escape, Shedah sets fire to the room above him. The smoke issuing from the house alarms the detectives waiting across the street and they run into the place. One of the officers, despite the smoke and flames, lowers a rope to Westerly and hauls him up, the two escaping from the building amid fire.

During the excitement, Shedah and the native manage to make good their escape from the burning structure. The last scene shows Shedah and the native on board a ship, bearing away with them the sacred idol to preserve it from any possible theft by seekers after Egyptian idols.

IN LOVE AND WAR (2 parts—June 17).—When war was but a portentious rumor, "The Girl" was in the throes of mental battle involving a decision wherein two suitors dared to hope for acceptance, one "The Lawyer," the other "The Journalist."

While she pondered, Lincoln signed the call to arms, and both responded in patriotic effort to enlist. The lawyer, who was accepted as a recruit, is granted a subtle opportunity to belittle the journalist in the girl's eyes by penning a message of his going to the front, knowing the journalist was rejected because of a deformity to his hand. Embittered because of the lost opportunity, the journalist goes to his room; the lawyer meanwhile seeking the girl who listens to his volorous declaration and bids him win his spurs "and hope."

Disappointed, without realizing conditions of the journalist not going to the front, she refuses to see him, believing he will not serve his country. The darkey delivers her message and the journalist returns in despair to his room where later he views from his window the departure of the soldiers.

The lawyer is later promoted to first lieutenant and the girl receives the word by letter. Craving for love, the journalist gains admittance to her presence and again pleads his cause, but his excuse of the hand's deformity arouses only pity, the verbally told promotion likewise creating anguish because of his helplessnes in being unable to strive for like honors at the front.

The journalist seizes the opportunity to represent the press as a war correspondent which information he tells the girl as he bids her farewell. His going only elicits pity. Yet she has confidence in him and gives him a letter to the lawyer—a letter which tells him to hope for his reward on returning.

The journalist is assigned to headquarters at the front where the fighting is most severe, and in which division the lawyer ranks as first lieutenant. Overcoming the temptation not to deliver to his rival the letter intrusted for delivery by the girl, the lawyer is located and made a happy recipient.

Later, during the progress of a long siege of desperate fighting, the journalist ignores all efforts of safety and "covers" the details of battle in masterful style, the horrors of wartime strife being read by the girl back home. At the turning-point of the prolonged battle, the lawyer is hurried to protect a dangerous position where the true test of courage takes place. The journalist, knowing the lawyer's command, is receiving the brunt of terrific strife, keeps his glases to that part of the battlefield. The desperate Confederates, realizing the importance of gaining that particular strategic position, hurl their concerted force in effort to break the opposition, and the journalist is horrified to see the lawyer break from his command and seek safety in cowardly fight.

As the lawyer's command falls back in leaderless confusion, the journalist catches the lawyer's mount, rallies the disorganized company into a furious charge and succeeds in driving back the Confederates and regaining the valuable position, which valorous work is believed to be engineered by the lawyer and his heroic command.

The lawyer, who crawled away in hiding, sees the turn, and starts to rejoin his men, when the journalist and he meet. The journalist has received a severe wound in his deformed arm, and as he meets the lawyer he falls fainting. The lawyer has him removed to the field hospital, then resumes efforts of holding the position as the heaviest of the conflict changes to another part of the battlefield.

The journalist, however, refuses surgical attention until he finishes the story of the battle—a story of heroism wherein he tells of the lawyer and his fighting men turning the tide of battle into a Federal victory of magnitude. As the last line is dashed off the journalist reels and falls. His mangled arm is amputated and he lies in stupor while back home the local papers ring with the valorous generalship of the lawyer and his heroic company.

Proudly awaiting at the close of war the return of the lawyer—her ideal—the girl exhibits to him the local papers and voices her admiration, while in his silent room, bowed down in grief, is the journalist who "knows" the stump of an arm forever bars him from the love for which his soul yearns.

got all in order to save him from disgrace in the eyes of "the girl" he loves, the lawyer's conscience revolts. WOMEN AND WAR (2 parts—June 21).—During the Civil War there were two sisters living in Virginia, who had as a near neighbor a young, wealthy and patriotic man, who visited them frequently. The elder sister was plain and attractive, but possessing a patriotic spirit and sterling qualities. The younger sister was pretty and doll-like, superficial, frivolous and fond of luxury. The elder sister was capable of a deep and undying devotion, while the younger was only capable of shallow affection.

Both of the sisters love the neighbor in their separate ways. He is sub-consciously attracted by the inner worth of the elder sister, but this attraction is overbalanced by the beauty of the younger. The one thing in common between the elder sister and the neighbor is their respect and patriotic love for the stars and stripes, despite all interstate controversy. The younger sister, on the other hand, is too frivolous to even be partisan. Patriotism to her is nothing but sentimental twaddle.

The younger sister plainly tells the elder one that she is in love with the neighbor and is determined to win him. The elder sister, smarting under the taunts of the younger one about her plain looks, assumes an indifferent attitude towards the neighbor, who finds solace in the younger's smile and in a moment of impulse he asks her to become his wife. She accepts and he departs rejoicing.

The elder sister's hopes are completely dashed when the younger sister comes to her and confides in her, telling of the young man's proposal and her acceptance. She congratulates her happy young sister and the neighbor and then goes away alone to nurse the hurt of this announcement. She realizes that her love for the man is so great that she cannot bear to see him day after day and watch her sister's happiness with him, and determines to enlist in the regular army as a field nurse.

The neighbor misses the elder sister in a vague sort of way, but his affections are still possessed by the beauty of the younger girl. At this time President Lincoln sends out a call for volunteers, and much against the younger girl's wishes, the neighbor goes to the front as a captain of volunteer cavalry.

The elder sister is of the volunteers. Therefore, they do not meet and she, imaging him still at home, dreams of the two happy ones at home and is sad.

On the eve of a great battle, the neighbor receives a letter of love written in the child like fashion of the younger girl. During the battle the neighbor is severely wounded by an exploding shell. The first meeting between him and the elder sister occurs when she finds him wounded and unconscious on the field. She has him brought to the hospital where she nurses him back to life in order to save him for her little sister. In his delirium the face of the younger sister begins to fade and the face of the elder to take its place, and as he slowly comes back to health, the realization comes to him that his real love is for the elder sister. After the crisis his illness has passed, the doctor discovers that the young man will be totally blind as a result of the accident.

The elder sister is detailed to take him home. With the assistance of an orderly, she takes him back to his own apartment and sends for the younger sister. When she discovers that he is blind, the younger sister visualizes what her future life as the wife of a blind man will be and her shallow nature revolts at the thought. She gives him back the ring and without any pangs of regret, returns to the frivolities of her life.

The elder sister is torn between hope for herself and pity for the man. She goes to him, and he, realizing at last the barrier is down, tells her of his real feelings and slowly folds her in his arms, both at last happy in each other's love.

WITHOUT REWARD (June 16).—Aravaipa Steve, who has offended the laws of society, has been in hiding and is hungry and thirsty. He must act with caution if he wants to get away, for he knows he is wanted badly.

In the ranch house where Freeman lives with his daughter Jess and her little sister, Morna, there is sadness, for the child is sick with fever. Jess watches her and soothes her, for Freeman is bringing Dr. Turner from a distant town. The doctor and Freeman come at last. Freeman is sent to a nearby town for ice to keep on the little fevered head, and the doctor leaves a bottle of medicine with strict orders that it be taken every hour and goes.

Steve comes up stealthily, gun behind his back. He will not kill unless obliged. Jess answers his knock and brings him water. She notes his weariness and takes him and gives him food. Steve sees the sick child. He is tender and kind to her.

Jess drops the medicine bottle, and the life fluid stains the floor. She is distracted and asks the stranger to ride and get another bottle. He is startles and hesitates. It means death to him.

The girl is hurt at his hesitancy and reproaches him. He smiles and takes the address, gives her a torn piece of paper and is gone.

Jess reads the note and knows that the man is Aravaipa Steve.

Freeman returns with the ice, and together father and daughter fight the dread disease. Steve is recognized by a man who would win the reward. He will not stop, as commanded, and is hit in the arm. He stifles the pain with a curse and speeds ahead to the doctor's door. He runs inside and his pursuer summons the cowboys and the sheriff.

Steve refuses the doctor's assistance for himself and hastens the prescriptions. He gets the blessed medicine and goes to the door. Too late! the boys await him and demand admittance. He is caught like a rat in a trap. He dashes to the window and beats it down with a chair as the door gives way and the cowboys surge in. He takes a breath, mounts and calls upon his weary, willing horse for a final effort. The pursuers crowd him and wing him again.

Within the small ranch house the watchers await his coming. He bursts in, hands over the medicine and staggers to the door to meet his pursuers. Jess prevents violence by telling them what he has done, and Steve, kissing her hand, pulls himself together and walks crookedly to the sheriff, who places his arm around him and leads him away.

APACHE LOVE (June 18).—Hawkeye, a young Apache brave, happens one day on a beautiful Hopi maiden busy working in the field. He immediately pays court to the lovely Mona. Mona's heart is elsewhere, however, and she scorns his love. Ortega, who is the favored one of Mona, asks her hand of Kulsa, the Hopi chief, and wins his consent, but Hawkeye refuses to be repulsed. He determines to win the Hopi maid. He watches, and when he finds her alone by the creek, attempts to make violent love to her.

Mona's scream brings Ortega to her assistance, and the two men engage in a hand-to-hand fight. Ortega finally trips Hawkeye into the creek, and picking up a stone, threatens Hawkeye, who drags himself from the water, and mounting his horse, rides away, threatening the young pair with vengeance.

Mona's wedding day dawns brightly and the preparations for the Hopi wedding are made, but Hawkeye, with a band of his braves, attacks the wedding procession from two sides, and during the struggle between the Hopis and Apaches, Hawkeye grabs Mona, and, throwing her across his horse, dashes away. Ortega, with blood streaming from a jagged cut in his face, staggers after them. Hawkeye takes the Indian maid to his wickup, and, finding her unwilling to become his squaw, binds her with rawhide thongs. He then leaves her and goes to the river for water. Ortega, who has followed, quickly frees Mona and taking Hawkeye's gun, escapes swiftly.

Hawkeye returns and finds them gone. He shows pleasure, however, when he realizes that Ortega has taken the gun, but has no ammunition. He follows the fugitives and Ortega and Mona, in fear, hide in the foliage of an overhanging tree. Hawkeye follows and a battle between the Hopi and the Apache takes place in the branches of the tree. Mona comes to Ortega's assistance, and together they throw Hawkeye into the canyon below.

ALADDIN'S AWAKENING (June 20).—Eddie is very tired, so the boss gives him a two-day's vacation. He goes to the beach, lies down and sleeps. He sees a bracelet by the water and turns it around as he fits it on his arm. Behold, a beautiful girl appears, and telling him he has found the magic bracelet, asks him his wants. He mentions money, and his hands are full of it and so are his pockets. He desires company, and five beautiful girls appear and he forthwith treats them to the best the swell restaurant can give them. They take a ride in a gondola and have a good time generally.

When they return to the beach, Neptune appears, waving his trident. The girls disappear. Eddie appeals to Neptune and the girls reappear as Nymphs. They lead him a merry chase, and Neptune pursues him and jabs him with his trident, and—Eddie wakes up to find a guard prodding him and telling him to move on.

Back in the office Eddie is dreamy. He sees those girls again. The boss interferes with his vision, and Eddie has to compose his brain and turn from girls' figures to those used in the computation of amounts.

THE JEALOUSY OF JANE (June 18).—Jane's health is run down and her husband sends her and their baby boy to Atlantic City to recuperate for a few weeks, while he remains in town. The servants are dismissed and an inquiring next door neighbor, Mrs. Lane, is told of Jane's little trip, and that Jane's husband is to stay behind.

The husband soon finds that it is trying to take care of things, and to get his own breakfast is too much for him, so he sallies forth to an employment agency and hires a cook, a lady of color and weight, who dresses rather well for her position in life. Mrs. Lane, who sees the husband escorting a veiled lady into the house, jumps at a scandalous conclusion, and she sends an anonymous telegram to Jane to the effect that during her absence her husband is entertaining a woman in her own house. Jane's nerves have been tried by a number of flirtatious men on the board walk, and she is ready to think the worst of the masculine sex in general. She takes the first train home, arriving at mid-night, and the complications that follow upon her arrival, cause a near riot in the neighborhood. A hurried call for the police reserves is sent to the police station, where matters are fairly well straightened up. Jane then remembers that baby has been left all this time in the taxicab, and a mad rush is made to the rescue. Baby, however, has found an interesting thing in the way of a plaything in the taximeter, and has been perfectly but expensively happy all through the night. The husband, however, pays the bill.

THE SORROWS OF ISRAEL (3 parts—June 19).—The story deals with the betrothal of a Russian noblewoman and a prince of the blood. The girl's father dies and the prince comes to claim the bride, only to find that the young woman, now her own mistress, has a mind and will of her own, also a sweetheart. The latter is a young Jew, a student at a military college.

The discarded prince vows bitter revenge against his rival and sets about obtaining it by inciting the peasants to an anti-semitic uprising. In the meantime the Jew, realizing the obloquy which his marriage will entail on his noble sweetheart, determines to change the externals of his religion, this too will enable him to obtain his degrees at college which otherwise would be denied under the beneficent laws of Russia.

The Feast of the Passover is being celebrated and his parents are expecting his presence at the feast when word comes to them that their son has been seen in a Christian procession. The heart-broken parents hurry to the church just as the ceremony of baptism has been completed. They meet their boy on the steps of the church and make an appeal to him not to forsake the faith of his fathers, but the Greek priests stand there as grim sentinels over his body and soul, and knowing what his recantation will mean for him and his beloved one he turns a deaf ear to the pleadings of his aged parents.

In the meantime the Prince has aroused the peasants to action and the fury of religious persecution is in full swing. Jewish men, women and children are clubbed to death, and on all sides are to be seen the horrible evidence of brutal bigoted Russian barbarity.

The young man has by this time married the woman for whom he has made such a noble sacrifice, and she appreciative of what he has done, pours out her treasures to him that his people may find succor and safety. But alas! nothing can stem that fearful tide of human wantonness and slaughter.

The young (Christian) Jew now decides to throw his lot in with the Nihilists. He goes through the preliminaries of initiation and is congratulating himself on his admission when suddenly he is arrested in a raid of the Nihilists' den. He is tried and condemned to die, but, just as he is about to be executed on the scaffold, he is handed a condition pardon—betray his Nihilist brothers and he will go free, but he spurns the offer and flings the paper in the face of the judge. A loud laugh greets his act. It was only a Nihilist test.

Later on these same Nihilists affect his rescue from jail when the meshes of the net thrown by the prince has landed him. The flight of the young Jew and his bride is covered and made effective by the brave Nihilist brothers who check the pursuit of the prince and his hirelings in a royal battle. Finally we behold the young couple on board ship sailing into New York harbor where they behold with joy the Statue of Liberty.

FRONTIER.

A STORY OF THE MEXICAN BORDER (June 19).—Marguerita, the beautiful daughter of Don Carlos, is beloved by Don Guillermo and Don Pablo. Jealousies exist between the two. Don Carlos is expecting Luis Brandon, an American, to arrive at the hacienda to take charge of his cattle interest, and is telling the rival suitors of this when the American arrives. Pablo is in possession of some secret of Don Carlos, and he uses this to force from the decrepid old Don permission to marry Marguerita. The American sees Marguerita and love comes to them unheralded. This complicates the situation badly, especially as they are observed and their feelings noted by Pablo. Pablo feels that this is doing him a grievous wrong, as Marguerita has been promised to him by her father, and he takes violent exception. Before he can strike Luis, however, Don Guillermo interferes and the American is forced to await an encounter at a later date. Pablo and Guillermo leave.

Don Carlos is explaining matters in relation to the hacienda when Padre Flores arrives. The interruption gives Luis a chance to slip away with Marguerita and they plight their troth in a pretty garden. As they are exchanging lover-like confidences, Don Pablo observes them and his anger rises more and more. He rushes in upon them and he and Luis rapidly come to blows. Pablo attempts to stab Luis, but is knocked down, and Marguerita stops the American from pressing his advantage further.

Luis and Pablo meet on a road near the hacienda and have a violent quarrel. As they are quarreling Don Guillermo comes along the same road. He stops some distance away and watches them. Then he sees a chance to effectively dispose of both his rivals at once. As they fire he also fires, killing Don Pablo. Luis thinks that he has killed Pablo and flees the place. Guillermo informs the rurals that Brandon has killed Pablo and a search is instituted for him. Brandon has found a friend in Padre Flores who takes him in and hides him from possible searchers in the guise of a lay-brother.

Guillermo has informed Don Carlos that his foreman is a murderer and using his knowledge of Don Carlos' failing as a lover, has forced his constant to a marriage with Marguerita. The daughter spurns Guillermo, at first, but when she learns that Guillermo can send her father to prison, she gives herself to Guillermo to save him.

As Luis is working in the gardens Padre Flores the good father is summoned to arrange the marriage articles between Marguerita and Guillermo. He tells Luis of this and the American is distraught with grief. Padre Flores leaves to arrange the articles as he feels he must and while he is absent Guillermo comes for a confessional. He mistakes Luis for a priest, an error which is furthered by the lay-brother, and makes his confession to him. In this he admits the killing of Pablo. Luis uses this confession to secure aid from the rurals and Guillermo is arrested just as he is about to become the husband of Marguerita. Luis, of course, is cleared and is married to Marguerita.

ECLAIR.

HEARTS AND CROSSES (May 25).—Webb Yeager was what the boys called "some" cow-puncher. He was McAllister's favorite foreman and the boys liked him as well as did the ranch owner. McAllister liked the way Webb gave orders and he also liked the way the boys obeyed his foreman.

There was another admirer of Webb on the ranch and this McAllister did not like. When he learned that his daughter, Santa, was receiving attentions from Webb, he promptly told the foreman that he could either agree to stay away from the house, at least five miles out on the ranch, or quit the job.

Following this, Webb and Santa arranged a code of signals by which the foreman could come to the house in McAllister's absence. Whenever Webb saw a heart with a cross inside, marked on anything from the ranch, he knew it to be a signal to meet Santa.

One day Santa's father died suddenly and soon after Webb and Santa were married. But the new Mrs. Yeager had been in charge of the McAllister household so long that she couldn't get over being "boss." One day Webb ordered some cattle sold and Santa countermanded the order. Webb packed up and left.

Months passed by until one day Webb, who was working as foreman on a neighboring ranch, sent to Santa to buy some steers. Before sending them, she marked a heart and cross on several.

When the aggressive hubby saw that sign he thought it meant that Santa had given in and had decided to let him be boss. Webb galloped to the old home just as fast as his broncho would carry him.

Leaping from his horse he ran up to Santa, who was in front of the house and asked if she was ready to admit that he was "boss." He received a real shock when Santa shook her head, "No."

But then the little beauty took hold of the mystified Webb's arm and pulled him into the house. Here he found the new "boss" of the ranch. Can you guess who the new boss was?

HE RUINS HIS FAMILY'S REPUTATION (June 1.)—And now our funny little friend, Snookums, has started real trouble for his poor Dada. A few of the neighbors and Dada were having a nice quiet little game when the door-bell rang and when Snookums' beautiful mother went to the door, she found the minister.

Well, the "gang" made a hurried attempt to hide things, and the chips, cards, etc., were stuffed under the couch, before the Reverend Sir was admitted. Dada and his friends then tried to keep the minister's attention concentrated on other things, and planned to get rid of him before he suspected anything. But poor little Snookums was rather inquisitive about this hurried hiding of those nice little chips and so he secured the minister's hat and proceeded to dig out the chips from under the couch and fill the hat with them.

When the minister finally decided to go, to the great relief of everyone, the big scandal came out. When he lifted his high hat to place it on his head, there was a shower of little white, blue and red "chips" that told their own story.

THUS SAITH THE LORD (2 parts—May 21).—The theme of this remarkable picture was taken from the Sermon on the Mount as found in the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew. The parable of the Ten Virgins as told to the disciples by Our Lord forms the main story, while the allegorical interpretation of The Lord's Prayer forms a masterful closing.

While Jesus and the twelve disciples were journeying from Jerusalem they became fatigued and seated themselves by the road side. In answer to the request of Andrew to tell them of His Kingdom, The Master related the parable of the Ten Virgins.

These ten maidens were invited to a wedding feast. Five of them were wise, and took with them oil for their lamps so that they might light the bridegroom on his way. Five of them were foolish and did not want to be disturbed and bothered in their play by having the oil for their lamps, so therefore, took none with them. The five wise virgins waited patiently for the coming of the bridegroom, but the foolish ones indulged in childish and silly pleasures. When, at midnight, the bridegroom came, the five wise ones trimmed their lamps and went out to meet him.

Then the foolish virgins realized that they had no oil for their lamps and endeavored to borrow some from the other maidens. These would not loan it to them, and told them to go to those who sold and buy for themselves. While the foolish ones were gone for their oil the bridegroom came and the five wise virgins went in with him to the wedding feast and the door was closed. When the others came out and asked to be let in the bridegroom sent back word that he knew them not.

After this parable was finished Andrew asked The Master what must be done to win The Kingdom of Heaven. The Redeemer answered that we must have faith and pray. Then he related The Lord's Prayer, which is shown in the film by a series of beautiful tableaux as follows:

Our Father Which Art In Heaven.

On the Highway of Life the Human Family is on the march towards the Goal of Eternal Life and The Kingdom of Heaven. When burdens weigh heavily on their shoulders and they are almost overcome by their struggles they clasp their hands in prayer and with eyes raised to The Almighty, they gain comfort and strength from The Father.

Hallowed Be Thy Name.

"Go ye into all lands and preach My Gospel," was the command of the Saviour to the Twelve Disciples. No matter how hard or difficult was the road that they had to travel, no matter what tortures and martyrdom they endured the Faithful obeyed the commands of The Master and taught the teachings of Jesus Christ to all peoples.

Thy Kingdom Come.

The tortures and the persecutions of Rome could not deter the early Christians from their teaching of The Word. Dying in the arena, burning at the stake or being crucified by their enemies, they bore their sufferings patiently, and never for a moment forgot the example of The Lord, who said on The Cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Thy Will Be Done On Earth As It Is In Heaven.

What more supreme sorrow could a mother have than to see her first born taken from her by the hand of Death? Still, she murmurs, "Thy Will be done."

Give Us This Day Our Daily Bread.

How much lighter is our toil and our labors when we know that Our Father is watching over his people all the time. The hard working tiller of the fields raises his hands to Heaven in thanksgiving at his great bounties and whispers, "I thank Thee."

And Forgive Us Our Trespasses, As We Forgive Those Who Trespass Against Us.

When the poor rebel at their hard lot and demand their rights from the rich, the oppressors can turn the hatred of the downtrodden into great love and devotion, if they will but remember "The greatest grace of God is Charity."

Lead Us Not Into Temptation.

An absorbing story leads up to the great struggle, which lasted three days—July 1-2-3—and in which the loss of life was appalling. Gen. Lee hurled himself upon the north, and the Union forces were hurriedly marshaled and met him at Gettysburg. The Union army numbered more than 77,000, and the Confederate forces 59,000. The charge of Gen. Pickett, with 4,900 men, following a fierce cannonading, into the center of the Union army, is the most sensational, heroic and thrilling incident in the war history of the world.

THE FAITH HEALER (2 parts—May 28).—Robert and Louise are married. On their honeymoon Louise learns, upon finding a Bible in their room that Robert "does not believe." But this does not lessen her love for him. A couple of years after their marriage, they are reduced to poverty, and Robert is obliged to go as a laborer in order to support his wife and child.

Helmar, a man who does not care and a friend of Robert and Louise, treats his wife so meanly that she decides to leave him and is writing a letter to a friend when she is caught by her husband who has returned unexpectedly when he reads the letter and learns that his wife will shoot herself if the friend does not come to take her away, he offers her a pistol with which to carry out her threat. But her nerve fails her and the pistol drops to the table. Saying that his life is worth less than his wife's, Helmar leaves the house intent upon suicide. He is about to jump into the river when he decides upon a better way to drop out of life of his wife. Leaving his coat and hat on the bank, he enlists in the army. Believing that her husband is dead, the wife welcomes the attentions of the friend and one day, when she is riding in an automobile with the friend, the husband, who is walking along the road with another soldier sees her and exclaims that he wished he were blind so that he may never see her again. Several weeks later in a battle, his wish is gratified, for a shell bursts over his head and blinds him. This terrible visitation of the wrath of God makes of Helmar a new man, and he opens a mission for the curing of the sick and the weak. To this mission comes Louise, who was on her way to the drug store for a bottle of medicine for her sick daughter, Clara. She stands unobserved for a moment until the gathering begins to disperse. She approaches and, when the faith healer turns towards her, she recognizes in Helmar, an old friend. She makes herself known and leads him home to where her sick child lies. Helmar prays fervently and soon the little one begins to regain her strength.

One day Robert and Louise are informed that one of Robert's former business competitors died and has left his entire fortune to him, he admitting in his will to having been instrumental in the downfall of Robert's business. Helmar goes to live with Robert and Louise, and he soon regains his sight, whereupon he sets out to find his wife. He does find her, repentant and unhappy and a reconciliation is soon effected.

THE SOUL OF A THIEF (2 parts—June 16).—Millionaire Benton, who has a mania for rare jewels, purchases of Abraham, an old "fence," a valuable necklace. He is followed to his home by a gentleman crook known as "The Fox." When Benton arrives home he finds his daughter spooning with Bob Newell, whom he dismisses from the premises. Arriving home, Bob calls up Louise Benton and plans an elopement to take place that night. At the Benton home, Mr. Benton is showing the precious jewel to his daughter, and her girl friend, Rose Hartley. At 10 o'clock that night, as "The Fox" is stealthily creeping to the library window of the Benton home, he hears footsteps and stops. It is Bob. He calls Louise who says, "Get a taxi, dear." Bob goes for one, and, after a few minutes have passed, "The Fox" whistles softly and Louise, thinking that it is her sweetheart, throws her jewel case, etc., to him and whispers that she will soon follow. "The Fox" tucks away the jewels, and begins puffing a cigarette just as Bob Newel returns. He picks up the empty jewel case, just as the police come and nab him; for prior to the arrival of Bob, Rose, who is a sleep-walker dreamed of the precious necklace and went to the library where Benton had placed it and extracts it from its hiding place. The noise wakes Benton who, finding the necklace missing, had telephoned for the police. The police could find no one but Bob, so he was placed under arrest.

"The Fox," not being satisfied with Louise's jewels, is intent upon getting the precious necklace and goes disguised as a French Count with forged letters of introduction to the Benton household. Despite himself he falls in love with Louise, who repulses him. One night Rose again walks in her sleep, and taking the necklace from her suitcase, places it in the secret hiding place in the library. When she has disappeared, "The Fox," who has been in hiding, extracts the jewel and goes to his room. Benton goes to Abraham's dive in order to find something out concerning his lost jewel. He is followed by "The Fox," in the guise of a count, who accused Benton of connivance with the Jew. He compromises with Benton when he (Benton) promises to aid him in the suit for Louise's hand. At home, after secretly listening to the heated argument between father and daughter, remorse seizes "The Fox," and he tells Louise that he is going away on the morrow. That night, Rose, in another sleep walking "stunt" goes directly to the room of "The Fox," where she knocks over a lamp, the noise of which wakes Benton who follows her, revolver in hand. "The Fox," who has been peacefully strolling up and down the veranda, rushes to his room on hearing the noise only to confront Benton, Louise and Rose. In an instant he has escaped and ten minutes later he telephones the police to release Bob. Thus ends the Benton jewel mystery.

THE UNWRITTEN LAW OF THE WEST (June 19).—Pedro beat his wife, Anita, unmercifully and swaggered down to the saloon, leaving her crying and her blind old father wringing his hands in agony. Pedro played poker at the saloon and young Bob Radcliff joined him and the others in the game. Bob lost, caught Pedro in some trickery and threatened to shoot him. Meanwhile, Anita slipped down to the saloon and hid in its shadows. Pedro left the saloon and Anita stabbed him and fled. A moment later Bob ventured out the door and stumbled across Pedro's body. The sheriff grabbed him, he was brought to trial, and, despite the pleadings of his sweetheart, Helen, was ordered banished from the town.

Secret meetings between the two came often after that, for Bob built himself a little shack on the edge of the town. Helen, one day, decided to call and console Anita. Anita, suffering tortures through her conscience, rose from the table, hurled herself on the floor crying out her secret, while her blind father stood over her and cursed her. Helen heard through the open door and rushed off to tell the happy news to Bob. Together they came into town and arrived at the sheriff's office just after Anita, torn by her suffering, had confessed her guilt to the sheriff. And then Bob forgave Anita and the town heaved a sigh for relief, for the judge refused to prosecute the hapless woman after a jury had returned a verdict of justifiable homicide.

MARINE LAW (June 21).—Mayor Grigsley, anxious to go to Congress, called upon the political boss and solicited his aid. The boss shook his head and smiled. "Nothing doing." Later, pretty Marguerite, daughter of the mayor, might have been seen spooning with Jimmy in the grape arbor, for she and Jimmy were sweethearts.

The following day the mayor and his daughter headed down State street. They met the "boss" and the "boss" fell madly in love with Marguerite. Result—a compact was made in which the mayor should persuade his daughter to marry the "boss" and in return the "boss" should send the mayor to Congress. After the interview the mayor called his daughter and told her his will. That afternoon Jimmy was told the doleful news by Marguerite and the pair planned an elopement. This would have gone well had not the mayor chanced to overhear. He informed the "boss" and together they got into the mayor's automobile and called upon every garage, livery, motorcycle and bicycle establishment in town, threatening to revoke their licenses if they gave the couple any assistance.

Jimmy and Marguerite went the rounds getting more nettled and amazed with every stop and refusal. They grew desperate. They went to the steamship wharf, but the policeman warded them off, the same thing occurred at the railway station, where the station policeman drove them off the rear end of a Pullman. In desperation, they went to the marriage license office, but were refused a license. Then they walked to the beach where luck favored them for once—for Jimmy met Captain Brush, an old friend. The captain drew his code book and showed them a passage from the United States Marine Laws where a sea captain, after the boat is three miles from land, can perform the ceremony. So they hired a tug, reached the captain's big vessel and were married without further ado, while, in the mayor's library, the two men smoked innumerable cigars and congratulated themselves on how nicely they had outwitted the eloping pair.

THANHOUSER.

MISS MISCHIEF (June 8).—Who was it turned the mouse loose in the dormitory? Who put mucilage on Miss Galgreen's false teeth? Who flirted with the French dancing teacher? Who put snuff in the school books? The answer was, "Miss Mischief." The girl remained at the seminary exactly one month. The principal finally expelled her.

Farm life is usually very monotonous and the section where "Miss Mischief's" parents lived was no exception to the rule. But the girl soon made the little rural community as lively as Main Street on Saturday night. Her father always had to hunt for his spectacles, tacks seemed to find their way into his cowhide boots, the dog frequently raced wildly about the yard with a tin can tied to his tail, and the minister passed the doorway with a hostile glare. The boys all liked her and neglected work so frequently that their irate fathers had to threaten them with horsewhips to induce them to work. The girls, robbed of sweethearts, prayed for some awful fate to befall the siren.

Two young men, to whom the girl showed the most favor, had decided to fight a duel, but the girl laughed them out of the idea, and persuaded them to settled the affair by a battle between their pet roosters. The affair was shrouded with mystery and even Miss Mischief's mother did not know about it. But when various masculine and feminine figures came hurling down the grain chute and landed on the ground with resounding thumps, she made inquiries. They excitedly told her that the constable was after them and limped and hobbled away as fast as they could.

When it became known that the constable had been no where around and that it was another of "Miss Mischief's" pranks, the rage of her dupes was great. So the girl was bundled off to another school whose principal had a reputation as a great disciplinarian, and the little community once more enjoyed peace.

WHILE BABY SLEPT (June 10).—The young farmer's wife had one trial, her husband's father. He was old and peevish, and so racked and crippled by illness that he could not walk a step. The woman declared that something must be done and on numerous occasions pleaded with her husband to send the old man to the poor house. The farmer long resisted, but at last he yielded and the woman droveaway triumphantly, to make her arrangements at the alms house.

The old man knew what was contemplated. Helpless and friendless he sat in his chair, and prayed for death. Who could blame him?

The wife, as has been stated, was on her way to the alms house. The old man's son was at work in the field, and the invalid was alone in the house, except for his tiny grandchild, who was slumbering peacefully in the adjoining room. The outer door was open, and through it crept a venomous snake. It paid no attention to the old man, but squirmed and wriggled its way to the inner room where the baby was slumbering.

The invalid loved the child, but he was powerless to aid him. He was a quick witted man, however, and discovered a way to send out the alarm. The farmer's pet dog came into the house, and the invalid, writing a note, attached it to the dog's collar, then sent him out to find his master. The warning reached the farmer in time, and he saved his baby son, just as the wife arived with an attendant from the alms house detailed to remove the old man there. When the woman found out what had happened during her absence she was conscience stricken, and tenderly embracing the old man, told him that his home would always be with them, adding, "John and I can never forget that to you alone we owe the life of our little son."

And the old man no longer prayed for death, because happiness had entered his life, which had long been one of sickness and sorrow.

HIS SACRIFICE (June 13).—The young physician ranked high in the medical profession. He was wealthy and undoubtedly would have been a very happy man if it had not been for his jealous wife, who constantly interfered in his professional affairs. Finally she made a scene in the presence of a patient, and the doctor, losing his temper, angrily declared that he wished he was rid of her forever.

The doctor's cousin, who secretly hated him, called soon after the wife had again quarreled violently with her husband and was in the room when the woman swallowed poison and died. When the doctor, summoned by the cousin, hurried into the room, he was told by his kinsman that with her last breath his wife had accused him of poisoning her. A patient, who, in fact, was the one who had heard the doctor threaten his wife, had followed the men into the room. Remembering his words she turned on him and accused him of the crime, then rushed from the house to summon a policeman. The cousin persuaded the physician that it was hopeless to prove his innocence, so the doctor signed away his fortune to his unscrupulous relative and fled.

The fugitive obtained work on a farm and was very happy there, until a detective, who chanced to be in the neighborhood, was invited to spend the night at the farm house. The officer showed the farmer a circular offering a reward for the capture of the doctor, and also exhibited it to the farm hand, not knowing that he was the man of whom he was in search.

That evening the farmer's little daughter was taken ill, and the frantic father drove off for the nearest doctor, many miles away. The fugitive went into the little bed room and saw that the only thing to save the child's life was an immediate operation. He did not hesitate, and the child's life was saved. But the detective, his suspicions awakened by the rare surgical skill displayed, recognized his quary and made him a prisoner.

The doctor was brought back to the city and there he was informed that his cousin had confessed and his innocence was established. So he returned to the country, and the clutch of the little arms and a kiss from the baby lips were ample payment for the sacrifice he had so gladly made.

MAJESTIC.

MIMOSA'S SWEETHEART (June 8).—Fred Chase, who is a devil among the ladies, finds that he cannot flirt with Mimosa, a pretty little Jap girl. He hires some men to attack her and by a series of apparently desperate rescues wins her regard, to the great distress of Uchida and Senicha, his Japanese rivals, who forget their own rivalry and unite to do up one of the hated race. They practice Jiu Jitsu on him and are doing him up, when Mimosa comes to his relief and then, womanlike, thinks that Fred is the real hero. She lets him put a ring on her finger and he wins the long desired kiss.

THE MESSAGE OF THE FLOWERS (June 10).—The lodge keeper's daughter was romantic. She liked to lie in the hammock under the trees, and read novels wherein lords and ladies played a prominent part. She often dreamed of the time when her "Prince" would come to her. Although she knew that the gardener cared for her, she sometimes regarded him disdainfully, for he was not at all romantic, but just a plain everyday young man, who worked very hard for his living. Everyday he brought her a bouquet of beautiful roses, which she accepted gratefully, for they were her favorite flower.

A young man came to the estate with a letter from its absent owner, directing the lodge keeper to show him around the grounds. Her father was absent, and the girl, impressed by the stranger's handsome face and aristocratic bearing, volunteered to be his guide. The young man was very pleasant, and when he left thanked her and said he would come again. He did so, and the girl was delighted. Although he had merely been pleasant to her, the girl told herself that he must surely be her "Prince," and would soon ask her to marry him. Her romantic fancy caused her to treat the gardener cruelly, and he did not bring any more bouquets, for he knew that she did not want them.

One day the awakening came. The rich man entered the garden with a pretty young woman, and told the lodge keeper that she was his fiancee. The lodge keeper's daughter, unseen, heard, and rushed into her home sobbing. In a moment of remorse she thought of the gardener, and realized how cruelly she had treated him. The sudden shock had been too much for her, and she became seriously ill.

She was hovering between life and death when her mother bore into her bed room an immense bunch of magnificent roses. She buried her face in the bouquet and sniffed the fragrant perfume, and then she cried, with gladness rather than sorrow, for they were the flowers of love, the token that the young gardener still cared for her.

The young man entered the sick room hesitatingly. The girl propped up in bed, held out her arms pleadingly and he ran forward with a glad cry. The roses, unheeded, lay strewn on the bed. The girl had received the message of the flowers.

RELIANCE.

HIS UNCLE'S HEIR (June 9).—Old Torrey, millionaire, traveling in the South for his health, meets a poor girl of good family. He is sorry for her evident poverty and the fact that her old home is about to be taken away, causes him to offer her money which she refuses. Then he asks her to marry him that he may provide for her. Urged by her invalid father—she accepts Torrey.

Young Jack Matheus, supposed heir, is notified of this marriage and angered because a supposed adventuress has ensnared his uncle, he refuses to meet her and goes away. The society girl whom he has been engaged to, gives him up when she learns he is no longer his uncle's heir and old Torrey, angered at Jack's attitude toward Elise—makes a new will leaving all to his wife and nothing to the boy. Torrey dies—the new will cannot be found and so the old one, making Jack heir is legal. The boy away on a hunting trip does not know this. Elise leaves her husband's house, refusing even to accept the third that is allowed her by law. She goes back to her father. Jack is hurt while hunting near her home—and is carried to her house. He spends a few weeks there falling in love with the girl. Neither knows the other's identity. Both get letters from the lawyer —saying that the new will has been found. He arrives, he introduces the two young people who, forgetting all about the money—turn to each other with a joyous "You," and pay no attention to the lawyer who, seeing he is not needed, slips away.

ANNIE LAURIE (June 16).—The girl's father wants her to marry her rich suitor, but she loves the poor one. One evening, both young men are calling on the girl. Her father is all attention to the rich fellow. The girl puts a record into the phonograph and she and her sweetheart sit back in the shadows as "Annie Laurie" is played. The father's face softens—he sees himself a young man courting his sweetheart back in the early sixties. The Civil War breaks: he goes off in a Union uniform, carrying a knot of ribbon from the girl—and the last thing he remembers is her voice singing the old familiar "Annie Laurie."

He is wounded and taken to the house of a Southern girl who cares for him and sends for the Northern girl and her father. When they arrive he does not know them, until the girl, inspired by a sudden thought, kneels at his bedside and sings "Annie Laurie" to him. Then he remembers and they are soon in close embrace. At this point in his dream—the old man awakens. The phonograph is still playing '"Annie Laurie"—the young lovers, in their dim corner, are oblivious to all but themselves. Remembering the days of his own romance, the father suggests to the rich suitor that they leave the young pair alone.

HALF A CHANCE (3 parts—June 14).—"Frisco Pet," an ex-prize fighter, is accused of the murder of a woman of the underworld because he is found in her room in a drunken condition, alone with her body. In reality Lord Ronsdale, a degenerate nobleman, had come to break with this woman, who, in an attempt to blackmail him, took out a revolver which accidently went off.

"Frisco Pet' is sent to the colonies in a convict ship on which Lord Ronsdale also embarks with Lord and Lady Wray and their six year old niece, Jocelyn. This child becomes interested in the convict and sorry for his plight gives him a gold locket.

A storm comes up and in the hurry to the life boats, "Frisco Pet" and the child are forgotten. He jumps overboard with her and swims to one of the boats. As he is about to grab it himself, Ronsdale recognizes him and pushes him back into the water. "Frisco" gets ashore and on a desert island builds a hut to live in. He later gets to find a box of law books, washed ashore from the wreck and with these as his only companion—the man alone in the wilderness—regenerates.

Years later he returns to London and becomes famous as a criminal lawyer. He again meets Jocelyn Wray and falls in love with her. Lord Ronsdale, who is also courting the young heiress, recognizes in the man known as John Steele, "Frisco Pet" escaped convict. He arranges for his capture and at a party at the Wray's points him out. But Steele with the girl's help escapes. As he leaves he drops the little gold locket on the table and Jocelyn remembers.

In the slums of London, John Steele searches for two men who were in the inn on the night of Amy Gerard's murder. They alone can vindicate him. In the East End he finds them. He asks one of them for a written vindication and is refused. Then he fights a terrific battle with his old enemy, and coming out victor, compels the man to write at his dictation.

In Ronsdale's room he meets the police, produces the paper which Ronsdale tries to destroy, and clears his own name of all suspicion. Ronsdale, the coward, who sent a man to prison for life rather than have his name mixed in scandal, is cast off by the Wrays who give their consent to Jocelyn's engagement to John Steele.

KEYSTONE.

THE WAITERS' PICNIC (June 16).—Louis, the chef, and Oscar, the head waiter, are in love with Mabel, the pretty cashier. The Waiters' Picnic is held, and Mabel is the cause of much trouble between Louis and Oscar. Mabel accidentally falls over a high bank and Louis, in attempting to rescue her, falls over too. Oscar and the other picnickers rush to the scene, and by means of a human rope pull Mabel up. Louis is left to his fate, but by superhuman efforts manages to near the top, when Oscar pushes him back again.

That night the headwaiter makes things as unpleasant as possible for the chef, and the latter retaliates by sending out some weird concoctions from his kitchen, causing the patrons to heap maledictions upon Oscar. The methods of the chef in handling the victuals are comically shown, and will cause oceans of laughter.

The chef finally decides to gain a terrible revenge by killing his rival, so he prepares a seemingly appetizing dish, which is liberally sprinkled with poison. It looks so good that the headwaiter presents it to Mabel, who is about to go home, and she wraps a napkin about it and goes out.

Louis waits until the poison shall have taken effect and then enters the dining room to gaze at his dead enemy. He is surprised to see Oscar serenely walking about, and when he learns what has occurred he bolts for the door and rushes madly down the street. Police and pedestrians attempt to stop the supposed mad man, but he bowls over every one in his path and continues on his flight, pursued by a howling mob. He arrives at Mabel's home in time to prevent the family eating the poisoned food, and then falls into the hands of Oscar who administers a well merited beating.

THE TALE OF A BLACK EYE (June 19).—Jones has a jealous wife, and she has good reason to be so, for Jones is an awful flirt. She finally decides to keep tab on him all day and makes him promise to telephone her every five minutes. Jones explains this situation to his boss, who agrees to telephone Mrs. Jones himself, in order that his employe can get his work accomplished.

The boss keeps his word, and at five minute intervals calls up Mrs. Jones and advises her that her husband is still on the job. In the afternoon Jones is sent on an errand and passes a shop in the window of which beautiful models are demonstrating gowns. They look pretty good to Jones, and he saunters in and tries to strike up an acquaintance with them. The bouncer is called who lands a right swing on the hapless flirt, who is then kicked out into the street. It so happened that a moving picture man was filming the front of the store, and the camera caught the entire incident.

In the meantime Jones's boss has been phoning, as agreed, and is just telling Mrs. Jones that her husband was in the office at work when he walks into the house. She demands an explanation and he tells her he saved a child from being run over by an automobile, but was himself struck by the car. That evening they go to a moving picture show and the film in which Jones played a star part is thrown on the screen. He tries to divert his wife's attention from the picture, to no avail, and Jones receives a lesson from his irate spouse.

OUT AND IN (June 19).—A convict makes a thrilling escape from the penitentiary, and after overcoming many obstacles and suffering untold hardships, manages to elude the pursuing guards. Nearly dropping with fatigue he hides in a hay wagon, burying himself under the hay. The wagon goes on its way to its destination and Jones cautiously crawls out to discover, to his amazement and disgust that he is within the walls of the penitentiary, the hay being intended for the horses of that institution.

KAY-BEE.

THE FAILURE OF SUCCESS (2 parts—June 20).—The Rev. Ralph Rivers, a young country parson, is in love with Mabel Deering, a pretty farmer's daughter. His rival is Jabez Crow, a country dandy, of wealth, who is favored by Mrs. Deering, while her husband encourages Mabel in her evident regard for the poor minister. Mrs. Deering schemes to get rid of the minister, and tells him Mabel is engaged to Jabez. Rivers is astounded, but believes her. A month later, he accepts a call to a western pulpit. Mabel marries Jabez.

Jabez is miserly in his habits, his love of money makes him neglect his wife, who is sadly overworked, and regrets her marriage.

Rivers has landed in the gold country and writes a letter to old Deering telling him of the fortunes being made. Jabez finds this letter and leaves his wife at home and goes to Arizona where he starts a general store. A baby is born to Mabel, but her husband is so absorbed in money making that he neglects to write to her, and Mabel sends a letter to Rivers asking him to find out if anything has happened to Jabez.

Rivers calls on Jabez, who is angered. Ralph tries to tell Jabez he owes a duty to his wife, but Jabez orders him away.

Jabez meets Evelyn Ross, a charming widow, and makes love to her. He arouses the jealousy of Lieut. Jones, who learns from the minister of Jabez's marriage and attempts to warn the widow, but she indignantly cuts him off telling him she is aware of Jabez's former marriage.

Jabez gets a divorce and marries the widow. Then Mabel learns of the divorce she is crushed, and her father upbraids his wife for having brought about the marriage of their daughter.

Two years later, Jabez is repenting his new bargain, for Mrs. Crow is an extravagant woman with the spirit to enforce her demands. Ralph Rivers and Mabel have been corresponding, and Mabel comes west to marry him. She is met at the settlement by the minister, and while they are talking the child wanders into Jabez's store. He asks her name, and she tells him Marion Crow. Mabel and Ralph come in looking for the child, and noting the man's agitation try to persuade the child to go to her father, but she indignantly replies that she will not do so. Crow is stricken with remorse.

Crow, now more than a millionaire, has foreclosed a mortgage on the church. His wife, meeting Lieut. Jones, has confessed her unhappy life with Jabez, and the couple have sauntered into the church. Unwittingly the minister has locked them in and turned the key over to Crow, who is furious when he opens the door and finds his wife and the lieutenant. His bitter words anger the lieutenant, who leaps upon him and is only prevented from killing Jabez by the interference of bystanders.

The Indians, in a revenge spirit, attack the miners, who barricade themselves behind huge rocks. The rekskins hid behind a stack of boxes containing dynamite, not knowing the deadly nature of the contents, and when they opened fire on the miners a few well directed shots from the whites exploded the dynamite and hurled the Indians to destruction.

Ralph and Mabel are married. Crow realizes the prize he had lost and is obsessed with regrets and remorse. He finally decides that life is not worth living, and one morning they find his lifeless body, and a will leaving all his earthly possessions to Mabel and their child.

BRONCHO.

FROM THE SHADOWS (2 parts—June 18).—The story opens with a scene of the Great American desert. There has been a drought. A group of Indians are seen gloomily looking at the dead and dying cows.

A scout, foreseeing that they will soon be desperate warns the commander of the fort to be on his guard; but he makes light of it.

The colonel's wife is in delicate health caused by brooding over her child's death. She pleads with him to adopt a baby, and he gently, but firmly, refuses.

Mrs. Bruee sees the happy wife of the sergeant, frolicing with her small children, and she risks the photography is perfect, the acting is superb, and every film is a BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION.

LOUIS REEVES HARRISON said in the Moving Picture World:

"The acting of Miss Vale is one of the most exquisite impersonations I have seen in a long time. She is so consistent, so endearing, so truthful in her adherence to the role that she springs to the front ranks of moving picture actresses at a bound."

JEFFERSON THEATER, Hoboken, N. J., writes:

"We find your films are box office attractions through the connection of Miss Louise Vale, and the splendid scenarios you film."

the colonel's displeasure by calling at the sergeant's house. Her reason is being threatened and she becomes sick.

The Indians decide to attack the settlement to obtain food, and hold a war dance and light fires, with the smoke of which they signal to their brothers who arrive in great numbers. They swoop down upon the cabins of the immigrants, killing the owners and sacking the houses. In one place a woman had placed her child in a crib on the shady side of the house, and it was overlooked.

The scout again gallops swiftly to the fort and upbraids the colonel for his failure to take precautions. The troops hasten to the scene of conflict. A terrible struggle takes place with the maddened redskins, who are driven off after heavy losses in killed and wounded. The baby is found and taken back to the fort, when in a pathetic scene, is the means of helping the colonel's wife back to health.

FOR OLD TIME'S SAKE (June 5).—In a little house at the edge of the village, Mary, the old maid, lived her life alone, looking out upon the passing world with bravely smiling eyes that gave no hint of the sorrow that might lie within her heart. Beyond her house lay the rich estate of Squire King, the wealthiest man in the community. It has long been the desire of Squire and Mrs. King, that their only son, Hal, should contract a wealthy marriage, and when the squire discovered an attachment between his son and Dora, a poor girl of the village, he promptly attempted to stop it. In her hour of sorrow Dora came to Mary, to whom she told her story, and here, later, Hal came, having decided to assert his manhood and marry Dora against his father's wishes. To this Mary did not agree, but decided to sacrifice her own pride to win the squire's consent.

Mary set out to find the squire, and their meeting was fraught with many memories of the past, especially as Mary recalled to his mind their own love affair of many years before, of their brief happiness and their sorrow, as the squire is forced by his father to marry a wealthy bride, while Mary remains true to the memory of the man she once loved, and lives to be an old maid. She pleaded for the happiness of Hal and Dora, but seemed to fail. Later, however, the squire, "For old time's sake," gave his consent and assisted in the marriage of his son and Dora, bringing happiness even to himself as he sat alone in his fine, lovely house, dreaming of those he had made happy.

WHEN A GIRL LOVES (June 12).—Louise, the daughter of a widowed lawyer, is invited to a week-end party given by her friend Betty. She arrives a day ahead of the other guests in order to be of assistance to her friend, and at luncheon that day is introduced to Mr. Wilson, the secretary to Betty's father. After the repast Betty has some shopping to do and asks Mr. Wilson and Louise to accompany her to the store in her automobile. They agree and while Betty is making purchases, Mr. Wilson drives Louise around the city. She is much impressed with the suave and reticent manner of the young secretary, as she has only seen the frivolous side of life.

Paul Mason, a rich, but conceited young man, is among the guests that arrive the next day. He singles out Louise as being the girl of his choice and begins to shower attentions upon her. But they are not welcomed, and one evening she manages to escape from him and runs into the library to Mr. Wilson. Mr. Wilson, who is of humble birth, is greatly surprised to be sought out by such a charming young lady as Louise when there are so many rich men in the house. Mason learns of Louise's action and the next day he invites her to take an automobile ride with him. She reluctantly agrees and when gone a short time he tries to embrace her. She repulses him and after an unpleasant ride they return home.

Betty notices that Louise is sad and upon inquiring learns the whole story. Even though Betty tells her that she was very foolish in rejecting such a rich young man, Louise starts to pack her belongings, while Betty goes to her father to explain things. Mr. Wilson, who is in the next room, hears everything and is made very happy by the incident. After the conference with her father, Betty goes to Louise and tries to make her see things as she does, but her expostulations are of no avail, Louise being fully determined to go. Just before stepping into the carriage she returns to the house on the pretext of having left her handkerchief upstairs, but in reality to say good-bye to Mr. Wilson. It is now or never with Louise and she hands the secretary her instructions to write her.

Louise arrives home safely and after waiting a week for a letter she becomes a little discouraged. But her sorrow is shortlived for one day Wilson himself calls upon her. He shows her a letter offering him a position as secretary to the Ambassador to England. At first Louise is sad when she knows that Wilson, if he accepts the position, would pass out of her life forever, but when he says that he would like her to accompany him if he accepts the position, she bows her head in acquiescence and falls into his outstretched arms.

A PASSING CLOUD (June 6).—Dickie Dear and his Duckie Darling, newly married, are in blissful happiness. It happens that Dickie is an inveterate smoker. This offends the sensitive nerves of Duckie Darling, and one day, when he happens to blow a particularly large cloud of smoke in her direction, she coughs and wakes cross. This leads to hard language. They become distant—distant in manner, inasmuch as they forsake their common bedroom, each going to separate rooms.

Duckie Darling, in going to bed, had left loose some candies. These candies attract mice. They proceed to nibble Duckie Darling's corns. Duckie's screams arouse Dickie Dear, who chases the marauders. They have a fine little chase, which leads to the discovery that they cannot happily be separated.

LUX.

ENGULFED (June 13).—Demitras is a smuggler whom the police have never been able to arrest. Although aged, he still continues his dangerous calling. One day he seeks refuge with Farmer Bell, but the police close on his track, also take up residence in the farmer's house. Bell plans to entice the officers to a distant spot and during their absence for Demitras to escape. But he falls into a quicksand and is only rescued by the arrival of the police. Meanwhile in his haste to escape, the smuggler has fallen and broken his thigh. The police get their quarry, but he dies from the effects of his fall.

SOLAX.

TWO STRANGERS FROM NOWHERE (June 20).—James Warren, a poor artist, becomes desperate because his wife, Editha, is discontented with their poverty stricken existence. During an excited scene he vows he would sell his soul to the devil for success. A gust of wind blows out the light and when he relights the lamp, the devil, in the guise of a stranger, immaculately clad, enters and inquires for a rich neighbor with whom he is to visit. Seeing one of Warren's pictures, he pretends enthusiasm and commissions him to paint a picture. James and Editha are overjoyed.

The next day, the devil arranges a meeting between Editha and the rich neighbor's son, Lawrence. Editha and Lawrence become infatuated with each other at first sight. Lawrence invites Editha to attend a ball at his home, and she is about to refuse, not having suitable clothes and knowing her husband would not care to accompany her, when the devil offers her money, advanced on the picture James is to paint, and tells her she can secure a gown. He also contrives to make the way clear for Editha to accept the invitation by telling her that James must accompany him to the city on that evening to arrange a setting, and consequently would know nothing of her having gone. Urged on by the devil, Editha promises Lawrence to attend.

As she reaches her door, a stranger (Conscience), in the guise of a crippled beggar, asks for food. They enter the house and Editha becomes conscience-stricken, but persuaded by the devil she does not tell James of her intentions. The evening of the ball, James and the devil start for the city, and a few minutes later Lawrence calls for Editha who is clad gorgeously.

The devil, wishing to arouse the husband's jealousy, suggests that he 'phone his wife. Jack 'phones and finding his wife does not answer, believes what the devil has told him of Lawrence and Editha's infatuation, and in a fury starts for home. He arrives at home to find his wife absent. The devil insinuates that she may be found with Lawrence, and Jack believing her faithless goes with the devil to find Editha. They arrive at Lawrence's residence and the devil leads Jack to the conservatory from where they see Lawrence making violent love to Editha. Jack denounces Editha and returns home. The devil is overjoyed at his success. Conscience enters the room and leads Editha back home. She changes her gorgeous costume for clothes in keeping with her position and enters the room in time to see a struggle between Conscience and the Devil in which the Devil is vanquished. Conscience then affects a reconciliation between Editha and James.

MISCELLANEOUS

KINEMACOLOR.

HIS WIFE'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT.—Suppose you had given your wife a handsome hat and opera cloak for her birthday, and came home some evening just in time to see a woman wearing that same hat and cloak going out with another man;—wouldn't you be suspicious?—That is the situation which confronts Jack Williams, but he unwisely gives free rein to his suspicions, and they run away with him. Having followed the supposed "perfidious woman" to the theater, he hires a couple of thugs to "beat up" her escort when she returns home; but it turns out that "the woman in the case" is not his wife, but her maid, who has borrowed the garments for the occasion. Moreover, she is escorted by a husky chauffeur, who is a pal of the "gunmen," so the jealous husband gets the beating instead.

Furthermore, the police, responding to the riot call, arrest the victim of his own revengeful plot, and only the testimony of the maid saves him from a sojourn behind the bars,—so she is forgiven and all ends happily. But the jealous husband learns that "The colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady" look very much alike in the same hat and cloak, and decides not to be so suspicious in the future.

MAN'S BEST FRIEND.—Here are some valuable prize dogs, rightly described as man's best friends; a title, however, that probably the horse would be inclined to dispute with him. The little Yorkshire terrier, whose value is in inverse ratio to his weight. The large St. Bernard perhaps deserves our title of Friend of Man more than any other dog, since he has earned his reputation for philanthropy by his prowess in saving human life in the snows of the Alps; for which purpose it is trained by the Monks of St. Bernard.

A very fine specimen of a prize Collie. This golden coat and white ruff are marks of great beauty. The Yiourouk is a famous sporting dog bred by the peasants of Smyrna, and used in hunting the wild boar. Here are five little toy terriers. Meal time is approaching, and they know that if they are not good they will get no breakfast.

TAMIL TYPES, SOUTHERN INDIA.—The picture opens with a wonderfully clear and picturesque scene, in which native women are washing clothes in a pool. A scene in a village market follows, and in the course of this close, views are given of two attractive native girls. Native women are seen carrying water, and weavers are working at carpet making. A typical native bullock cart is photographed, and portrait groups of high caste native children show the caste marks on their foreheads, the caste mark being V-shaped. A man whose face is next photographed is of an entirely different type from any others in the film.

GAYA, ALLAHABAD AND CAWNPORE, INDIA.—Gaya is a city of 50,000 inhabitants, and contains many interesting and famous temples. The first ones shown in the film were erected in 500 B. C. Close views are given of the Hindu gods, Ganesh and Hanuman, who are represented in a collection of gods at the workshop of a native maker of images.

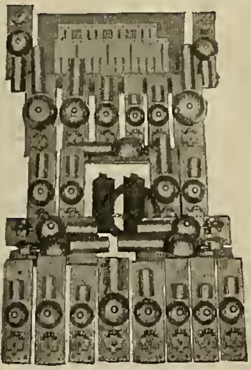
"A Very Important Adjunct to the orchestra—especially the moving picture orchestra—and one which is growing in favor every day, is to be found in the Musical Bells, Chimes, Marimbaphones and instruments of like character," writes Clarence E. Sinn in his interesting article on page 1020 of the issue of June 7th of the Moving Picture World. Read this article, Mr. Exhibitor. It will tell you quite a good deal about our electrical musical novelty instruments.

One of the very best attractions for a moving picture theatre is a set of our well known



Deagan "Class B" Musical Electrical Bells No. 5310.

25 Bells with Resonators—2 octaves chromatic, C to C—complete with playing mechanism, keyboard, wire, batteries, etc., all ready to install.

J. C. DEAGAN
1770 BERTEAU AVENUE CHICAGO, U. S. A.

Market and street scenes in Allahabad are next given. This city is situated on the bank of the Jumna, on the wedge of land between it and the Ganges. The gateway of the city, here shown, is an ornate and handsome structure. A native school in progress is seen, and next is given a picture of the Queen Victoria memorial, in the form of a fountain.

Khusru Bagh is a notable mausoleum at Allahabad. The Roman Catholic Cathedral, is a building somewhat at variance from Indian styles of architecture; but nevertheless very imposing.

At Cawnpore, we are shown an impressive memorial of the mutiny. A beautiful canopy has been placed over the well, in which a great many European women and children were consigned to death. The memorial is preserved with the utmost care and vigilance.

THE CARBON COPY.—Mr. Strong finds the following letter, in his wife's handwriting on a carbon pad upon his desk:

> "Dear Billy:—So glad to hear that you are back; have missed you so. Meet me at Carlo's at 12:30. Am feeling 'blue' and want you to cheer me up. Lovingly, FLO."

Naturally he has strong suspicions—not knowing who "Billy" is. Neither do you, by the way—and the best method of satisfying your curiosity is to see this Kinemacolor comedy the first chance you have.

This Trade Mark The Guarantee of Excellence on Goods Electrical.

A G-E Rectifier Will Increase Your Profits

IN previous advertisements we have explained how the G-E Rectifier makes pictures more brilliant, how it gives these better pictures at less cost for current, and how it can be used to advertise your theatre.

Better pictures will give increased attendance of old patrons. Advertising your theatre will attract new trade, and reduced operating expenses will increase your margin of profit.

Write our nearest office for complete information and prices.

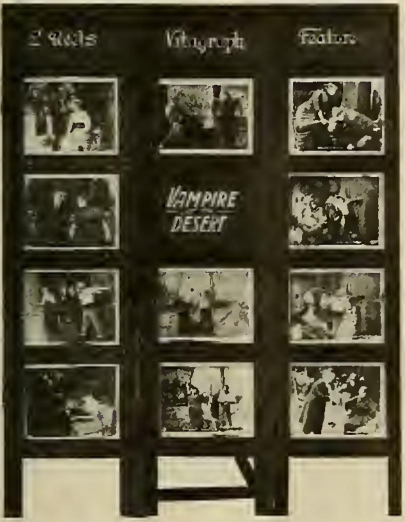
AMERICAN SLIDE & POSTER CO. 549 1st NATIONAL BANK BUILDING, CHICAGO

Have everything to advertise a moving picture and anything you get from them is all right. Licensed posters, slides of every description, photos of the players, one-sheet posters of licensed players—in fact, everything. Orders filled same day as received. Enclose money order or draft with all orders.

Photographs of Features and Frames for Them



ANOTHER detail of the advertising helps we offer exhibitors, and a popular one, too. Striking photographs, 8 x 10 inches in size, of principal scenes from the film, for practically all multiple-reel features. They are great business-getters, because they show actual scenes in the picture.

Set of eleven, with identification cards, $2.00

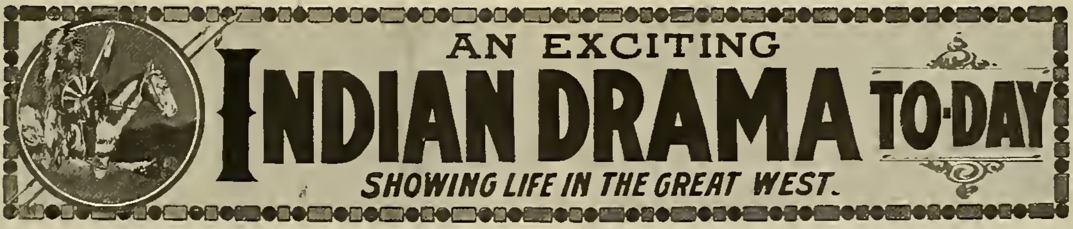
Mission finish oak frame, with fifteen openings and glass front, made to fold in three parts like a Japanese screen, - - - $9.00 each

(SEE ILLUSTRATION)

Special Feature Announcement Slides for Multiple-Reel Features

35 Cents Each

A good lantern slide is one of the best advertisements you could conceive. Our slides look as if they were worth a dollar, but we give you the benefit of big production and put the price at 35c. The audience you have today will come again next week — if your lantern slide on a feature impresses them



This swell banner 3 x 12 feet in size, highly colored, good stuff, for $1.00

Hallberg Says:

Moving picture men are placing big orders for new, latest type machines of all makes to improve projection—cost is no object when results are desired. That is the talk we are getting nowadays from the big men in the business. A few years ago I had to do a lot of advertising and talking to convince moving picture men that it was a good thing to invest $75 to $100 in the Hallberg A. C. Economizer—today the moving picture men who know the game pay several hundred dollars for Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizers and I am busy keeping up with the orders.

You know that your picture is your whole show. I know how to make that picture stand out on your screen clear, bold, brilliant and lifelike. It requires experience to do this. I am at your service. I have hundreds of letters like this proving my claims:

Newburgh, N. Y., May 26, 1913.

Kinemacolor Company of America,
1600 Broadway, New York City.

Gentlemen: Your Kinemacolor service has started, and judging from the many favorable comments on the Panama Canal Pictures, they should make a big bit. The "HALLBERG" A. C. to D. C. Economizer is a wonder. It worked perfectly from the start, and we do not have to use but one-half of the current it produces. The black-and-white pictures which we showed for two days were the talk of the town. Your operators said the pictures in Poughkeepsie and Newburgh were the best they have seen, and we both use the "HALLBERG" machine.

Yours truly,
(Signed) Fred M. Taylor.

They Have Confidence in HALLBERG

I want to help you, Mr. Exhibitor, to improve your picture or to equip your new theatre. My price is no more than that of any other reliable distributor, and I am sure that my experience and advice, which is free to my customers, is worth many dollars and is of more value than confidential, special, would-be discounts, cut prices, etc., used by some of my competitors in pulling unwary exhibitors into their fold.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN RETURNS IN

"A BROTHER'S LOYALTY"

(In Two Parts)

Here's a Red Blooded Drama that Grips the Heart and Holds the Interest at Fever Heat from the First Flash of the Projector to the Last Stirring Scene of the Play

"A BROTHER'S LOYALTY" tells a story of fraternal constancy, devotion, and sacrifice that quivers with human appeal from start to finish. Its powerful portrayal of character and its masterly presentation of scenes from the criminal haunts of a great city play upon the heart strings of human emotions with an eloquence of appeal that rends the very soul. "A BROTHER'S LOYALTY" is a genuine motion picture masterpiece—a thrilling photoplay that throbs with strong sentiment and powerful pathos in every virile and vivid scene.

Some of the Thrilling Scenes that Make "A BROTHER'S LOYALTY" A Powerful Box Office Attraction

The fight in the pool room—the brother's sacrifice—the arrest—the discovery of the counterfeiter's den—the pardon—these are a few of the stirring scenes that unfold an unparalleled story of crime, affection and sublime sacrifice—a story through which runs a strong undercurrent of intense mystery that holds the audience spellbound throughout its entire depiction.

"A BROTHER'S LOYALTY" Sounds the Depths of Human Emotions

Intense interest, admiration, anger, hate, agitation, tenderness, compassion, excitement, pathos, sympathy—one feeling follows another in such rapid panorama that the audience is fairly "swept off its feet" by the steady torrent of climacteric events that crowd every scene of this heart-gripping play.

In Featuring the Noted Photoplay Star, Mr. Francis X. Bushman, in His Simultaneous Dual Role of Paul and Hal, This Film Presents an Achievement That's Unprecedented in the History of Photoplay

This versatile artist has a vehicle in this play for the very highest expression of his powers—in his double characterization of the twin brothers Mr. Bushman is actually on the stage with himself impersonating two different characters at one and the same time. Could any character portrayal be more strikingly realistic? This feature alone insures the play a royal road to public favor—added to the character of supporting cast including such eminent artists as Minor S. Watson, Mr. E. H. Calvert, Beverly Bayne, Norman Fowler and Margaret Steppling, it makes a "A BROTHER'S LOYALTY" by far one of the biggest drawing cards that has ever been projected upon the screen. ORDER YOUR SPECIAL NOVELTY DESCRIPTIVE PHOTO-CARDS TODAY. THEY WILL INCREASE YOUR BOX-OFFICE RECEIPTS. $3 A THOUSAND. SPECIAL ONE, THREE AND SIX SHEET POSTERS NOW READY. WRITE US.

A Charming Social

A "Calamity Anne" and a Bully Western

Is Our Program for the Week Commencing Monday, June 23

"A HUSBAND'S MISTAKE" is a charming story, photographed amid California's greatest beauty—a society drama of the first water.

You know "CALAMITY ANNE" that paragon of an old woman who has already made millions laugh—that combination of rough exterior and warm interior.

"DEAD MAN'S SHOES" we are proud of. It is one Western in a hundred. Plenty of action, a tremendous explosion scene and a dainty love story.

Don't Miss Any of These—Your Loss If You Do!

"A Husband's Mistake"

(Release Monday, June 23, 1913)

Evelyn gives her husband's necklace present to her brother Dick, unbeknown to her husband. He accuses her of infidelity—she grows angry and leaves. How the tangled skein of their destiny was unwoven makes a delightful love story.

"Calamity Anne Takes a Trip"

(Release Thursday, June 26, 1913)

Calamity, now rich, is discovered as a long lost cousin by two bunco men. She visits them at Venice, Cal., rides the rides, shoots out the lights and generally has a peck of fun. What happened to the bunco men makes the "kick" of the story.

"Dead Man's Shoes"

(Release Saturday, June 28, 1913)

The tramp donned the clothes of the would-be murderer, assumed his name and began life afresh. When the renegade's sweetheart came the jig was up—but a new man had been made and a man who wanted that sweetheart badly.

HELEN G

In THE WIF

A ROMANCE OF

Copyrighted, 1913, by Helen

Written and Directed by

PRODUCED BY THE HELEN GARDNER

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

Author's Note: Being simply a romance inspired by the statement in Genesis that Cain went out of the presence of the Lord and dwelt in the land of Nod, where he knew his wife, this picture does not aim to accomplish more than your entertainment and amusement. It is neither historical nor theological: it is fanciful.

It is to be remembered that there are two accounts of the beginning of man: one, the Mosaic account, is inspired history; the other is the evolutionary theory based upon the deductions of Darwin and other reasoners. The first account conveys the information that man was created fresh and perfect by God, who blew the breath of life into his body. It would seem absurd to assume that such a being, possessed of all the attributes of man fresh from the hands of his Creator, were so dull of mind and stupid that he would fail to take advantage of the simple principles of material existence. Surely, he must have been as wise as Robinson Crusoe. If an inventor today can invent a wonderful machine before he is thirty years old, is it reasonable to assume that Adam, the very mighty product of God, and his progeny, continued to live naked, and in the dirt, nine hundred and twenty years?

It has been assumed in this story, simply, that Adam and his wife and children were possessed of ordinary common sense, and that the almost obvious necessities and graces of human life were within their knowledge.

Respecting the people of the land of Nod, who are introduced in this story, and, more particularly, their origin, it is enough to say they are purely imaginative. Nevertheless, it is not impossible to deduce from the Biblical context a sufficient premise upon which to contend the existence of other men than Adam and his descendants. It is a matter about which anyone may think as he will, and as thinking persons do.

As stated above, this story does not aim to teach any principle, nor does it pretend historical accuracy even approximately. Its design is to interest and amuse through its poetic beauty and dramatic order. It is merely a fanciful story of the regeneration of the first crime-committer through the charming philosophy of a wonderful woman.

Part I.

This section of the story deals intimately with the first crime—the destruction of Abel by his brother Cain, the sorrow of Adam and Eve, the cursing, branding and driving away of Cain, his heavy sorrow and terror, his wanderings—and finally his meeting with Save, the daughter of Omar, the hunter, in the land of Nod. He is about to destroy himself when Save meets him and says:

"It is no sacrifice to lose thy life which thou lovest not: but find that which thou lovest above thy life, and part thyself from that forever—that is expiation!"

Cain tells her that he loves nothing more than his life,

It would be unfair to judge of the picture merits of a picture story by a picture drama is within itself—not an account of its story. "The Wife of poetic nature, but of high dramatic force. It is tragic, and, at moments, borne in mind that Miss Helen Gardner plays the role of the woman, that she play itself is written and directed by the same man who wrote and directed and that he hates that. But the woman's wisdom is plain enough to him, and he starts out to find that which he will love more than his life, so that by parting himself from it forever he may expiate his terrible crime. Zeeban, a worker of magic, whom all people fear and obey because of that fear, announces that he will take Save for his wife, notwithstanding he already has one wife, a jealous woman named Januh. When Zeeban declares that Save shall become his wife Cain sees as by a flash of lightning that the thing which he loves above his life is—Save herself.

Part II.

It is shown clearly that Januh, the wife of Zeeban, means to murder Save. Zeeban discovers her intention, and has her put into the Pit of Death, a cave in which those condemned to die are made to starve to death. Cain, unacquainted with the customs and laws of Nod, and equally unacquainted with the intention of Januh, releases Januh by a trick. After the bridal ceremony in which according to the rites of the land Save becomes the possession of Zeeban, Januh sneaks into the nuptual chamber and stabs Zeeban to death. Save, not knowing how Zeeban came to his death, runs out of the chamber, her shriek bringing Cain, who has been in hiding, into the place. He is seized as the murderer, and, believing indeed that Save herself has committed the crime, he suffers himself to be led away and put into the Pit of Death. Save searches for Cain in the wilderness where she first met him. She meets Januh, who tells her that Cain is in the pit, and hastens there. She herself is believed to be an accomplice, and is thrown into the pit. There she finds Cain almost dead of starvation.

Part III.

Loving her with a great passion, Cain steadfastly refuses to take Save as his wife, convinced as he is that only by sacrificing some thing which he loves more than his life can he condone his great crime. Save herself is satisfied that he is right, and they resign themselves to death. Januh, unable to keep from them, climbs out upon a tree branch over the mouth of the pit, so that she can taunt them and watch them die. At a very dramatic moment the branch breaks, and, clutching the leaves to save herself, Januh's hair becomes entangled so that she is caught up, and her neck is broken in mid-air. Over her body Cain reaches the limb, and thence he reaches the outside. It is only a few moments before he has rescued Save. She discovers that the brand, put on his forehead by God, has vanished, and, taking it for a token of Cain's full forgivenness, Save and Cain leave the land as man and wife. Years after, and in accordance with the account by Moses, Cain builds a great city, and calls it Enoch, after his first-born son.

"MARY STUART"

Edison, Three reels

A magnificent production dealing with the life of Mary Stuart, Queen of France and Scotland and pretender to the throne of England, one of the most dramatic chapters of history. Gorgeous costumes, lavish staging and an especially strong cast, make the film a real masterpiece. It is historically accurate in every detail and represents months of study and preparation. This is the picture about which Louis Reeves Harrison said in the Moving Picture World of May 31st: "A beautiful spectacle, characterized by exhaustive attention to detail and splendid acting, this photo-drama ranks with the best of its kind. The settings are admirably chosen; the Throne Room interior crowns the designer with glory, and the handling of those taking part in the large ensembles reflects great credit on the director."

"THE SNARE OF FATE"

Vitagraph, Three reels

Edmund Marbury is in financial straits. His beautiful daughter, Marion, is bethrothed to Ralph, son of Andrew Mason, a financier. The elder Mason also loves Marion and plots with Mrs. Marbury to break off the engagement with Ralph. The latter is despatched to Africa on an alleged important mission and the road is clear for the working out of his father's plan. Marion and Mason are married. Although Mason's wealth has helped him out of his difficulties, Marbury sickens and dies. Later, Ralph all oblivious to what has transpired, returns and a violent quarrel with his father ensues. He leaves the house in a rage. Meanwhile, in the chamber overhead, a child is being brought into the world. As Mason sits brooding over his son's departure, the doctor enters and tells him that the child and Marion are dead. A few minutes later, when the grief-stricken Mrs. Marbury comes to talk with Mason she finds him dead. Thus she is left alone to suffer the consequences of her own selfishness.

"THE STRUGGLE"

Kalem, Two Reels

A powerful story of Capital and Labor, with the principal scenes set in a great iron mill. It involves Masterson, the mill owner; Mooney, his domineering superintendent, Jimmie Blake, a worker; Maggie, his sister, and "Bat" Thomas, Maggie's lover. The workers, smarting under Mooney's driving, go on strike. The mill is fired and "Bat" and the others figure in some thrilling rescue work. In the end, Masterson proves that his heart is in the right place and makes the "hit" of his career by announcing "Bat" as the new superintendent.

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

Quality Films. Reasonable Prices. Efficient Service

THERE is something refreshingly different about the pictures furnished in General Film Service. The comedies are really humorous, and they do not offend. The "Western" and "War" films are thrilling and full of life, but they aren't "bloody" to the gruesome extreme. The dramas tell a real, interesting story, most times with a moral, and contain nothing suggestive or objectionable. The "scenics" show the beauty spots of the world that you and your patrons could never see otherwise. The distinction between the films in General Film Service and others is just the difference between knowing how to produce and distribute the sort of pictures that exhibitors want and the public likes, and guessing. And the cost of the service is surprisingly low, considering its evident superiority. Right now is the best time to investigate. Just tell us you're willing to be convinced and we'll lose no time producing the proof.

Facts and Comments

"I SEE be the pa-a-per-rs," as Mr. Dooley, the sage of Archie Road, would say, "that there do be great doin's all over the counthry wid thim movin' picters." If Mr. Dooley would not have said it just that way, or if it might have been Hinnissy that said it instead, then we owe an apology to Peter Finley Dunne; but the fact remains that the pa-a-per-rs all over the country are reeking with news of the moving pictures. It is a dead town, indeed, in which the picture theater is not attracting attention in some form. There are new theaters building, old ones changing hands or being enlarged and improved, and in hundreds of communities the daily and weekly newspapers publish much information about the pictures that are appearing upon the screens of the local houses. It is doubtful if there is, or ever has been, any other form of amusement that has occupied as much space in the daily press of the country as is being devoted to moving pictures today.

It is interesting to note some of the various forms of this mass of publicity: Down in Berkley, Va., the boys and girls of George Washington School debated this question the other day: "Resolved, That Moving Pictures Are More Harmful than Beneficial." Miss Adelaide Moore and Oscar Pritchard advocated the negative side of the question and won the debate. Undoubtedly some grown-up proposed that question, but it remained for two alert members of the coming generation of empire builders to put the "high kibosh" upon the suggestion that moving pictures were harmful, and there we have the indication that it is the young men and women of this day who are going to get out of motion pictures the best there is in them.

Readers of The Moving Picture World must not understand by this that men of affairs of the present day do not recognize the good that is in the moving picture. Out in Bellaire, Ohio, the Robinson Brothers publish the Bellaire Daily Leader to the credit to their city and with profit, we hope, to themselves. Speaking about the moving pictures, The Leader says in an editorial:

> If there is anything that disgusts us through and through it is to read where some so-called reformer blames the moving pictures for the ruination of the youth of America. Were it not for the fact that a few gullible individuals probably swallow this rot we would regard the subject as too silly for serious mention.

It says a lot more that is to the point, but that extract is enough to show the way the wind blows. Bearing somewhat upon the same question, the Springfield, Missouri, Republican takes a hack at the "censor" whom it finds derelict in his official or self-appointed duty in that, while he is keen to condemn that which is questionable, he absolutely fails to commend that which is commendable. Which observation suggests that the "censor" might perform a larger function. But, anyway, why is a censor? This thought leads us right up against the information printed in the Detroit, Michigan, Journal to the effect that Royal Baker, police censor of that city, has resigned to become business director of the Columbia Educational Motion Picture Company. Readers of The Moving Picture World will recall Mr. Baker as the genius who formulated the rules of censorship for pictures to govern the work of the Detroit police censorship. Now he is going into the business of making pictures, which would indicate that he is not afraid to take a dose of his own medicine. Mr. Baker's company is now taking pictures of Detroit industries for use in a European educational campaign.

EVER heard of Governor Johnson — Hiram "Bull Moose" Johnson of California?

Of course you have; "he is the guy who wants to keep the Jap in Japan." But, at that, he is a regular picture fan. They proposed a bill in the California legislature the other day calculated to take the "Bronch" out of "Broncho Billy," and when the Governor heard of it he announced right off the reel: "I don't care if the bill passes both houses, I will never let it become a law." Someone who knows the Governor real well said to the Los Angeles Examiner man: "Why, he and Mrs. Johnson have been to see every moving picture film that has come to Sacramento for two years. It is the only way you can get him away from the office when he is working late."

Lying before us are numerous clippings from leading papers in various parts of this fair country concerning the introduction of pictures in schools and churches; the making of special pictures, such as "A Day at Tuskegee," showing the work of Booker Washington among 3,000 negro students; pictures of the students of the Agricultural and Mechanical College down in Texas and scores of similar undertakings.

Oh, it's great for the moving pictures.

The Real Thing

By Louis Reeves Harrison

While moving pictures are illustrating vividly what a noted critic calls "a startling disproportion between the exciting cause and the ultimate result," while good ones are as rare as pearls in Fulton Market oysters, let us not lose hope — their production may gradually pass into the hands of men of mental needs. The Young Art is just emerging from its callow youth and yellow shoes and contains good material if it is only half-baked. When it quits pulling up its cuffed trousers to show its peek-a-boo silk socks, gives up diamond-backed terrapin soused in extra dry and diets on whole wheat bread rich in phosphates, we may confidently look for a reduction in the "Startling Disproportion" and something like "The Real Thing." Meanwhile the world remains illimitable and calm.

One of the best signs I have noted during my unabated studio saunterings is a disposition to assign actors of decided personality to important roles. The actor is the real thing as a medium of interpretation when his attitude toward his vocation is one of intelligence and enthusiasm. What he wants principally is something to interpret. He wants a good part, one as real as his own thoughts, one whose arteries run red blood, one more invigorating than a ride in the subway, with some purpose to carry out and some strong character to impersonate. He will like to be exactly what the audience would have him be instead of eternally posing as an Apostle of Nothingness. In providing high-class actors for important roles the leading producers exhibit cheering signs of getting ready to produce. Rouse ye, Monsieur Scenario Writer, from your bitterness of soul!

Actor and spectator alike are just now in a misty state of confusion. Their minds sink within them; they hug blighted hopes; sadness enwraps their hearts like a pall; they are staggered by the apparitions of strange things, phantoms of past performances. The dust of ages is in their eyes. If the photodrama is not engaged in robbing hallowed tombs of what has long been consigned to classic obscurity, its characters climb impossible heights of nobility or descend to improbable depths of ignominy in futile search of a faded thrill. The acts of militant Englishwomen in their desperate battle for the ballot furnish more sensational material in a day than is doled out through lurid door-posters in a year. The courage of the wretchedly poor in great cities and factory towns supplies thousands of stories strong enough to stir and hold the interest of spectators all over the country. The trouble is that producers do not seem to recognize, even if they do not deny, the existence of a potential dramatic element in what is going on before our very eyes. Therein is the real thing.

Theatrical men in moving picture production have done it a great deal of good, but they appear to be inclosed in high walls of tradition and unable to break out. All around them are flowering fields of ideas. People are moving away from old influences, and they are getting out of reach of their entertainers. It does not seem so long ago that a man was considered immoral if he did not attend church. No matter what his private life, his individual cleanliness, he was not a fit associate for the just if he did not subscribe to one or another faith. His sense of freedom, however, grew too strong for such ties, and he is now shaking off other fetters on his way to full faith in himself. He is getting strong enough to stand by himself instead of clinging to this or that code, political or social, for support, and his progress in self-control not only furnishes hundreds of live themes for screen stories, but it applies to the art itself. It is time for motion-picture producers to shake off the trammels of artificiality and theatricalism. This New Art can stand by itself.

No essential principle has ever been discovered that playwright or producer must invariably accept. It is all well enough to talk about the laws of the drama, but what are they? Eminent critics have suspected their existence and have tried to formulate a set of rules which moving pictures have already scattered to the four cardinal points of the compass. Progress implies discarding precedent or improving on antecedent forms of procedure. Picture anything that shows the exercise of the human will or its intellectual control in an interesting way and you have a drama, but even this is merely something to be suppressed in time. As for the traditional stage drama, especially the "mellow" kind, it is a struggling creature half way between the primordial protoplasm and the Real Thing that is yet to come. It is as wearisome as Ibsen and cholera morbus.

The drama of yesterday and today deals almost entirely with desire. In the five-finger-exercise form, Him wishes to marry Her, principally because Her wants to capture Him, and their lips meet by the light of a cheesy-looking moon. Many studio directors, having reached this stage of performance, imagine they have discovered the real thing in the way of dramatic turkey trot, and merely vary it with a few old props or an incidental crime. Another form depicts the rich man who wants money most and gets the least out of it, to the secret delight of the unappreciated and the underpaid. The essence of the drama at present seems to be that somebody wants something and has a hard time getting it — the situation most of us are in as regard to fine moving pictures. Brunetiere says the central figure in the play must be after something and try to keep others from beating him to it, but Monsieur B. is only on his way to the truth. Moving pictures have shown that the acted story can be much broader and more elastic in its application, richer in results and able to further enrich itself from the best humanity is doing or trying to do.

It has become quite the thing to declare that moving pictures are destined to accomplish wonders, but the plain truth is that they are going to accomplish nothing if they continue on present lines, for they are at best only an attractive medium of communication, and improvement can only come from those who have something of superior quality to communicate. The scenario of the future is not going to be an attempt on the part of some nonenity to get a little reflected glory from stolen ideas. It will come from those who are building, founding, establishing, idealizing and beautifying with lofty skill and unflagging effort, from those who dare release the finest that is in them for the sake of posterity, from men and women of genius.

To the medium itself there has been a vast amount of ingenuity applied — its rapid development is the marvel of the age — but the real thing will come from those who have more than enough ideas for their immediate needs, whose brain power goes beyond mere service to the body, who can suit the million preference by the way they frame thoughts immortal.

Notes From Italy.

A LESSON IN ITALIAN KINEMATOGRAPHIC HISTORY—ITALY A POOR MARKET, BUT FEATURES BRING HIGH PRICES—EXHIBITORS AND THEIR LEAGUES—THEATERS AND PROJECTION—VISIT TO THE CINES.

By W. Stephen Bush.

Rome, May 29, 1913.

IN the history of the kinematograph in Italy there is much to cheer and comfort the friend of the motion picture. No other country furnishes ampler proof of the fact that the palm of success and the crown of merit go to the producer who is not afraid to aim high and whose appeal addresses itself to the intelligence, the good taste and the moral sense of the public. In the beginning of things kinematographic in Italy the producer had on the one hand the advantage of extraordinary opportunities, while on the other hand he was beset by great temptations. His opportunities lay in the natural beauty of his country, in the weather and the climate. Nowhere has Nature set up a more glorious and complete studio than in this most favored of lands. He had the precious opportunity of becoming the interpreter of a deathless and most interesting civilization. By means of the new invention, which by reproducing motion gives the most perfect imitation of life, he had it in his power to show to the whole modern civilized world pictures of the life and culture of ancient Rome. He had but to set up his camera with the right intention and his very surroundings would furnish him with the inspiration needed to produce great films. His was and is the home of art.

In Rome and all through Italy are the plentiful remains of the arts which have created imperishable beauty, which to the end of time will delight the eye and stir the heart. All that vast treasure of art and of knowledge and of history and of literature which is heaped up here in richest profusion was at the constant and immediate service of the moving picture camera. Here was the birthplace of two civilizations of the greatest importance—the civilization of ancient and of Christian Rome. Here were born two of the richest and most expressive of languages; here these languages reached their highest perfection, and here they served as the means of expression to some of the greatest minds among mortal men. The source of much which we still teach in every school of the world is here. The priceless heritage of Greece was often transmitted to us through Rome. It is hardly necessary to allude to the part which Rome and Italy played in the history of Christian civilization. If ever there was in the best sense of the word a paradise for the ambitious and intelligent producer it surely was in Italy. It was in the power of the Italian producer to place before the world in clear and living pictures what all the schools and text books of the centuries could do but imperfectly. If the producer chose to strike the educational chord and do some homage to the Muses of History and of Poetry and of the Drama, his success seemed to be assured. He had the world for an audience, for Rome and Italy had been the themes of countless poets and writers and teachers in various tongues for more than two thousand years.

Great, however, as his opportunities undoubtedly were, his temptations were no less great. First, there was the cry of that old, owlish, parrot-like chorus: "The moving picture is not here to instruct and educate, but only to amuse and entertain." With all their fossilized arguments these parrots can never succeed in talking the educational value out of the motion picture. There was, however, a greater and plainer temptation in the path of the Italian producer. This consisted in the very potent fact that in modern Italy the taste of the public is decidedly low. Indeed it verges on the morbid and on the vulgar.

Education here is still very far from being universal; even the most superficial of observers must recognize all around them the effects of centuries of political oppression and superstition. This is not the place to go into the causes of low taste and vicious instincts—I only state the fact and place it among the temptations which confronted the producer. If he took a narrow view of his opportunities it might well seem to him that the road to fortune must lie in playing down to the tastes of the vulgar. "To get the crowd" in Italy it was neither necessary nor advisable to put art and high ideals in his films.

Now when they came to the parting of the ways there was a sharp division among the producers. Three or four chose the road which for the moment seemed harder and less profitable, while the others chose the path with a downward trend, but with seeming assurance of immediate financial gain. To the former we owe many of the great masterpieces of filmdom—"The Fall of Troy," "The Last Days of Pompeii," Dante's "Inferno," "The Odyssey," "Jerusalem Delivered" and "Quo Vadis?". In publishing such films the producers achieved a reputation the fruits of which brought them not only honor, but rich material rewards. They set a splendid standard not only for others, but chiefly for themselves. They gave assurance to every exhibitor of a high average of quality in even their minor productions.

What of the other and far more numerous producers, who carefully kept away from the educational and the classic to cater to the lovers of the cheap melodrama? There are a score of them and perhaps more, but who out of Italy hears of them to any great advantage? They cast their lot with the "crowds" in Italy and now they are lucky to sell on an average three copies in Italy, with an occasional print for the French, Spanish or South American market. In our country and in Canada mighty little of their stuff is sold, and the buyers are generally sorry. It is quite true that the Italian market for the sale of films is the poorest in the world, and that even the best firms sell at the most five or six copies of their regular releases, whatever they may be able to do with the big features. It stands to reason then that the Italian producer depends very largely on his export. He could not live without the markets of the English-speaking countries and of Germany and Russia.

Italy is a poor market for the sale of American films—with one notable exception. The films of the Vitagraph Company are very popular here. The agent of the Vitagraph is selling as many films as the best of the native producers, and I believe at a little better prices. Maurice Costello is a name to conjure with in Italy. His recent tour through Italy, including a visit to the Cines studio in Rome, has been much like a tour of triumph. He was cheered in true Latin fashion when he showed himself to the people in the "Lux Et Umbra," one of the principal moving picture theaters in Rome. The other American brands, with the possible exception of the Bison, are sold but little. Perhaps more might be done with other American films, but Italy at its best does not compare with such markets as England, Germany and Russia. Even little Holland and Belgium, orphans in the House of Motion Pictures, lag but little behind Italy. Of the great Selig film, "Christopher Columbus," only seven copies were sold in the land of Christopher Columbus. Edison is represented in Genoa and the well-known exchange man Barattolo, who owns theaters in Rome, Naples and Turin, and who is a member of the Neapolitan City Council, is the agent for Selig and Kalem. Rex and Solax are in the hands of the Vitagraph agent, while all other American products are sold via London. To revert for a moment to the financial advantage of turning out high quality, I might say that, according to statements published by themselves, both the Cines Company and the Ambrosio Company paid dividends of 11 per cent. in the past year.

The renting situation is curiously mixed in Italy. The supply of first runs greatly exceeds the demand, helping to accentuate competition. Daily changes of program are unknown except in one or two theaters in Naples. Pathe, Gaumont, Eclair, Cines, Ambrosio and Vitagraph are trying to place their first runs in Italy at the same time and the result may be imagined. Pathe, Eclair and Gaumont refuse to sell to middlemen and will deal only with the exhibitor directly. This, of course, causes quite a little friction. The renters are fighting Pathe and the end is not yet.

The multiple feature film has added to the confusion of the market. Very high prices are paid for "State rights." Italy is for this purpose divided into five parts: Piedmont with Turin for its center, Lombardy with Milan, Veneto with Venice, Central Italy with Rome, and Southern Italy, including Sicily with Naples and Palermo. For the new Ambrosio film, "The Last Days of Pompeii," for instance, the buyer for Southern Italy and Sicily paid 40,000 francs. This is more than some of our biggest States have brought for some of the biggest features. As a natural result the single reel suffers, being relegated almost entirely to the smaller towns.

The theaters in the largest city of Italy, Naples, are small. Outside of Rome there are few moving picture theaters with a large seating capacity, and in Rome there is but one with 1,500 seats. Licenses are quite low and the opening of theaters is free to anyone. The regulations for the safety of patrons are easy to the point of laxity. With the excitable nature of the Italians, a panic in one of even the medium-sized theaters might cause a terrible disaster. Prices of admission are almost as low as with us, ranging from six cents to a rare maximum of thirty cents. The average Italian moving picture house compares most unfavorably with the average theater in England, America or Germany. It recalls Mulberry Bend and Little Italy in Harlem in the days of the early Italian immigration. The odor in these places is penetrating, but far from agreeable. Chairs are poor, the attendants are normally sleepy and insistent for tips when roused into a state of passing wakefulness. The projection even in the very best theaters is not much, and in the average theater it is intolerably wretched. Clear, sharp and distinct pictures, and an even, steady supply of good, strong light are positively unknown. An Italian translation of Richardson's handbook is one of the crying needs of Italian operators, and I have taken the matter up with an editor of prominence.

The personnel of the average exhibitor is better than one might expect. He is generally inclined to be progressive, but he seems incapable of understanding the advantages of one great and strong national organization. Concerted action by the exhibitor would count for much more here in Italy than, for instance, in Austria or Germany. Italy is a more democratic country and public officials are much quicker to respond to public demands. It is to be much deplored then that the Italian exhibitors cannot be united in one organization. There are at present two leagues of exhibitors and, what is worse, they are fighting each other instead of turning their faces against the common enemy. If the one league commends some measure to the government as beneficial to the industry, the other league comes along and adopts resolutions strongly condemning the proposed measure.

Italy has little just cause to complain of censorship. The power of censoring pictures was until recently exercised by the local authorities of each province, but now it is vested in a branch of the Ministry of Justice at Rome and its decisions are valid for the whole kingdom. To an American all censorship is of course odious, but the Italian censorship is very mild, with a semi-occasional fit of rigor.

I will carry away from Rome one very pleasant recollection: that of a long, instructive and very enjoyable visit to the splendid Cines establishment just outside the Porta San Giovanni. The grounds of the Cines studios cover 56,000 cubic metres. Of their six different studios there is but one for which artificial light is used and this studio is used but rarely, mostly indeed for the production of light effects and a species of a higher sort of trick photography. Four companies were at work when I visited the studio in the company of the courteous Signor A. Meille, the private secretary of the general director, Baron A. Fassini. The baron received the visit from a representative of the Moving Picture World with every evidence of pleasure and extended innumerable courtesies. He and indeed all of the staff and the artists of the Cines are ardent readers of the paper and the supply of copies is never large enough to go around. This saying of the baron and his secretary was a most handsome tribute to the international value and importance of the paper, and on behalf of the readers of the Moving Picture World I conveyed to him our sincerest appreciation.

The excellence of Cines' photography is easily explained by the magnificent natural light which is at the disposal of the Roman producer at least ten months out of twelve. This light is dry and extremely clear. I noticed many things that seemed interesting and useful in the industry. They have most of their cameras fixed to a pivot-like arrangement on the ground. This makes it possible to turn the camera easily without disturbing it. I saw a ball scene with lots of dancing taken in this way and it impressed me as a new and useful innovation. Of course, the mechanical and shipping departments were up to a high standard, but the story of the Cines plant would not be complete without describing the large number of special departments which are to be found on the grounds. The work of these departments is unique and greatly helps to explain the artistic success of the Cines films. Outside of about twenty compartments, each about 20 x 150, where the movable scenery is kept, there are two large buildings which are occupied by special departments, such as the manufacture of hats and the making of costumes. There is a perfect arsenal in which weapons of every age in all conceivable shapes are found, there is a floor devoted to woodwork and carving, large quarters for the scene painters, a smithy and a most interesting department of pottery. All these things are kept with the greatest care and are in charge of capable men and women.

The department for the making of costumes contains well nigh ten thousand suits and dresses. It covers every period in man's and especially woman's history, from the famous fig-leaf to the hobble-skirt. Every period in history has its separate and carefully marked lockers. I was struck with the fine gowns of the French revolutionary and the Napoleonic periods and was told that the Cines have a great Napoleonic play under way. The same careful and scientific division characterizes the arsenal. Everywhere indeed are evident the traces of experts, the hand of the scholar and the historian has been at work. The pottery was a most instructive department. The men employed are adepts and as they have the best models of the world for almost every style of pottery they turn out a splendid grade of work. Art, system, study, hard work and capable direction characterize the conduct of every one of the departments.

I had the pleasure of meeting the director of "Quo Vadis?" Signor E. Guazzoni, a very modest and affable gentleman, who is thoroughly absorbed in his work. He had troubles of his own the morning I visited the Cines, for he was trying to make a huge python do the right thing before the camera in connection with a version of "Cleopatra," which the Cines will shortly put on the market. I also had pleasant chats with all the artists in "Quo Vadis?" except Nero and Petronius, who are not regularly with the Cines.

The very important cities of Turin and Milano I expect to see to morrow, and as they are the film centers of Italy and the studios of Ambrosio and the Milano Film Company, will no doubt offer much of interest to our readers. There will be a second letter on Italy.

Regarding "Wages of Sin"

Chairman Howe, of Board of Censorship, Explains Position as to Rose and Others.

There is discussion at present as to the film "The Wages of Sin" and as to the action of the National Board of Censorship of motion pictures in passing it. Dr. Frederic C. Howe, Chairman of the National Board, when interviewed on the subject, said:

"The film 'The Wages of Sin' was passed by our Board as being an ordinary, harmless melodrama. There was nothing either in the titles or scenes to suggest crime or to degrade moral standards. There was no portrayal of the details of crime in any way that could be either attractive or imitated.

"All mention whatever of Messrs. Rose, Vallon and Schepps was eliminated from the main title and sub-titles before the Board approved the film. The Board did not consider that it had any right to prohibit these men from going on the film stage, but it had a right to prevent the morbid exploitation of these men's reputations. The Board's control does not go beyond the film. The way it is advertised—the kind of posters or verbal advertising which the exhibitor gives the film—is outside the Board's jurisdiction, and within the jurisdiction of the local police authorities anywhere in the country. The Board has frequently called attention to the need for local regulation of posters and advertising, but has never been able itself to undertake local regulation.

"It is worth mentioning that Rose, Vallon and Schepps were not convicted of crime; but even if they had been and had gone to the penitentiary, this Board would not have felt justified in forbidding them to go on the film stage. As stated above, the Board is concerned with the moral effect of motion pictures, not with the moral character of the people who produce motion pictures or act in them.

"Some years ago the Board condemned a film in which Beulah Binford was featured. This film exploited the name of Beulah Binford in its titles and was in fact a dramatization of her own life history, or part of it. In the present case the facts are reversed. The film makes no mention of Rose, Vallon or Schepps and does not pretend to dramatize the facts of their life in any way."

"Before anyone condemns the Board for action on this film he ought to take the trouble to see it."

ANOTHER NEW PICTURE HOUSE DOING GOOD BUSINESS.

H. M. Florig opened the Palace Theater, Homestead, Pa., on Saturday evening, May 24, and jammed the house at each exhibition. The house is strictly up to date and is thoroughly fireproof. It has a seating capacity of 516. It is owned by the Homestead Amusement Company, of which Mr. Florig is a director. It is the intention of the company to open several other theaters in the course of the next two years.

Picture Making in the Far East

Vitagraph Globe Trotters, Home From World Circling Trip, Tell Their Experiences.

By Hugh Hoffman.

THE steamship New Amsterdam, sailing from Boulogne, France, docked in New York on Monday, June 3. On board was the Vitagraph company of photoplayers that started away from here on the seventh of last December, by way of San Francisco, for a picture making trip around the world. The party numbered eleven and was made up of Stephen Smith, business manager; Mr. and Mrse. Wm. V. Ranous; Maurice Costello and Georgia Maurice (Mrs. Costello), and their small daughters Helen and Dolores; James Young; Clara Kimball Young; Eugene Mullin, photoplaywright, and Harry Keepers, photographer.

CINEMA DES CHEFS-D'OEUVRE

Picture Theater in Port Said, Egypt.

The picture making began as soon as the steamer left Frisco. It was a big Japanese vessel entitled "Tenyu Maru," manned and officered entirely by Japs, which very vessel Jimmy Young fears will come across the Pacific some day as a transport, laden with yellow warriors to overrun the Louisiana Purchase and points East. However, there was found abroad this vessel a fully equipped motion picture theater for the entertainment of passengers, so they enjoyed the making of movies in the day time and the exhibition of them at night. The first getting-off place was Yokohama, where the party tarried about a month. From the accounts of the various members of the party, Japan is the ideal country of all those visited. For exquisite scenery and immaculate cleanliness it is in a class by itself, although these things are all bound up in red tape of no uncertain kind.

Vitagraph Globe Trotters in Japan—Statue of Buddha in Background.

Wherever the company went to take pictures, they were observed by secret service men and they were allowed to take pictures only upon condition that a copy of each scene be handed over to the government for inspection. Two photoplays were enacted in the vicinity of Yokohama; one written by Eugene Mullin was entitled "Osaka's Wrath" and the other written by James Young was entitled "Jack's Chrysanthemum." The company paid a visit to a large motion picture studio which has been erected by a company of Japanese men having considerable capital. It is described as an expansive enclosure built of framework which is covered over with translucent paper that diffuses the light into a softness of quality that has no equal elsewhere. About the place are most picturesque, artificial gardens, ponds, woodlands, grottoes and the like, making the grounds a picture maker's paradise. Short stops were made also at Tokio and Nagasaki, for sight seeing purposes, before sailing for China.

Shanghai was touched for a day, enroute to Hong Kong. In China the difference in sanitary arrangements was noticeable for the reason that there were none. In most respects Japan is centuries ahead of China. In the matter of motion pictures and their making, the Japanese are forming companies and building studios with much enterprise, while the Chinese are yet superstitious and camera shy. The action of almost any photoplay will infringe upon some sacred custom that causes the celestials to cover up their faces and otherwise evade the camera. They quickly discovered that it is extremely inconvenient to a director for one or more of the cast to withdraw before a picture is finished. Hence about midway through a picture they would suspend operations long enough to deliver an ultimatum to the effect that the price of home talent had gone up several points since the picture was started. At Hong Kong, where a week's stop was made, a comedy-drama written by Eugene Mullin, entitled "Love and Botany" was taken.

The next port of call was Rangoon, Burmah, where the company stayed for two weeks. The principal picture produced at this point was one entitled "Mandalay," adapted from Kipling by Mr. Young. The natives there were tractable and accommodating, for which reason the results at Rangoon were more than satisfactory. Calcutta, the city of dreadful night, was the next stop, which was of two weeks duration. A fine picture entitled "Spirit of the Orient," by Eugene Mullin was produced here, in addition to which some valuable scenic records were made. The party then made a railway journey across the heart of India to Bombay where three days were spent in the making of scenic pictures, after which they embarked for Cario, Egypt, via Port Said. Three weeks were spent at Cairo and one at Luxor in the making of photoplays and scenics.

Scene from "Osaka's Wrath," Taken in Japan.

Taking passage then for Brendisi, Italy, the party journeyed by railway across the boot-leg peninsula, which ride, Mr. Young says, was the most beautiful of the entire trip, with Rome as the destination. In Rome the Vitagraph players were the guests of the Society Italian Cines, and were accorded the use of the Cines studio for finishing the interior scenes of some of the plays already begun, and for the making of a few new productions. Venice was the last place at which pictures were made, one of which is a modern romance entitled "The Lonely Princesss," written by Mr. Mullin. Paris was the last stop. No scenes were taken there, and the company spent their time in sightseeing and in visiting the Paris plant of the Vitagraph Company before sailing for New York. In all, eighteen photoplays were done aside from the scenic pictures which were made at every port of call.

Maurice Costello, who acted in the capacity of general director of production, in speaking of the trip, said, "I cannot indorse the idea of a regularly scheduled itinerary for picture making trips, because the thought of having to catch a certain boat at a certain time is constantly on one's mind. This is likely to have its effect on the picture, because a director will hurry through his work in the fear that bad weather will come on before he is finished, and that he will have to leave when the boat leaves, whether the scenes are finished or not. I believe that when a company of players goes abroad on a picture making trip they should be free to roam at will, stopping long enough to do everything right. You see there are many opportunities that present themselves on the spot that could never be anticipated in laying out an itinerary. Something will turn up that suggests a fine idea for a photoplay; then the boat whistle blows and the idea must be abandoned in order to follow the traveling schedule. An itinerary is all right if it is confined to specifying the general route and the approximate length of time to be taken, but considerable latitude for discretion should be allowed to those who are making the trip and the pictures."

James Young was delighted with the trip and delighted to be home. "The first trip around the world," said he, "is accompanied with many regrets. That is to say, if one only had the same knowledge at the starting that he has at the end of the journey he would do things differently and do them much better. Believe me, my eyes were open all the time and I never missed a thing that was worth seeing. I live in hopes that some day I may have another such opportunity to write and act photoplays in those lands; I know that I would be much better prepared for the work."

Harry Keepers, the photographer of the party, carried a laboratory outfit that required ten trunks. He tells us that he had good luck all the way around. "In the extremely hot climates," said he, "I found it necessary to develop my films as soon as possible after taking, as the heat is ruinous to the raw stock once it is taken out of the hermetically sealed cans. In the glare of the tropical sun I could not stop out enough light with the diaphram, so I covered my lens with a yellow ray filter and got along nicely. Of the 35,000 feet exposed not a scene was spoiled."

NOT SOLD OR RENTED.

Mr. George Kleine, proprietor and manager of the sensational photo-drama success, "Quo Vadis?" made by the famous Cines Company of Italy, positively refuses to sell State rights or to lease his property to anyone. Mr. Kleine will have fully fifteen companies touring the United States and Canada by September 1st. "Quo Vadis?" as presented by Mr. Kleine, is in eight reels divided into three acts and special music has been arranged and composed for the performance. The Cines production comprehends the entire Sienkiewicz story and is full of wonderful features. Imitators have entered the field, but none have approached anything like the magnitude and detail of Mr. Kleine's achievement. The only opportunity to see the real "Quo Vadis?" will be in the big theaters of the country when announced by George Kleine himself.

LOOKING FOR THE WOODYS.

The Pacific Film Exchange of Vancouver, B. C., is looking for Oren F. and J. S. Woody, who are booking "Pilgrims Progress," Ambrosio, four reels; "Siegfried," Ambrosio three reels; and "Foe to Richelieu," two reels. Pathe colored for that concern. The Woodys took the film mentioned on the road some time ago and, up to date, have failed to make any reports and are not working in the territory supposed to be covered. Any information as to their whereabouts will be thankfully received by the Pacific Film Exchange.

UNIVERSAL CITY TO HAVE ZOO.

A new series of jungle pictures is to be filmed at Universal City, Cal., in the near future, which will far eclipse in artistic excellence and thrilling interest any which previously have been taken in America. This is made possible by the recent purchase by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of a train-load of lions, tigers, bears, pumas, leopards, jaguars and other wild denizens of the tropical forests. The zoo arrived at the Providencia Ranch on May 23rd and was immediately installed in new quarters that had been prepared for it.

"The Snare of Fate"

A Fine Two-Reel Thanhouser.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS photodrama marks a distinct advance in Thanhouser production—it is superior in motive to any release I have ever seen from that company—and, if carried a little further, it might easily have ranked among the masterpieces of the day. It apparently deals with a situation now engaging the attention of the Russell Sage Foundation in depicting the operations of a loan shark, but the deeper motive is a finer one and so modern, so advanced, that I hope it will be treated with tremendous force in the near future. It is cheering to see these tendrils reaching out for the most powerful themes in stories of human life of today.

Scene from "The Snare of Fate" (Thanhouser).

Further than this, the play is well acted, is delightfully artistic in the selection of exteriors, and exhibits a bold spirit of leadership in this period of feeble-minded subservience to what may have served some past generation but which has no bearing on this one. It is clean, fearless and very much to the point. The story involves a sacrificial marriage, but the latter is not forced nor illogical. Miss Flo La Badie plays with delicacy and sympathetic intelligence the role of a young wife and mother united by force of circumstances to a morally base and miserly usurer. The latter role is admirably depicted by James Cruze. When realization comes to her that her child may have his ignoble example to follow, she leaves her husband to his miserable practices never to return.

Scene from "The Snare of Fate" (Thanhouser).

At this point was a magnificent opportunity for double exposure, showing the workings of the young wife's mind, her picturing of the influence of sordid environment on her child as contrasted with that of her superior ideals. The mother who is young of heart and near her children in simplicity of character knows instinctively that it is almost impossible to teach little ones even the elements of adult morality—the tiny copy-cats will act according to the influences brought to bear upon them when not responding to the insistent demands of their primitive hearts. The mother in this case left her husband rather than have her child at the mercy of hideous surroundings. That was her sole motive, and the idea is a beautiful one.

She grasped the fact that her community was outreaching the vile practices of her husband and set about bravely to train her offspring according to the opinions and customs of enlightenment. Her conduct furnishes an excellent example to the producers of moving pictures—their product needs a similar schooling. She would not have the child's spiritual virginity tainted by what the father was doing, and it is that quality in creators of the human race that we dwell most fondly upon when some dim and haunting memory of our own mothers reaches us like a far-off strain of exquisite music.

We watch the usurer thrive financially while sinking into greater depths of moral decadence, until a peculiar accident—he is stricken with partial paralysis when unknown in the house of a tenant about to be evicted—brings about a strong situation. Treated with kindness by the poor people he is about to deprive of a home, he is mistaken by the evictors for an inmate and dumped into the street with the furniture. He struggles to speak, but is unable to utter a sound. The story is consistently portrayed and brought to an artistic conclusion.

By heck! Thet movin' pictur' show
  Is growin' fierce an' sum alarmin'.
They put on fresh uns ev'ry week,
  An ev'ry new un is more charmin'.
At fust, Lucindy an' myself
  Vowed they wuz on'y fools' invenshuns,
Not wuth our goin' 'cross the road,
  Not wuth no sober folks' attenshuns.

Fur growin' childern, maybe they Might be attractive-like an' pleasin';
But as fur us gray-headed sort,
  They looked like gimcracks wuthout reason.
We didn't care to spend the time
  A-watchin' them old things unrollin';
They wuz to us like novel books,
  Wuthout no sense, an' not consolin'.

Si Pivens, down in Perkins' store,
  Sed he went ev'ry night to watch 'em.
Sez Si: "By gosh, them things is great—
  Sunner or later ye'll all catch 'em."
I vowed thet Si wuz off his nut,
  An' tole him so right out an' plainly.
Sez he: "Go see 'em fur yerself."
  I did. Say, Si warn't speakin' vainly.

I tuk the hull kerboodle in
  Frum fust to finish at my lezure.
I sized 'em up an' sized 'em down—
  An' spent an evenin' o' plezure.
I tole Lucindy all about
  The show. She sot up prim an' proper,
An' sez: "Pembrook, I'd better go
  An' see if you hain't tole a whopper."

She went!!! Sense then thur hain't no use
  To spile hur fancy. Woman fashun
She goes the hull dern thing. An' I—
  Wal—I have got thet pictur' pashun.
It eases me, it eases hur
  Arter the day's work's dun an' over,
To sit an' watch the world go by,
  An' see things outside pigs an' clover.

Say, now Lucindy sez thet quilts
  An' quiltin' bees hain't got no showin',
Nor teas an' gossip hain't no charm
  When she looks on the world a-goin'.
It eases me, it eases hur
  To see how other folks are livin'.
An' thet's why I don't 'grudge the price
  To watch them picturs they are givin'.

The Melies Company in Java.

The Round-the-World Picture Makers, Doing a Good Educational Work, Pause at an Interesting Island.

By Doré Hoffman.

JAVA has frequently been said to be the garden of the East. The island, which lies just south of Borneo, and close to the equator, is a tropical paradise and one of the few that is really attractive to the white man as a place of residence. Most equatorial countries, while prodigally abundant with nature's splendor, have drawbacks in the way of unhealthy climate, intolerable living conditions or intolerable natives, as seen from the European or American point of view. Particularly is this true of Asiatic countries, in which the natives are as a rule, sullen or stupid, if not actually hostile to the white traveler. In the Far East, Japan and Java are the notable exceptions, and voyagers returning from either of those countries speak highly of the general docility, politeness and courtesy of the natives. Java, situated among a large group of semi-civilized islands, has a much noted national trait of gentleness among its inhabitants, that is intensified by contrast with other Asiatic peoples.

It was toward this island of sunshine and smiles that the Melies Company, on their picture making tour of the world, set sail after their Australian sojourn, stopping en-route at Thursday Island to make a couple of negatives in the pearl fishing country. For the educational purposes of the trip, which are by no means secondary, the island of Java should be prolific in interesting pictures of a remarkable race of brown skinned men and women. While the Malay language, under three centuries of Dutch rule, has come to be the official language of the entire possessions of the Netherlands in the archipelago, it is not generally known that the Javanese are an entirely different race of people from the Malays. The Malay is a warlike fellow, ready to draw his knife at the slightest provocation. He is also a pirate when he dares to be, but not within reach of the white man's gunboats, which he respects but does not admire. The whole history of the Malay is one of tribal warfare, and were it not the fact that the race is only a small minority of the Polynesian peoples, no white man, and least of all the Dutchman, would ever have conquered and ruled in the East India Islands.

Scene from "The Poisoned Darts" (Melies).

It is due to the meekness of the Javanese, who are more populous than any of the other peoples, that the white man, including the Englishman, dominates the brown races of the Orient. The Portugese admiral, Albuquerque, invaded and took possession of all the East India Islands he could find, in the year 1515. Since 1499 the route to the Orient was a secret known only to the Portugese, who guarded it carefully. This route was by way of Brazil and around the Cape of Good Hope, and by virtue of its being secret the Portugese had a monopoly of the East India trade. It took the Dutch a hundred years to find it out. When they did discover the route they sent a big fleet around and ousted the Portugese, and have remained in possession ever since. They were fortunate in selecting Java as their first conquest because there was no resistance; they simply came and took charge, and from this base they later took possession of Sumatra, Celebes, the greater part of Borneo, and numerous other smaller islands. The Javanese have been stigmatized upon various occasions by kindred tribes and nations, and even by their Dutch rulers, as a cowardly people, otherwise they would have made some show of resistance against the invaders. This, however, cannot be truthfully said against them because they are in fact a gentle and peaceful people with hearts full of kindness for their own as well as for others, and as this characteristic has endured for centuries in the face of humiliation and oppression, it may well be conceded as a distinct racial trait. The Javanese welcomed the Dutch in the hope that they would put an end to the Malay invasions, and religious conflicts that kept their island in a state of unrest. The Dutch did end these things, but in their turn they despised the gentle Javanese and forced them to cultivate the land, giving them a mere pittance for the work and pocketing the handsome profits for themselves.

Java at the present time, like its neighboring islands, is a ployglot community. Among its inhabitants are thousands of Chinese, Hindus, Arabs, Malays, Persians and Europeans. The Europeans rule the country, and the Chinese practically monopolize the retail business; the Malays are the sailors and the Persians and Arabs are the foreign buyers. Rice, coffee and spices are the three big items of commerce; the poor Javanese does all the work of producing them, and gets in return the least of any. Yet the talents of the Javanese are on a par with those of the Jews, also a persecuted race. In the making of dyed fabrics they are supreme; they are quicker scholars than Europeans, and their music has the most exquisite quality imaginable. In appearance they are refined and thoughtful, with nothing about them to suggest an underlying strain of savagery. Their foreheads are wide and their large eyes have a bovine placidness that bespeaks their gentility. Their noses are stubby and their mouths, while large, are not stern, and are far from being ugly.

Scene from "The Lure of the Sacred Pearl" (Melies).

It is well that we should know more about these people. To us Americans they are practically unknown, and the majority of us think only of savages when they are spoken of. A trip such as Mr. Melies is making in the remote parts of the earth is a great step in the promotion of the brotherhood of man. We might read book after book about this or that tribe or nation and think we were familiar with them, only to stare in curiosity if we should see one of their kind on the streets of New York. But the motion picture familiarizes us with them. We see them at their work and we learn to read their faces. By witnessing on the screen their folk stories we can see the reason for certain ceremonies and dances that we formerly considered to be mere savage antics executed for no reason in particular. A number of interesting pictures of the Javanese have been sent back home by Mr. Melies which will serve to enlighten us concerning their local conditions. One of these stories is entitled "The Lure of the Sacred Pearl." Java, among other things, is overrun with priests of various pagan denominations, such as the Islam, Mohammedan, Hindoo, Brahmin, Buddhist, Confucian, etc. The story is of a young Australian who buys at auction a heap of pearl shells and finds therein a rare black pearl. The news spreads around the village and gets to the ears of a pagan priest who has gathered in nearly every black pearl recently found or known, by intimidation, using them to decorate the idol in his temple. He offers the young man a price for the pearl which is not considered sufficient. From that time on the priest resorts to every mysterious resource in his power to obtain the pearl, by fair means or foul. The persistency with which the young man is hounded until the priest finally gets possession of the pearl, forms the remainder of the story, which is rich in local color.

Another characteristic story is a picture entitled "The Poisoned Darts." It tells of a shipwrecked crew on an East Indian island. There are an officer and four men groping through the jungle in search of forage. They come upon a native girl and the sailors seize her. Their officer orders the girl released and commands them to march on. Next day the men become mutinous and turn upon their officer, binding him to a tree. One of the sailors is about to kill him when a poisoned dart from the jungle puts an end to him. The men are scared for a while, but after a few days attempt further violence upon their captain, whereupon another poisoned dart saves him. Each time he is in danger a dart saves him until he is at last alone. He awakes from a sleep to find food provided for him and finds there the native girl whom he had befriended. He is led to the village and the girl nurses him through a fever, after which he hails a passing ship and returns to his home. The story is a good illustration of the gratitude of which the Javanese are capable when a white man does them a good turn.

A number of well selected scenic pictures have also reached America, one of which, "The Rice Industry in Java," is especially interesting. It shows the Javanese in the rainy season planting the rice in the mud. Later the rice stalks are seen growing above the water, and finally the harvest is shown, in which the natives pick the ears by hand, which they prefer to labor saving methods.

The Javanese loves ceremonies and holidays. He celebrates everything of a pleasing nature with a feast of some kind; from a wedding down to the visit of a relative. The natives spend so much of their time and savings for celebrations that it leaves them comparatively poor. They have the consolation of knowing, however, that they can feast at another's spread next time, for it is the custom to invite everyone in the village to the merrymaking. At these feasts it is also customary to have dancing girls perform the native dances, and Mr. Melies has sent back some good records of some of these festal ceremonies. There are many curious old ruins in Java which have also been utilized in story form, combining amusement with an educational element. The cities of Java visited by the Melies Company were Garoet, Bandoeng, Samarang and Batavia, with trips into the interior, after which they departed for the island of Sumatra.

EDWIN THANHOUSER HERE.

Edwin Thanhouser, founder of Thanhouser Company, is here from Europe on a short trip. He left his family in Rome and is stopping in New York City. Mr. Thanhouser arrived on the La Provence, Saturday, and that evening celebrated his home-coming with a dinner at the Players' Club, which was attended by C. J. Hite, president of Thauhouser Film Corporation, Lloyd F. Lonergan, Bert Adler and Elmer Harris. He spent Sunday inspecting the new Thanhouser plant at New Rochelle. His business here is in connection with his real estate and he states he is out of the picture game for good. Mr. Thanhouser expects to come over again next spring.

NICHOLLS HERE AND GONE.

B. Nicholls, of the Motion Picture Sales Agency, London, left for home on Tuesday, after a brief visit in New York of ten days—which is a long visit for him.

"Nothing in especial brought me over," he explained the other afternoon. "I had planned the visit some time ago because I like to get over on this side and see how things are going about every so often. I have made no new deals, nor was it my intention to try and make them. I just wanted to look around.

"There is not much new on the other side. The picture business in Europe is constantly improving and gaining a more established position. The American films are more than holding their own in spite of the growing competition. Much of the stuff is never heard of on this side of the water, but in England you have to sell film, not merely issue it with the assurance that a certain quantity will be taken.

"'From the Manger to the Cross' is scoring tremendously. We have a large number of copies working in England and they are working every day. It was suggested by many exhibitors that I release the subject around Christmas time, but I put it out in October precisely because I did not want it to become associated with any particular season. As a result it is recognized as an all-the-year-round subject and does not merely work at Christmas and Easter. I have sold about half of Europe thus far, but France, Germany, Russia and some smaller nations are still open. Italy has been sold, but the subject will not be put out until next October. I think that it will be selling almost as well five or ten years from now. It will never grow old.

"I am very enthusiastic about the new production of the Famous Players' Company in which Mrs. Langtry appeared. I had the pleasure of seeing this the other night when it was first run without titles. It did not seem to me to need much captioning, the story is so clearly told. I also saw the production of 'A Good Little Devil,' in which Miss Pickford appears. I anticipate a large European sale for both of these. In my opinion the Langtry film will be the better sales proposition, in spite of the personal popularity of Miss Pickford and the excellence of the filmed production. 'The Prisoner of Zenda' is already a large seller abroad."

LUBIN COMEDY COMPANY NOTES.

Arthur Hotaling, Lubin director, has installed his big comedy company at Atlantic City for the summer; he intends to make several feature reels, among them some of his famous "Gay Time" pictures. He will also put on some "Coster" pictures with London types at their best. Having traveled abroad considerably, Mr. Hotaling has secured new and novel ideas, as well as the correct wardrobe for dressing these plays.

Miss May Hotely is the star of the Lubin comedy players under Mr. Hotaling, and supporting her in the casts will be seen such well-known and popular players at Robert Burns, George Reehm, Walter Stull, Raymond McKee, Walter Leslie, Jack Willard, Henry Bard, Fred Moore, Rube Bernstein, Pierce Phelan, Frances Ne-Moyer, Julia Calhoun, Marguerite Ne-Moyer, Ella Reehm, Violet Burns, Florence Leslie, Leola Hotaling. Garry Hotaling is chief operator and Mr. George Reehm is assistant director to Arthur Hotaling.

EXECUTIONS, LYNCHINGS AND RIOTING FORBIDDEN.

State Senator Chamberlain of Illinois introduced a bill in the Illinois State legislature on May 21, providing that motion pictures showing legal executions, lynchings or rioting shall be prohibited in that state under a penalty of a fine of from $25 to $1,000, or confinement in the county jail not to exceed one year or both for each violation. Our informant does not say that the bill has been made a law.

"A Villain Unmasked" (Eclipse-Kleine)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

GEORGE KLEINE will release a two-reel subject by Eclipse, entitled "A Villian Unmasked" on June 27. The films unfold an interesting story, not at all unusual, but well told, There are several attractive open-air back grounds in the picture and several good interiors, all of which bear the stamp of fine photography.

The people in the cast betray at times an over demonstrativeness of gesture that will appear strange to American spectators, but these peculiarities of the French actor are submerged by the really good acting of the principals. The villain is well carried by M. G. Baud, of the Vaudeville, Paris, and Mme. Feriel, of the Gymnase, is attractive and appealing in the role of the love-stricken widow and lady of fashion. Ralph De Forest, the widow's son, is brought out strongly by the clever juvenile acting of M. R. Lyon, of the Renaissance.

Robert West, the head and organizer of a gang of forgers, meets Mrs. De Forest, a wealthy woman of fashion. He has had the advantages of birth and a liberal education; but, Jekyl-Hyde-like, he has his good and evil sides. He has never been able to wear himself away from refined associations, although he is fearful at any moment of being discovered in his felonious pursuits.

He is introduced to Mrs. De Forest, who impresses him strangely at first sight by her rare personal charms. When he learns that she is wealthy and that she is not averse to his attentions, he pays court to her with redoubled zeal.

In the midst of their courtship, Mrs. De Forest receives a letter from her only child Ralph, a youth of about twenty years, informing her that he is about to pay a visit that will last several days. She shows the letter to Robert West, who is visibly perturbed to learn that she has a son, and still more by the approaching visit. He conceals his real feelings, however, and makes a show of being happy at the prospect of meeting his stepson that is soon to be.

Ralph arrives and is warmly welcomed by his mother, whom he deeply loves. That discreet woman, knowing how jealous Ralph is of her affections, warns West to keep out of the way until she breaks the news to her son. The opportunity arrives one morning, when a magnificent bouquet of flowers is brought into the breakfast room by the maid. The flowers have been sent by West, and Mrs. De Forest gently tells her son of the new love that has come into her life. Ralph is furious and dashes the flowers on the floor; but, seeing how much pained his mother is by his action, he embraces her and promises to meet the man who has broken into his life so rudely.

West and Ralph are introduced, but the latter is not favorably impressed. He has a sense that something is wrong with the man who would claim his mother's hand. His suspicions are made still stronger when he discovers West in close conversation with a man, seemingly far beneath him in station. Then he resolves to shadow him. By skillful craft and dodging, he traces West to his office and to the underground headquarters of the forgers. He next follows two of the men engaged in making the spurious notes to a cafe, and secures the note paid by them to the keeper for refreshments furnished. He compares it with a genuine note of the same denomination. He is then clearly convinced that West and his gang are forgers.

Wishing to spare his mother needless pain, he calls on West and charges him with his crime; but makes the overture that he will spare him, if he will renounce all hope of wedding his mother. West laughs derisively and refuses. Then Ralph goes direct to the government officers and gives them the information. He conducts them to the secret retreat of the forgers, where all of their number are arrested, with the exception of Robert West. That worthy had so hurried up the wedding day that he expected to be the husband of Mrs. De Forest before the blow fell. But Ralph was just a few hours before hand. The officers arrested West while participating in a reception given by Mrs. De Forest, the evening before her marriage.

The shock completely unnerved that lady, and at first she looked on her son with revulsion; but time soon restored her normal mind and she was immeasurably thankful that his filial love had saved her from the false love of a villian.

"Voodoo Vengeance"

Three-Part Release of the World's Best Film Company.

THOSE who like sensational pictures which touch on the primitive, with wild animals and savages, will like this picture for the story that it carries. That it will go strongly in a majority of houses is probably true. Those of quieter tastes, who prefer stories of today or yesterday, either, so long as they are of civilized communities, will find in the tropical backgrounds and in the photography much that will charm. It is hard for a Northerner to realize that in the United States, even in Southern Florida, there can be found so dense a tropical jungle that for an African setting it so well serves as the ideal. In the second reel of this picture there is a river scene, tinted, that is a work of art. So, also, in the third reel near the end, where the girl reared among savages journeys down stream with the man she has lured from civilization, there is a setting which stands out.

VOODOO VENGEANCE

Scene from "Voodoo Vengeance" (World's Best).

The story is of a religious sect of African fanatics described as Voodoos, whose practices the British government finally stopped. The opening is where a man and woman on the way to the gold district are set upon by savages and killed. Their little girl is taken captive and raised by the tribe, the priest of which is impersonated by Captain Jack Bonavita, the lion tamer. Twenty years later the government determines to put the Voodoos out of business and notifies the resident commissioner to carry out its desires. There is a conflict, and the Voodoos in order to avenge themselves for their defeat, instruct the girl to lure to the jungle the son of the commissioner that he may serve as a sacrifice to the Moon God. She succeeds in the attempt and hands him over to the tribe. Also she falls in love with him. While his family is searching for him young Yale escapes, and after many vicissitudes in the jungle, combating fever and wild animals, he is again captured. He is found by his father just in time to prevent his destruction by lions. He is taken home. The girl again goes to the settlement, finds the young man, and again she lures him into the jungle; this time she holds him.

THE SMALLWOODS IN NEW YORK.

Ray C. Smallwood, expert cameraman of the Universal West Coast Organization, and his wife, who in the world of motion pictures is known as Ethel Grandon, have arrived in New York City, having been called East by the very serious illness of Mrs. Smallwood's mother, Mrs. Edward S. Grandin. The many friends of the Smallwoods will be pleased to know that Mrs. Grandin has rallied wonderfully since her daughter's return, and is now on the road to complete recovery. Both Mr. Smallwood and Miss Grandon expect to work around New York this summer, for one of the Universal Eastern companies.

Laemmle Controls Universal.

Little Giant of the Independents Buys Horsley's Interests—Swanson Deposed and Supposed to Have Sold to Powers.

It would be a dull week that did not produce some new sensation in the game of film politics that has been associated with the conduct of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company since its inception a little over a year ago. That company has been a storm center and, when not putting something over on its competitors, it has had its own little internal squabbles. The contention has arisen over the question of control. After the first break when Kessel & Baumann separated themselves from the company, Pat Powers assumed the position of commander-in-chief, but his direction did not meet with favor among his associates and, upon the return of Carl Laemmle from Europe, he was deposed and Mr. Laemmle was put in control. Matters went smoothly for a while, but it was only for a while, and the next stir resulted in landing Pat Powers on the outside of the breastworks entirely, leaving Laemmle and W. H. Swanson in control, with David Horsley barely hanging on.

It could not be expected that Pat Powers would take defeat meekly. He did not, for he was hardly out before he began to frame up a game to put his former associates in the hole. It was a pretty deep hole that he digged for them, but they refused to fall into it. Though Powers had nothing left but the hole, he was not discouraged. Rumors had it at one time that he had secured an option on the stock of David Horsley and that he hoped to secure enough more to give him control of the company. Swanson and Laemmle were sticking tight, though the betting against them was strong.

For the past week the rumors began to grow stronger in Powers' favor, and it was hourly expected that an announcement would be made that he was "it" at the Universal. When asked by an acquaintance if he had secured control Mr. Powers said, no later than Tuesday last, that he had bought some Universal stock. This did not explain matters at the time, for it was believed that he had but taken advantage of the option he was supposed to have on the stock of David Horsley.

Thursday, June 12, the situation was cleared up by an authoritative announcement from the Universal offices that Mr. Carl Laemmle was in full control of the affairs of the company and that the business would proceed as usual without interruption.

The statement issued is to the effect that Mr. Laemmle has purchased the interests of David Horsley; that Mr. Swanson has been deposed from the position of vice-president and that he is supposed to have sold his holdings to P. A. Powers. It was said that Mr. Swanson had left the offices of the company with the message to his associates that he was going to Chicago on personal business and that, since his departure, all efforts to locate him had been futile. It was also stated that Mr. Burton Garrett, assistant secretary and second assistant treasurer of the company, was also absent and had not been located up to that time. Further statement was made by a representative of the company that some of the books of the company were missing from the safe, the stock book among them, so that it was not possible to ascertain what transfers of stock had been made, but it was believed that Mr. Swanson had sold his stock to Mr. Powers. A meeting of the company had been held, it was said; that Mr. Swanson had been deposed as vice-president, and that Mr. Garrett had been ousted from the offices he held. G. E. Kann has been elected assistant secretary and Joe Brandt elected assistant treasurer. Otherwise the roster of the company's officers remains the same with the exception of Swanson.

It is now believed, with Mr. Laemmle in sole control of the Universal, that the troubles of that company are over. All disturbing elements have been eliminated and the possibility of Mr. Powers obtaining the least measure of influence in the management of the company is so remote that it need not be taken into consideration. If this view of the situation proves to be correct the Universal Company is to be congratulated. Mr. Laemmle has proved, heretofore, that he is a real business builder and that he realizes the necessity of making good pictures. Undisturbed by contentious associates he should soon put the Universal product on a high plane.

KINEMACOLOR TO PRODUCE HISTORICAL DRAMAS.

William H. Hickey, European representative of the Kinemacolor companies of America and Canada, and general manager of the Natural Color Kinematograph Co. Ltd., of England, is in New York arranging a schedule of productions for the allied corporations. On Mr. Urban's Teddington estate, near Bushey Park, London, studios and a revolving stage have been erected, and it is proposed to reproduce a number of historic dramas amid characteristic English scenery.

Doings at Los Angeles

A Lively Budget of News From the Great Western Motion Picture Center Submitted by Our Correspondent.

CLOUDY weather, which has prevailed throughout Southern California for the last ten days, has interfered more or less with all the producing companies. There has been no rain, but blankets of dark gray clouds have hung across the sky, cutting down the light to such an extent that most of the companies feared to risk photographing lest they get flat and undertimed pictures. In the East where weather interruptions are normal a week or ten days of bad light would cause no comment, but out here where there is perfect light for nine or ten months in the year, a week of bad light evokes loud cries of woe from the producers.

Within the last week two of the most successful photoplay writers in this vicinity have given up the independence that belongs to a free lance and have contracted for the sale of their entire output for an indefinite period. William E. Wing, whose photoplays have been produced by the Biograph, the Western Vitagraph, Selig, Kinemacolor, Keystone and several other companies, signed a contract with William Selig, just before that individual left for Chicago, under which he agrees to write for the Selig Polyscope Company within the next year a number of scripts just about equal to his producing capacity. William M. Ritchey, another writer whose stories have been produced regularly by companies working in this field, has taken the position of scenario editor for the Western branch of the Lubin Company, under Wilbert Melville. Ritchey was formerly city editor of the Los Angeles Express.

Not content with being an exhibitor, a manufacturer and a director, "Billy" Horne has now broken into the ranks of the scenario writers. "The Tug of War," a comedy now being made by the Biograph Company, is a product of his brain. Horne is proprietor of Horne's Popular Picture Palace, principal owner of the Seltagraph Motion Picture Company, and an occasional director of Seltagraph releases, none of which has been released yet.

Edwin August, who recently left the Universal Company in order to join the Western Vitagraph players under Rollin S. Sturgeon at Santa Monica, has returned to the Universal studio at Hollywood. Now he is no longer an actor, however, but a director. The principal condition upon which he went back, aside from increased salary, was that he should have a company of his own. Mary Charleson, one of the clever actresses of the Vitagraph pictures, went with him to be his leading woman.

There have been more changes among the directors at the Universal studios. E. H. Grandon, who directed a traveling Lubin company at Glendale until it was disbanded several weeks ago, and who then went to the Universal, has dropped out after making three or four pictures and is about to return East. Francis Ford, who made his reputation as a producer of big spectacular pictures with the New York Motion Picture Company, and who has been directing Bison brand releases for the Universal for the last six months, is now "at liberty." Frank Montgomery is again directing Bisons for the Universal. He resigned about a month ago and organized a company of his own to produce a series of Western features, with Mona Darkfeather as the star, but before his first picture was finished the Universal tempted him back.

Despite the bad weather of the last week, Wilbert Melville, head of the Lubin Western branch, has just finished a big Mexican war picture which called for 600 extra people in the battle scenes. It will be called "The Amber Cross" and, notwithstanding that the expense and the spectacular features were sufficient to have justified a two or three-reel production, it will be released as a single reel, making an unusually strong picture. Melville has disposed of the property at 4550 Pasadena Avenue, where the studio is now located, and within a month will begin work on a much larger and better studio in a new location, the whereabouts of which has not been announced yet.

June 1 came and went and found the Biograph company still in Los Angeles, although June 1 is the usual annual leaving date. Moreover, Griffith and Tony O'Sullivan are both engaged on big pictures which will probably keep them here another two weeks, and there is every possibility that the organization will not get away this year much before July 1.

Margaret Loveridge, formerly of the Biograph Company and more recently with the Selig organization, is playing leads in the dramatic pictures of the Majestic Company in Los Angeles.

Lem Parker, Selig director, has been called to Chicago by the death of his mother.

Jack LeSaint, formerly with the Imp and lately with the Kinemacolor, went to Selig as soon as he got his notice from the Kinemacolor Company.

* * *

The Kinemacolor studio at Hollywood is still closed, and the fact that most of the property is being packed and shipped East indicates that the closing is permanent, at least as far as Los Angeles is concerned. David Miles is preparing to go to New York and most of the other employees are trying to find places with the other motion picture companies in this field. There are a great many more people seeking positions in all the branches of motion pictures than there are positions. This is a bad time for motion picture people to come from the East looking for places.

William Paley, former cameraman for the old Nestor Company, has just completed the manufacture of a hand-made motion picture camera which is one of the finest machines ever seen in this city. Paley, it will be remembered, was injured while on a photographing trip for the Nestor Company, contracted blood poisoning and finally had to have one of his legs amputated just below the knee. He is now confined to an invalid's chair, but that has not prevented him employing his hands and making practical use of his profound knowledge of motion picture camera building, or of his fine skill as a workman. The new camera is valued at $300, which is ridiculously cheap considering its excellencies and the amount of time and work he devoted to the making of it. It is to be hoped that he will find a purchaser for this and subsequent machines, for it is the only means he has available to make a living.

The election of Judge H. H. Rose as Mayor of Los Angeles, on June 3, recalls the fact that Fred Mace, president of The Photoplayers, also ran.

* * *

Director Harry Matthews, of the "Powers Photo Plays, Inc.," company, has finished a three-reel production of "Sleeping Beauty." It has been decided that he shall produce a series of fairy tale pictures for adults as well as children. J. F. Macdonald, the other director of the "P. P. P. I." company, will stick to film productions of well-known classics like "Elsie Venner," which he is now producing.

Ernest Shipman, late of the "One Hundred Years of Mormonism" company, has gone East on a two months' business trip. He is after something, but he is too sly to talk about it until the papers have been signed, sealed and delivered.

P. M. POWELL.

THE RELIANCE TO STAR ROSEMARY THEBY.

Manager J. V. Ritchey of the Reliance has selected "The Tangled Web" as the drama in which to introduce Rosemary Theby as a new attraction in Reliance films. "The Tangled Web" is the work of Garfield Thompson and was one of several strong dramatic stories written expressly for this talented actress. It is in three reels and will be staged by Oscar C. Apfel.

Miss Theby will be starred in the production, playing the part of an adventuress, a strong emotional role, somewhat similar to several of the characters created by her for the Vitagraph Company.

After a much needed vacation, part of which was spent in St. Louis, Miss Theby started work under J. V. Ritchey's management on June 1st, and will be seen in at least one release every two weeks beginning at an early date.

ZUKOR ON WESTERN TRIP.

Adolph Zukor left New York last Sunday night on his way to the office of the Famous Players' Film Company in Chicago. It is rumored that Mr. Zukor has some unusual purpose in this sudden trip West, but what its significance is could not be learned. It is promised, however, that upon his return some interesting news may be forthcoming.

"Steam" (Kinemacolor).

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

AN old writer once said, "Curiosity and laziness are really good gifts of God because He means them to prod men into becoming human beings useful to their fellow creatures." The old monk lived several hundred years before either Watt and Stephenson and the invention of Kinemacolor, but he could not have fitted the cases of the two great inventors as told by Kinemacolor better if he had seen the photoplay, in which, in strict accordance with tradition, curiosity changes James Watt from a country dunce to the inventor of the steam engine, and laziness starts George Stephenson's mind working on the idea of the locomotive.

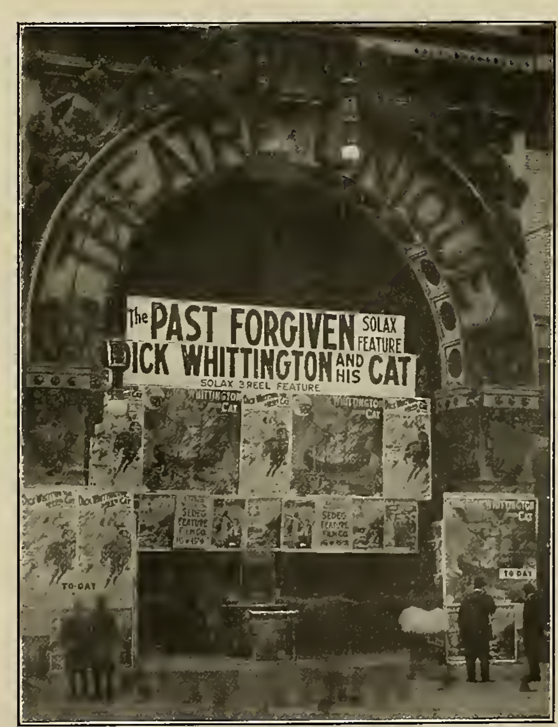
According to history, Watt was not the inventor of the steam engine, but its greatest improver. Steam as a motive power was known in the first and second centuries A. D., and was used as such in England as early as 1663. In 1705, Newcomen, Callen and Savery patented their engine which was the first to have a beam and to employ the instantaneous condensation of steam. In 1759, at the age of twenty-three, while connected with the University of Glasgow, Watt began experimenting on a steam carriage. In 1769, while repairing the university's Newcomen engine he invented and patented his separate condenser and from then until 1800 he added improvement to improvement on the old Newcomen machine until he had embodied all the essential features of the modern steam engine.

Watts and His First Steam Engine.

Stephenson and His First Locomotive.

Bearing these facts in mind, Kinemacolor has rendered a great service to education in its apt and excellent portrayal of the romantic folktales that have sprung up around Watt and his invention, and the moral value of the tradition as pointed up in the photoplay is just what teachers and educators want. Stupidity is often only genius driven the wrong way and a good girl's sympathy will often accomplish what all the rods and dunce caps in the world are ineffectual in bringing about. Watt gets his inspiration when he sticks the potato on the spout of the tea kettle and sets the kettle top to bobbing up and down, and he works it out to a practical result because he wants to marry his childhood sweetheart, the only one who sympathized and believed in him when he was ridiculed at school and cuffed at home. George Stephenson gets his inspiration when he gets tired of pushing an ore car, and he preserves until successful because his sweetheart and wife cheers him with her sympathy and leaves him the legacy of a son to be educated, so that he might become one of the greatest bridge builders in the world. The story of Watt starts with the surreptitious but vain efforts of his girl sweetheart to save him from having to wear the dunce cap, and ends with his bride to be and himself seeing in the glowing embers visions of the engine that was to make their happiness an actuality. Stephenson's story begins with the lazy boy wondering why he cannot put Watt's engine on wheels and make it do his work for him and ends with the inventor and his son dreaming of the mile a minute limited speeding across the plains of Western America. The visions in both cases are extremely well done, the first is artistic in the highest degree and the second is one of the best pictures of an express train running at high speed that we have ever seen.

Both stories lend themselves aptly to the peculiar genius of the Kinemacolor process, and the production of the picture is all that can be desired. The photography is excellent and the quaint costumes and settings make beautiful pictures; while the faithful and accurate reproduction of Watt's and Stephenson's engines both in model and working forms are instructive and illuminative in the highest degree. As a contribution to popular science and as a pleasing and elevating photoplay the release should take the first rank. It is now being run at the Carnegie Lyceum.



SOLAX FEATURE AT THE UNIQUE TWO DAYS.

Fourteenth Street, New York, has been called by theater managers "a hot-bed of competition." And to attract business they try to out-do each other in matters of display advertising and feature programs. Fourteenth Street "eats" features alive. The feature exchangeman cannot serve them up fast enough. The above cut shows what the managers do with the front of their house when they secure a big feature.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

"THE INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN" (which is the official organ of the American Federation of Musicians), on page 9 of its May issue, has an article entitled "Music Machines." In the course of this very interesting and timely article it says: "Music machines are beginning to displace orchestras in the cheaper theaters." . . . and "This is a problem that must be faced and solved. Somebody must manipulate these machines. Insist that such operators must be qualified members of the A. F. of M."

I am moved to this partial quotation through having recently witnessed a demonstration of the Bertola Keyboard Attachment for Pianos. I want to say right here in the beginning that this keyboard is not an attachment in the true sense. It is entirely separate from the piano, but is merely placed in a position convenient for manipulation by the pianist. As a matter of fact, it could be played without a piano. So many music machines are a combination of piano, organ, etc., that I believe this point is worth notice. A small keyboard containing thirty notes (two octaves and a half) is mounted on a standard. This is not attached to the piano remember, but stands on the floor convenient to the pianist's right hand. The keyboard can be swung over the piano keys when wanted and swung back out of the way when not in use. On the floor in front of the pedals is a board containing other keys or pedals connecting with drums and various traps (crash, thunder sheet, auto-horn, tom-tom, etc.), which are manipulated by the feet. The organ is a real organ consisting of two sets of pipes voiced to "violin" and "flute" stops respectively. These pipes are of the best quality (being 90 per cent. tin), and their volume and tonal quality are exactly the same as a similar section from a good pipe organ. Although the other attachments are good, this organ section is the one great big musical feature which will make the Bartola Keyboard unique among music machines. Having a good piano already in his theater, any manager who installs the "Bartola Keyboard" only needs a good pianist to insure high-class music. This attachment is not a toy. Its effects are not "cheap," but of good, solid quality. The drums are played by the feet—the bass drum by the left foot, the small drum by the right. They can be made to play soft or loud at will. This applies also to the xylophone, orchestra bells, chimes, and marimba, which are likewise attached to the keyboard. The different instruments are in separate cases, which may be placed adjacent to the piano or in various parts of the theater. They are run by a current of low voltage which is supplied from a storage battery. This battery is kept "stored" by a motor generator which is started and stopped automatically by the playing of the instruments. The full quota is given as follows: "Pipe-organ, xylophone, orchestra bells, marimba, chimes, bass drum, small drum, tom-tom, triangle, cymbal, thunder sheet, and auto horn." These can be played all at the same time along with or without the piano; in any combination with or without the piano. The combinations are infinite in variety. The "violin" stop in the organ section really partakes more of the character of the oboe or high register of a cello to my way of thinking. At any rate, it is possible to get a very good Oriental musette effect on the upper notes of this stop; also an imitation of bagpipes.

Combined with the flute stop a big rich tone is produced which, when accompanied by the piano and drums, gave an excellent orchestral effect. When all the instruments and traps are played together, the volume is sufficient for any ordinary theater. Now, Mr. Exhibitor, when you install the "Bartola Keyboard Attachment," don't make the mistake of thinking it will do all the work; get a good pianist to operate it, as it is a really good instrument and deserves a chance. A pianist does not need to "learn" this instrument; in a few moments he can familiarize himself with the situations of the different levers which are all convenient to his hand, and that is all there is to it. But the combinations and effects possible to a good performer are worth the extra money.

A Correction.

A slight mix-up happened to my letter in the issue of May 31st. Under the title, "An Exciting Honeymoon," the caption "Part One" and numbers 1 and 2 are correct; the remainder of this reel will be found in the next column under Part Two, numbers 3, 4 and 5 respectively. The caption "Part Two" belongs at the head of the second column, the first number in the second reel being "I'd Like to Go On a Honeymoon," and ending with number 9, "On the Mississippi."

"A Splendid Scapegrace"; first three numbers correct. The remainder will be found under caption "Part One" of "An Exciting Honeymoon." Begin with No. 4, "Agitato pp. and mf." and so on until No. 12, "Religioso until finish."

"The Courage of a Soldier" is correct to and including No. 7. The remainder will be found under "A Splendid Scapegrace" No. 8, "Indian music again, etc.," and so on to finish. Accidents will happen in the best regulated printing offices and please note that it seldom happens in this.

Mr. Roy H. Metcalf, of the Empress Theater, Missoula, Mont., submits the following: "One of the most interesting features in the Moving Picture World to me, and no doubt to many other musicians, is the 'Music for the Picture' page. I only regret that it does not appear each week and that more musicians do not take advantage of the opportunity to help others by offering suggestions.

"Music for the picture is second in importance only to the picture itself—many of the patrons of the photoplay place the music first." [They should not if the pictures are all they should be.—Ed.]

"Every live manager is now demanding that the musical accompaniments for his pictures shall be of the best and many houses are spending more for the musical end of the game than for the pictures."

[That probably accounts for it; I am a strenuous advocate of good music and good pictures, and believe that correct music enhances the value of the picture, but I do not protest against the fine concert program with pictures as a side issue. Not that I think Bro. Metcalf is arguing in favor of this proposition, but I have met a few exhibitors in the past who did and still do, and here is a good chance to get in my little knock.—Editor.]

"There are still some who are emphatic in their assertions that an orchestra cannot properly fit music to the picture. There is no question but that a pianist, either alone or with the assistance of a good drummer, has possibly a greater opportunity to work out his pictures in detail than a number of musicians playing together, but I believe most orchestra leaders have demonstrated that it is possible to follow the picture quite effectively and at the same time give the public more pleasing music than a pianist can. We are using a string orchestra and pipe organ, adding drums or brass according to the requirements of the picture. In changing every day it is almost impossible to rehearse our program with the pictures as should be done; however, we do so on special releases. In featuring the music for pictures, the manager prepares slides which are shown before each reel announcing the name of the next picture and the musical numbers which are used for accompaniment. The music loving patrons are loud in their praise of this arrangement.

"We recently showed the Reliance feature, 'The Bawler-out,' in three parts; also a Keystone comedy. Below is the program used for that day: 'Liebesgarten' (Schumann), 'Humoreske' (Dvorak), 'Serenade' (Drdla), 'Solvejg's Song' (Greig), 'To Spring' (Greig), 'La Boheme, Fantasia' (Puccini), 'Salut D'Amour' (Elgar), 'Echoes of the Operas' (Arr. by Reckers), 'Love is the only Thing in Life' (Helf), selections from 'A Modern Eve' and 'The Fortune Teller.'"

This is a splendid program musically; unfortunately I did not see the picture in question, so cannot pass as to its fitness in regard to detail. Many leaders strive to carry out the general atmosphere of the picture rather than try to work to every little detail. This on the whole is much the safer plan, for as Mr. Metcalf says, it is difficult for an orchestra to follow closely to details. Some leaders "humor" the scenes without changing the piece of music. Unless done with skill this is risky, although I have known violinists who could so vary the music at times by means of retard, accelerate, diminish, crescendo, etc., that their work was a joy to hear. This, of course, in certain scenes where the contrasts were not too pronounced. It would hardly hold good in all situations.—Editor.

"Half a Chance"

A Vigorous Three-Reel Reliance.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is a lot of warm blood in this production, and, if compaprisons have any significance, it ranks at the top of Reliance features I have seen. In the first place, there is a story by an author who is very much alive. It portrays a clearly-defined leading character to whom sympathetic interest becomes instinctively attached; it sets forth his distinguishing traits and preserves them to the end; it utilizes incident to bring out his passions and emotions, and it hinges on his fierce struggle upward to some definite end. It contains that breath of life which only the craftsman knows how to inject into a pictured phase of human existence.

Both author and his work are unknown to me—the photodrama visualizes a Bobbs-Merrill novel—but the motive is sociological in pointing to the power of circumstances, the necessity of opportunity and to education as the principal form of opportunity by which man rises above mere desire to exist to intellectual control of his forces. The theme is one so well suited to dramatic uses and admits of so many thousands of delightful variations that the only astonishing thing about it is its rare appearance in screen presentations. No scenario editor need worry about the fact that it has been done before—it has as many diverse forms as there are interesting human careers.

"Half a Chance" begins with an extreme, though not at all improbable, incident which proves to be a corrective turning point in the life of a dissipated pugilist, a powerful man known as "Frisco Pet." He becomes obstreperous in a low joint and is thrust into the room of a dissolute adventuress to sleep off his drunk. That good old stage prop, the "degenerate nobleman," now appears, quarrels with the adventuress, and she is accidentally killed in the scuffle. "Frisco Pet" is falsely accused, convicted, and deported on a convict ship. The ship is wrecked, and the convict saves a pretty little girl. He is cast away on a desert isle—moss-covered—finds a case of books and studies law.

While I do not favor this entirely new educational system, it presents a unique method of transforming a pug into a practitioner and it might not be a bad plan to try on some of our New York police inspectors. If there were only enough desert isles in the Pacific Ocean, we could maroon our aldermen, senators and other representatives of the people there, each with a case of books to live on, and enjoy ourselves in a period of relative tranquility while they were becoming regenerated. Anyway, somehow-or-other, "Frisco Pet" equips himself by self-instruction, so that he rises above those who merely graduate from institutions of learning and successfully fights his way to social position—he wins the little girl he pulled out of the sea, and liberty. In fact, he becomes one of the greatest criminal lawyers in The United Wigdom.

Mr. Apfel is to be congratulated upon overcoming many difficulties in the visualization of the story, upon his artistic settings and upon his admirable selection of types. The cast is excellent straight through, and the role of "Frisco Pet," played by George Seigman, is a masterly interpretation. The part is one requiring tremendous physical strength in combination with fine personality, but it is splendidly performed from beginning to end. The tout ensemble is a long step upward.

Frank E. Montgomery, who is now producing films featuring his wife, Mona Darkfeather, in Indian pictures, has taken the name "Mona" for his brand.

BRITISH NOTES.

By Our Own Correspondent.

The King and Queen saw "Quo Vadis?" at the Albert Hall in London last week and constantly expressed admiration at the production. Moving picture exhibitions or, in fact, anything connected with such, done on a large scale, are traditionally of interest to Americans, and a few observations on what is undoubtedly the largest show in this country should be of outstanding interest.

Last Saturday's audience of 25,000 people, for instance, is something of a record, but this crowd, it must be remembered, cannot be accommodated every afternoon as the hall is used for other purposes on intermediate occasions. This means that in order to shut out the light from the glass roof over four miles of black cloth, fifty inches wide, has to be continually taken down and put back. The size of the screen is 40 feet by 35 feet and it is supported by steel hawsers. The length of the "throw" is 212 feet, which means that the picture on the film is magnified much more than a quarter of a million times when it appears on the screen.

The president of the American Mutual Film Corporation, Mr. H. E. Aitken, and his sister, is at present in London on business. His visit, however, is only of the "flying" order and most of his time is occupied with the "Mutual's" British agents.

The Clarendon Company has succumbed to the prize competition craze and the noted English firm are offering prizes for criticisms of their productions. In journalistic circles there is a persistent rumor that a London daily newspaper of some prominence is considering the advisability of offering £1,000 for the best scenario.

The Warner Feature Film Company of New York appear to be enlarging their British agency. They have suddenly sprung to renewed activity here in the advertising and renting of their features.

Mr. G. E. Bennett, a picture theater proprietor of Slough, is shortly to be decorated for bravery at a recent fire. He rescued his operator from the blazing box.

A deputation of prominent exhibitors interviewed the Home Secretary the other day and pointed out to him the grievances and injustices suffered by managers and proprietors of theaters through extreme local legislation. The case of Liverpool was cited in particular where the restrictions are particularly drastic. Here the hours of opening, as well as the attendance of children, are limited and it is possible for a policeman to walk in out of the street and censor any film he may think unfit.

Sir Hubert von Herkomer, the Royal Academician, has, at last, formed a film producing company bearing his name and the first releases are announced within a month. "I shall arrange every scene myself and shall personally select the actors and retouch the films," he says. "The pictures will be taken in my own theater and I shall try to get French people to act for me. No other can approach them in the art of expressing emotion without speech." This seems a strange procedure for an "all-British" enterprise.

Dr. Wm. Martin, a Shakespearian lecturer, praises the photoplay as a means of teaching adults the art of gesture and of children better manners.

Sir A. Conan Doyle has, I am told, written a long letter of congratulation to the Kalem Company on the pictorial production of his detective drama featuring Detective Burns.

What is ultra-Kinematography? Prof. Wm. Stirling, scientist, of Manchester University, defines it as the slowing down of the machine to permit of the study of the movements of the moving objects on the screen. This fearsome term with so simple a meaning is particularly applicable to scientific and medical films.

I reported some time ago that the London County Council had decided to install moving pictures in some of their schools for educational purposes. A grant of £200 was made at the time, but now the whole motion has been rescinded. It appears that it was discovered by the authorities that the amount sanctioned would not properly equip one school, much less several.

A singular move is being contemplated by the Newcastle exhibitors. They are endeavoring to induce the civic authorities to grant no further licenses for moving picture theaters. It is thought in some quarters that this is an attempt to make the kinema business like the saloon—a kind of tied down trade.

Mr. Cherry Kearton's American scenic pictures form part of this week's feature programme at the Palace Theater, London. Those of the Yellowstone Park are creating a great furore and I should say that if this section could be separately released as a scenic it would be sure of an enormous sale.

American moving picture heroines have all unwittingly assumed a new role. They have, it appears, become arbiters of fashion in millinery for the English suburban and seaside girl. The big white flip-flap straw hat is here termed the picture hat because it seems to be almost invariably worn by the heroines of American-made films. As a result, London millinery establishments are busy stocking their windows and shops with this particular type of headgear.

England, but in particularly London, is experiencing a boom in home produced pictures. The Clarendon Company are about to release a masterly new feature written by the Marchioness Townshend entitled "The House of Mystery," and it was probably this all-British subject which evoked a London newspaper into a sudden and voluptuous burst of enthusiasm over the patriotic producer.

Last week-end a film store in Leeds was entirely burnt out in less than five minutes. Considerably over half a million feet of American subjects were destroyed.

The United States consul in London has provided one or two interesting statements respecting the methods of shipping films from American makers to English agencies. At Lyons in the south of France, a huge new factory for the sole purpose of film printing is being established.

PICTURES IN YUCATAN.

According to the United States Consul, moving pictures are very popular with the inhabitants of Yucatan, which is a part of Mexico. In Merida, the capital of Yucatan, there is one large theater which exhibits pictures for about ten months of the year. There are a number of the open air shows, consisting of a number of chairs and an open courtyard. The bull ring, or place where the bullfights are held, when not being used for that purpose, is frequently used for picture shows. Prices range from 37 cents gold per person to $2.25 gold for boxes accommodating six persons. The open air theaters get five cents for ordinary shows and ten when the show is extra long. Exhibitions are given only at night, commencing at 8:30 and running until midnight, being composed of four parts or four separate shows. The films most in favor are French, Danish and Italian, but the American Indian and Wild West pictures are quite as popular.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE local daily newspapers are devoting more space to matters bearing upon the motion picture interests at the present time, than they have during any period since the censorship question was under discussion last fall, and the indications are that equal, if not more, attention to the subject will be given by them during the next few months. Some people are trying to make them a political issue to a more or less extent. For this there is absolutely no reason. The entire matter hinges upon the adoption of regulations for the motion pictures. It is a business matter. The fact that the Board of Aldermen have not acted, as many think they should, and that their actions or inactivity is responsible for the rupture between them and the mayor, cannot be construed as a party measure, and it is earnestly hoped that no one will increase the injustice that has been heaped upon the motion picture people by dragging the pictures into politics.

The situation has assumed such a sharp aspect that the mayor has expressed the opinion that some of the Board of Aldermen should be indicted for their votes on the last motion picture ordinance they adopted, and which he vetoed; and one of the leading daily newspapers has declared editorially, that the mayor is a good lawyer and if his belief is as stated, he should have no trouble in securing a moving picture ordinance with the aid of the District Attorney and Grand Jury. In some quarters this has been construed as a suggestion for political purposes, which is absurd. Why should political significance be attached to this form of the situation? It is not an intimation of a method by which certain members of the Board of Alderman may ultimately be removed from office to make room for others, as many are foolishly assuming, but a very sensible suggestion by which certain aldermen, regardless of party ties, can be forced to set aside self-interest, decided upon something that will remove the uncertainty that warps the ambition of the motion picture exhibitors, and works an injustice upon them by putting on the shelf measures that would enable them or more fully comply with what appears to be the desire of the people at large. The suggestion made is identical with that followed in connection with the taxicab ordinance, and no sensible person will assume that that ordinance was a political issue.

Unfortunately quite a number of the motion picture exhibitors are blind to their own interests, through party affiliations, and fail to see that they are suffering through the failure to get a sensible and fair adjustment of the ordinance question. It is frequently stated that every knock is a boost. This is not true when applied to motion pictures. Every knock against them having a semblance of truth makes it so much more difficult for the exhibitors in certain quarters to hold their patrons. Take, for instance, a declaration by Mayor Gaynor in a recent interview that appeared in the Evening World. After stating that certain aldermen substitute private interests for the public interests they are elected to protect, the mayor adds the aldermen have practically put a mortgage on the amusements of the poor. "And for this the people pay enormous interest in the form of foul air, fire traps and crowded conditions." It will be seen that the exhibitors are under indictment through no fault of their own, but because those having power to enable them to remedy the conditions will not do so, and while that indictment stands, a weapon remains in the hands of certain people to annoy and persecute them at will. It is also reasonable to assume that while the indictment stands, a certain quota of the people are more than likely to withhold their patronage from the places to which it may apply.

Unfortunately the present period is one leading up to a Mayorality election and any endorsement of what the present Mayor does or says in connection with the motion picture situation may be greedily seized by some in support of their argument that the Mayor is endorsed for political purposes. It is hoped there are people who can lay aside party considerations for a time and give disinterested and unprejudiced thought to some of the statements the Mayor has made. If this can be done the Board of Aldermen will soon get to work and free the exhibitors from their embarrassing situation.

* * *

By cutting out that part of the vetoed ordinance that provided for galleries in the houses of 600 capacity, the Mayor claims, the ordinance was practically killed because it gave the houses a capacity of 450 instead of 600 and 400 instead of 300, as one-fourth of the capacity was allotted to the galleries. Upon this statement it is clear that the aldermen were not giving the exhibitors that to which they had a right to assume they were entitled to under the ordinance. It is safe to say that the majority of the houses to be benefited by the proposed ordinance could not increase their capacity much beyond the 300 limit without the installment of galleries.

A remark to this effect having been overheard by a party interested to a more or less extent in the faction that has been fighting the 600 capacity proposition, he made answer: "Well, let them be content with what they have and not try to jam galleries into hat boxes." It must be admitted that this argument is not without weight in a general sense. But let us weigh carefully what the Mayor has said and we cannot avoid the conclusion that if the proposed ordinance had not been vetoed the exhibitors forced to be content with what they had would have been driven out of business altogether. The commission which the Mayor appointed to frame an ordinance discovered that in order that the expense of the requirements of their proposed ordinance with respect to ventilation and safeguards against loss of life could be borne, the places should be permitted to accommodate more than 300 persons. See the complexion the situation is now given? Heretofore many people have assumed that the increased capacity proposition was a selfish motive creation on the part of the exhibitors. Their thanks are due to the commission that was intelligent and fair enough to give them a chance to escape annihilation by giving them an opportunity to get sufficient revenue to meet the expense of alterations and improvements which the ordinance would have required.

Although considerable printer's ink has been expended in getting discussions for and against the vetoed ordinance before the public, one important point has escaped attention. There was a beautiful chance for real estate speculation in the event of the ordinance being signed. It is said that Mayor Gaynor touched upon it, but not in such a manner that he can be quoted. In order to get increased capacity and make provision for the exit and other regulations, the owners of a great many of the houses would have been compelled to acquire adjoining property. In many instances it would have been necessary to double the ground floor space. It is unofficially stated that the Mayor contended that in this respect the ordinance would have been a discrimination against the exhibitors by compelling them to purchase adjoining properties at whatever price the holders might ask, or go out of business. Several exhibitors have stated that such would have been their predicament. They are ready to comply with any reasonable regulation demanded by the public and would have been able to comply with the regulations of the proposed ordinance had the gallery provision been permitted to stand. If, however, they had been driven to acquire adjoining property the financial aspect of affairs would have given many of them no alternative but to get out of the business.

It may be true that many of the small places are distressing in respect to ventilation and safety against fire and panic, but why pound the owners of such places who stand ready to remedy the evils on an equitable basis? Why inflame the public mind against them when their hands are tied by miscarriage of intelligence, honesty of purpose and justice? Yes, the evils must be wiped out—but how? Well, what is the matter with the taxicab route?

AMERICAN USES PACIFIC FLEET IN PICTURES.

The North Dakota, one of the Pacific Fleet now maneuvering off Santa Barbara, was used in a picture last week. Some splendid scenes were made through the courtesy of the cruiser's officers who loaned themselves to the task of showing how a shangshaied man is taken from a vessel. The pet parrot and pet monkey of the Dakota, well known in naval circles, were also used in the same subject. Some Memorial Day features of the fleet's visit were utilized in the same picture.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Advertising Films.

BEFORE the thing goes much further, let's have a good, square talk about the advertising film. It's creeping up, and it is time that the situation was looked over.

There are two kinds of advertising films. One is the kind the exchange charges you rental on and the other is the kind someone pays you to run for them.

You do not like the first because you do not get the money for it but, on the contrary, you have to pay rental on the film for the pleasure of advertising somebody's bacon or someone else's soap.

Why do you do it? You are paying the exchange for pictures, not for advertising matter. Why do you let them pass it along to you? They had to pay for the reel themselves, but what is that to you? If they are fools enough to pay nine cents a foot for stuff that a manufacturer has already been paid for making, that is nothing to you. If they like to get taken in and swindled, let them, but refuse to let them pass it along to you. If every exhibitor had sense enough to make it plain that he would, not take a comedy based on Teddy's Tooth Wash or Jenk's Soothing Syrup, the makers of these preparations would stop writing checks for manufacturers who make the films.

It doesn't interest you that the exchange gets stung or that the Blank Film Manufacturing Company got $5,000 for advertising dessicated breakfasts. The only point that interests you is that your audience is paying you for the privilege of looking at photoplays and they will stop when they can't tell whether you'll have plays or paid advertisements on your films. You, on your part, are paying for pictures and getting stuff that properly belongs in the back part of the magazines.

If you keep on showing these veiled advertisements, the patrons will feel that they are being swindled and will stay away. It does not matter how skillfully the advertisement is hidden in a story. If Jinks comes home tired to find the baby crying and must walk the floor until his wife gets a bottle of Knockout Soothing Syrup, the audience may laugh at the comedy, but afterwards they will remember that there was a bust picture shown twice during the five hundred feet, just a hand holding a bottle of the well known baby pacifier, and they will be sore at you because they will feel that you were a party to the plot. They went to see pictures and you gave them soothing syrup that did not sooth.

Bunch Your Kick.

Make it plain to your exchange that you will not take these advertising pictures. Make it plain to the manufacturer that you will not run them. Get the league to make it plain to the National Advertisers that exhibitors are not blind fools, and the practice will stop.

That it is a growing practice is not to be denied. Both the Licensed and Independent makers have foolishly sought to deal double and get paid twice for their film. Something must be done to check the scheme In England the exhibitors got together after a fashion and stopped the practice, refusing even such a mild advertisement as the multiple reel gotten out in behalf of the London Daily Mail. In some ways it was a good subject—but it was an advertisement and instead of renting the reels the Mail had to offer to loan them free and had trouble even then, while a three reel subject prepared by a beef extract company fell flat.

It was not that these two subjects were in themselves poor. They were well made, not without interest, and widely advertised, but the advertising film had become a nuisance and the whole practice was abolished.

We are arriving at the point over here when the use of the advertising picture is getting to be a nuisance, with the practice on the increase. The time to stop it is right NOW.

On the Other Foot.

Now put the shoe on the other foot. Some advertisers are more honest. They offer the frankly advertising reel and will give you from five to fifty dollars a day to run the reel in your house.

That's money you get, not the manufacturer, and it seems to change the situation.

Does it?

You still have the duty you owe your patrons. You still owe it to them to give a good performance and not clutter up your program with one or more reels of advertising matter. It is not only a duty you owe them but a duty you owe yourself. The motion picture exhibitor is no longer an itinerant showman with what our English cousins call a fit-up. The store show is going into the discard. Your own show will follow it if you yield to temptation and make ten dollars today and lose trade worth ten dollars a week every week. You cannot hold your patrons if you swindle them, and you swindle them if you coax them in to see plays and then try to force from one to three reels of advertising stuff on them. The man who came in to see a certain picture doesn't want to sit for twenty minutes or an hour watching "Blakes Three Dollar Shoes from Hide to Heel." He wants to see the pictures he came to see. When he wants shoes he'll read the advertisements in the magazines or look in the store windows. It doesn't matter that you have three reels of real pictures and show them. The patron is swindled if he comes in to see pictures and is given advertising matter in addition. If he gets advertising with his magazine he can ignore those pages, but he cannot escape the advertising film. He can only sit there and curse you for a thief of his time or get up and go out cursing you for a thief of his admission money. In either case you have swindled a man who put his trust in you, but who is not very apt to do it again.

You never looked at it in just that light, did you? That is precisely what it means. You have lied to your patron and you have swindled him. You cannot expect to hold your trade with that sort of a business policy, can you?

The worst of it is that the results are not clearly and immediately apparent. People will keep on coming to see the pictures. They will take a chance, and you'll think that nothing has happened.

You'll know better when the sheriff comes around or you have to sell out to someone and get into some other business, declaring that there is no money in pictures any more. There is money in pictures and there will continue to be money in pictures, but show pictures and do not sell your audience out to every Tom, Dick and Harry that comes along with a reel of film in one hand and a five dollar bill in the other.

Respect Your Business.

Have respect for your business even if you have none for yourself. Take a pride in your house, in your attendance, in your program. Do your own small share toward putting the pictures where they belong. One of the large theatrical firms is going to tour the country with the "Quo Vadis" reels next winter. They will put advertisements in the program, where they belong, but they will not break into the story of Lydia with a half reel corset ad or flash a slide that the bull Ursus kills represents a well known brand of smoking tobacco.

Be a manager, not merely an exhibitor. Run a theater, not a store show. No matter what the size of your house, run it like a theater. Keep it clean physically and morally. Sweep the floor and the audience.

Lots of people still think that a man who runs a picture show must be a low browed scallawag who runs a recruiting station for the brothels. Show them you are not that sort and run your house so that no matter when the doubting investigator comes he will at once perceive his mistake. It's bad enough to have to show some of the stuff the exchange sends you without making it worse with advertising stuff.

Fight the advertising reel whether you or the manufacturer gets the money. Run a theater, not a bill board, and you'll be treated like a manager instead of a bill poster.

Writing Editorials.

C. T. Smithers is writing an editorial for each issue of his Idle Hour Educator, published in conjunction with his theater in Aberdeen, S. D. This is going some, but Mr. Smithers was a newspaper man once and he can write readable stuff. Five years ago the person who dared suggest that in time photoplay theaters would issue actual papers with sound editorial matter would have been hooted down, but there are dozens of lively sheets and now comes one with a real editorial page. On top of that he is going after outside advertising and there seems to be no reason why he should not get it.

Pearce Notes.

The Pearce New Orleans program gives considerable space to the opening of the Tudor, their new theater there. The announcement is singularly free from loud talk and sounds convincing. It is to make its appeal to the higher grade of patronage and this announcement is in harmony with that policy. The arrangement of their house organ could be much improved typographically. It is a pity that this is not done, since in other ways the result is so good. Some of the suggestions offered have been accepted with improvement to the paper as a whole. We think that a more cheerful color for the cover would help a lot.

Likes His Bill.

R. H. Redus, of the Elite, West Point, Miss., likes a recent throwaway his printer got out for him. It advertised "The Power of the Cross" as the star feature and we don't blame him for being proud of it. It is good work to come out of a small town job office. The cross is formed of eight point border and all of the type matter lies inside the outline of the cross. The advertisement is twice as effective this way as though the white spaces were filled in. Half of advertising lies in knowing what to put on a bill and the other half lies in knowing what to keep out.

Two Whole Pages.

The Arcade theater, Tientsin, China, takes two whole pages in the Pekin and Tientsin Times to advertise the Carnegie Alaska-Siberia pictures. Naturally North China was interested in these pictures and considerable of a display was made, four and eight page pamphlets in English and one in Chinese supplementing the big display. The films were shown for five nights and one matinee, the night prices being $2 and $1.50 (Mexican, probably) and at the matinee $1 and 50c. There was a troupe of girls presenting two numbers and music was supplied by the string band of the Fifteenth United States Infantry.

We have not heard much from the Arcade of late, but it is evident that it is not because they are not still hustling.

How About It?

We are still waiting to hear someone make a noise about that Photoplay Theater Press Club. Not even Jack Nash has sat up and answered "Present" to the roll call. We don't want to start it and we are not going to try, but it seems to this writer that if the publishers of the local house organs would get together, they could get some of the national advertising. The advertising agency that handles the big stuff is not going to bother with a lot of two and three thousand circulation sheets, but it might place an advertisement through one central agency that could offer 250,000 circulation weekly, no matter how it might be cut up.

Not a Joke.

The Weekly Bulletin of the Pearce Theater, New Orleans, edited by Benny Pulitzer, has in a recent issue a short catechism of motion pictures. It is intended to be humorous, but there are a couple of bits of wisdom as well. One question reads:

> What can a manager save by getting cheaper film service?
> Tickets.

There it is in a nutshell. Cut down the cost of the films and you cut down the number of tickets you sell and a thousand roll may last twice as long as before. If you pay ten dollars less for service and your receipts fall off fifteen dollars, where is the saving?

That's food for thought for some of those who contemplate cutting down for the summer. Summer is just the time to hustle hardest to save the business you need. That keeps them regulars at your house all next winter.

Try This, Too.

One thing we most decidedly do like in the poster is this line across the top:

> We are pleased to inform the public we are members of the Exhibitors' League of America.
> The League's object is to give the best pictures always.

Try it in your own advertising matter and show that the League does stand for what is good. You may need the support of the public some time when some freak or "hold-up" legislation threatens. Begin the education of the voters now; right this minute.

Claims Copyright.

Bertram I. Williams, of Ponca City, claims copyright on "motofilmic," "Motofilm" and kindred words. It's not up to us, but we are willing. Here is the latest:

Motofilmic Offering
La Magnifique

It's a shame to leave a man like that to wilt away in a place like Ponca City, Oklahoma. He explains that he set the sheet when he didn't have much to do and it looks it. There is about a mile and a half of rule and border work on one eight by ten dodger. It's good work, too, for Williams is a union printer as well as a union electrician and union operator.

We don't believe he really is a printer for he sends an invitation he sent out and it is not in old English but eighteen point type shaded. If your printer has it, try it some time when you want to suggest engraved play work without the formal lettering of Engravers' Shaded. It doesn't cost any more to get good type than it does to get the old hackneyed stuff. Spend a few dollars for type yourself if your printer will not—or change to an enterprising printer.

Mr. Williams' work shows what a practical man can do when he gets in front of a type case. He knows the type and he knows what the photoplay theater wants.

Where Credit Is Due.

We take pleasure in printing this letter from L. W. McChesney, Advertising Manager of the General Film Company:

> On page 587 of your May 10th issue appears an article entitled "Pie and Pictures." In it special mention is made of an advertisement used by Josiah Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans, to compare the value of 5 cent and 10 cent shows.
> While our relations with the exhibitors in question are very pleasant, I think it only fair to Mr. Sargent and to the originator of the advertisement in question, to point out that it was first used in the Denver Sunday Post, in January. The enclosed clipping will substantiate that statement. W. W. Hodkinson, Special Representative for the General Film Company, is the originator of the idea, and with the writer, prepared the copy to exploit it.

The Pearce Company made no special claim as to the story. They send in their bright, little sheet each week and we comment on what we see. We saw this and credited it to the Pearce Company because the G. F. people were sound asleep. Now that Mr. McChesney has shown that he knows of this department, we hope that he will send his good things in first, instead of waiting until we find a reprint somewhere else.

Sometimes He Thinks.

The Majestic Theater, Bloomfield, Iowa, sends in some sample throwaways and wants an opinion. Our opinion is that sometimes the manager thinks up a bill and at other times just writes it. As an example, he had the Imp "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." He announced the reel and that King Baggot had the lead, and added:

> You cannot afford to miss out on seeing this great feature. It will interest you from start to finish. No doubt but what you have read the story of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Now see it in moving pictures.

But when he had the same company's "Kathleen Mavourneen," he thought this out:

> The Imp Company present a picture that will appeal to all of Irish blood—which means that it will have universal appeal; for Irish plays, like Irish songs, reach every heart. "Kathleen Mavourneen," the authorship of which is sometimes attributed to Dion Boucicault, has been done into a photoplay in three reels by Herbert Brenon. Mr. Brenon has builded carefully and well. For a foundation he created atmosphere. In his first scene it was noticeable. It was the interior of an Irish cabin. In his second it was marked. A bit of lane, with the low-roofed white buildings, mentally removes you to a little Irish village. And there you remain until the end of the play. It is a picture that will hold an audience—and send it home in a happy frame of mind.
> William Shay as Terence O'Moore, and Jane Fearnly as Kathleen Mavourneen, are at their best, supported by Frank Smith, Wm. Welch, Robert Ferguson, Fred Turner, and others.

We leave it to himself which would be most likely to get his own ten cents if he didn't happen to be running the house.

That he is alive to opportunity is shown in another section which announces that a complete performance will be given after the school commencement exercises.

A bill is worth just what business it can pull in. It is worth nothing if it does not pull business and the mere announcement of a subject is unlikely to rouse much interest. Make your paper talk. The idea of an advertisement is that you cannot get around and talk everyone into coming to see your show, so you put your talk on paper and get it around where you cannot go yourself. Make your paper talk, and talk interestingly.

Warning.

We hereby warn Jack Nash that we will not read his blamed old Isis News if he does not send it to us. We have had one issue in the last three weeks. Will he please take notice.

Now Stallings Has One.

A. L. Stallings, of the Angelus Theater, Spanish Forks, Utah, comes out with the Angelus News that is a twin sister to the Isis News. Evidently he is not superstitious for he has thirteen advertisements in the first issue. It would pay to cut the advertisements on the back page from the film announcements with the use of column rule. Otherwise the sheet is attractive and a credit to the management. Mr. Stallings says he is not wholly satisfied with the looks of the sheet, but that he has found out a lot of things. One thing he has probably found out is that he needs a blacker impression. On the paper he uses he could have gotten a better color. It will be issued every second week for the present.

Mr. Stallings is getting big business out of the "Mary" series. It would seem that this series has made more money for the managers, as a whole, than any series yet put out. He sends some samples of gelatine slides that we are passing on to Mr. Richardson, who shares our interest in such things. They are printed from cuts and type and should make splendid slides.

A recent accomplishment was an Educational Night (on a Saturday, at that), under the supervision of the Public Schools. The program included Lubin's "The Schoolmaster," Edison's "Love Among the Geysers" and some more strictly educational subjects.

Has a Separate Press Department.

The Turner and Dahnken circuit with theaters along the California Coast and headquarters in San Francisco, have put into practice a scheme we suggested while the Kehrleins were with them. They have a central press department with its own printing plant, which gets out all the printed matter for the circuit. All cuts, etc., are held in one place, one composition covers all houses and the house is entirely independent of printers. It is an excellent scheme and we are somewhat surprised that so few circuits follow the idea. We would like to hear from Melvin G. Winstock on this point.

Convincing Talk.

Here is convincing talk from the Casino Theater, Sydney, N. S. You may find it useful:

> WHILE THE COST OF LIVING HAS GONE UP THE PRICE OF GOOD AMUSEMENT HAS COME DOWN until today you get as much for a dime as you would ten years ago for twenty times that amount.
> THE CASINO MANAGEMENT HAS KEPT TABS on the cost of the program provided at "Canada's Best Picture Theater" during the last two weeks.
> IT WILL AMAZE YOU TO LEARN that to produce the 30 reels of pictures, shown in this theater in that period, required an outlay of $45,000. Getting the pictures from the manufacturer to the screen, together with the cost of orchestra, rent, heat, light, attendance, advertising, etc., amount to $800 more. The total cost for two weeks was $45,800.
> This makes the average cost of each program (we give six changes in two weeks) amount to $7,633.33.
> IF SOME ONE OFFERED YOU $7,000 WORTH FOR 10 OR 15 CENTS would you not embrace the offer?
> THE CASINO MAKES YOU THIS OFFER every day in the week.

KINEMACOLOR'S NEW CANADIAN MANAGER.

Douglas Cooper has been appointed manager of the Kinemacolor Company of Canada, Ltd., with general offices at 94 Bay Street, Toronto, Ont. Although a native of Ogdensburg, N. Y., Mr. Cooper is a pioneer picture man in Canada, having opened the first Laemmle film exchange in Montreal, and afterward representing George Kleine. He was manager of the Ontario district for the General Film Co., and afterwards handled Kinematograph interests in Toronto. Mr. Cooper has been supplying Canada with pictures since 1898 and believes that Kinemacolor will be the cap sheaf to his harvest in the Dominion.

Lubin Still Buying.

In spite of a statement to the contrary, there seems to have risen the belief that the additions to the editorial staff at the Lubin studio has closed that market. This is quite the reverse of true. Lawrence S. McCloskey, the editor, writes:

> There is no foundation for the belief that we are cutting down on outside purchases. Any good story submitted will be bought, providing, of course, that it is otherwise available at the time. Our aim is to get the best stories possible, and by best is meant the best idea rather than perfect technical development. If the story is perfectly stepped out, naturally we will pay more for it than one that merely contains the idea, but if the imperfectly developed script offers one good idea that can be built up, we'll buy and use it the same as always. The idea is to get real stories, not to use my stuff, or Hall's or Terwilliger's, but that all of us get together and get the best stuff possible, whether it is our own idea or something from outside.

To put it in other words, the idea of employing three of the best writers in America is not to do away with all outside purchases, but to insure that the good idea imperfectly developed may be built up into a really worthy story by a man who can write a good story himself and so, naturally, knows how to work over the ideas of another. Mr. McCloskey alone could not reconstruct all the scripts needed by the large staff of directors, and it was found that turning the raw script over to the director to fix up in the intervals of production did not always work out well. By increasing the staff, the great idea that is properly shown only in one or two scenes can be fully developed by a man who knows how, and the result is that Lubin stories will be perfect in narrative and technical form. They will all be as good as the original work of the man making the reconstruction plus a greater diversity of idea than is possible to any three men, no matter how clever they may be.

This is something that this department has fought for ever since it was started. Lubin and Essanay have fallen into line. The others must join step to get the right sort of stories. It will be some weeks yet before the results of the new system will show on the screen and a longer time before the handicaps of a new system may be overcome, but it is pretty safe to say that it is only a question of time when the Lubin stories will take the lead because the element of chance has been removed to a very large extent.

The Inquest Club.

The Inquest Club has disbanded for the summer. The attendance at most of the meetings was rather lighter than was anticipated and the meetings will not be resumed in the fall unless a larger membership comes forward. The club was useful in getting the script writers better acquainted with each other, and we should like to see the meetings resumed in October, but this will not be done unless at least thirty members signify their intention of being present at most meetings.

Doing Better.

The May issue of the Photoplay Author came out June first, but the June issue will be along very shortly. New blood has very materially braced up the appearance of the sheet and a better grade of paper and a cover design help to give the appearance of a regular paper. The May issue is a "Leeds" number and carries an article on the Selig studio by that writer and an article about him by Ernest Newton Bagg. The first of a series of articles on Photoplay by Mr. Leeds and Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, is given to a discussion of "What is a Photoplay?" and Homer Croy, of the Judge company, contributes an article on "How to Handle Humor." A new department handles the inquiries of the photoplay writer and the market tips are clean cut and reliable.

Har! Har!

The Photoplay Author man means well, but he gives this advice to a photoplay writer:

> If you are not otherwise employed, why not try to pick up a few points of studio method by working as an extra with one of the big companies? Some things may be learned by just watching that a text book could never teach.

That's most excellent advice—and true, but will the P. A. Answers Man please proceed to explain just how the person advised is going to get that job as extra with about eleven thousand persons ahead of him on the waiting list? That's the important part; getting the job.

When Uncle John Was Young.

When Uncle John was a young chap he may have had a lot of things happen to him and now that he knows you are writing photoplays he will be eager to tell you all about them so you can write them up.

Don't do it.

In the first place you will be writing to please Uncle John instead of some editor and in the second place it is not probable that Uncle John was utterly alone in having such an experience.

Use your imagination; not your Uncle.

Hennessy Quits.

George Hennessy has quit.

Hennessy has written a hundred or more Biograph successes, not to count contributions to other companies. A couple of months ago the school idea worked inself into his brain. He figured that if some of the schools could make money by the bushel with poor lesson papers and uninformed criticisms, he should be able to do even better by really telling.

With no particular blare of trumpets he prepared his lesson papers and quietly put in some test ads. He got all sorts of answers. His scheme was a simple one. You could have the first course for a stated sum. When you passed the examination you would be given the advanced course He didn't intend merely to hand out the lessons and take the money. The student must prove himself.

He came in the other day with the flat footed statement that no decent man could make an honest living out of a photoplay school. "There's a lot of money in it," he avers, "but it is the money of men and women who could not—in a thousand lessons—learn to write. The letters of most of them show on the face the absolute incompetency of the writer. It is no more than theft to take their money, for nothing worth while can be given in return."

And it is not just that Hennessy's would-be clients differ from others. Read this from an interview with Lawrence S. McCloskey:

> Fifty per cent. of the bad scripts are directly due to the correspondence schools of scenario writers. These schools can readily comprehend from the letters of the applicants that scenario writing is impossible for them. Yet the schools accept their money and consequently we are flooded with useless scripts.

Arthur Leeds and Dr. J. Berg Esenwein are working on a book for a course of lessons by Mr. Leeds. We are inclined to think that this will be decently administered because it will not be run as a graft, but it is very plain that most of the correspondence schools first lie to their would-be pupils and then swindle them.

The Boston Circle.

We publish this week a picture of the Boston circle of photoplay writers, contributary to the Inquest Club, though the circle has been in existence longer than the supposedly parent organization. The circle was founded by Miss Cora Drew and at one time boasted a larger membership, but these are the faithful. Miss Flanders is the most successful of the group and has written many accepted photoplays. Mr. Cotton and Miss Gormley have met with reasonable success. The other members have still their spurs to win, but they are studying and profiting by their study.

Practice.

Just because we advised a beginner not to try and sell scripts for a while but to write for practice, he came back at us with these few remarks:

> I don't see why I can't try to sell the scripts I write and I don't see any use in writing a lot of photoplays and not trying to sell them. That won't help me any. I want to see if my plays will sell. If they don't sell then I'll send them to you to be criticised.

There are a lot of others who feel the same way about it. They do not see the necessity for practice. They want to buy a school course or a copy of some book, read it over once and then proceed to write scripts that will sell.

The reason we advise practice is that practice, and only practice, can bring perfection. If you start to cut up a lot of soap boxes into kindlings you make a better job of the last box than you do of the first, for the practice you have had in knocking the boxes apart and cutting them up shows you just the best way to do it. After a time, if the supply of boxes last, you'll be so expert that you can't do much better, but you will have arrived at that point of expert soap box chopper only through practice. Some man of riper experience may help you a little by showing you how it should be done, but you must chop up a few boxes yourself before you can "get the hang of it." In other words you must practice.

You would not expect to buy a book on "How to Make Shoes," purchase a set of tools and a side of leather and start right in to sell shoes. Why should anyone imagine that it is any easier to write a photoplay than to make shoes?

Instead of bending your energies to selling your first script, put the same effort into other stories. Write them until you get the hang of the thing, and the probabilities are that you'll not try to market the first script until you have rewritten it. It looked all right when you wrote it, but in the light of the newer and better scripts, that first script looks but a sorry thing. for you have gained experience through practice; you know now that the initial work was bad because you cannot but improve if you work long enough and hard enough.

Criticism is helpful only in proportion to your ability to assimilate it. It is no short cut to success that will permit you to eliminate the laborious practice writing.

In photoplay there are many things that no one can do for you, and thinking and practicing are the most important of these. You must learn to originate your own plots, and you must learn to develop these plots into plays. A good book on technique can give you the rules and criticism can tell you if you are applying those rules properly, but neither book nor course nor criticism can materially shorten your actual apprenticeship. It can help you to avoid unnecessary work, but it cannot help you to escape the necessity for doing the work you must do if you would win success. Your natural adaptability may shorten the period of your apprenticeship, but it will not enable you to entirely escape the drudgery that lies behind accomplishment.

That's why we advise practice, because it's absolutely necessary.

The Literary Loafer.

We have at last succeeded in classifying a type of pseudo photoplay writer who is in a class altogether too large. We call him—or her—the literary loafer.

Loafer is not a pretty name, but it fits the person who forever wants some one else to do the work he should do. They are attracted to photoplay by the announcement that it takes no skill to write plays. To read some of the correspondence school literature, all you have to do is to buy a course and some paper and earn from fifty to a hundred dollars a week. Some do not even buy a course. They sit down and write someone whose name is mentioned in some connection. It is the same old appeal. "You have made such a splendid success and I have enjoyed your 'The Poisoned Pup' so much. Won't you please let me have the carbon of the story, as I am a mere novice."

It is seldom that a script is forthcoming, but every writer who has arrived is willing to give a helping hand. If the script is sent, it is slavishly imitated, but no sales result. Presently the loafer emerges from the embryo stage into the full fledged specimen. It is too hard work to learn how to write scripts that sell, so another letter is written. This time it runs something like this:

"Will you please take my script and make it salable and sell it. I am willing to give you half of all you make."

That's the literary loafer. He sits back on his limp spine and wants someone else to do his work for him. He is not willing to do the hard work of preparation that lies before the success that work will bring. He wants to grind out his piffle and send it to someone else to whip into shape and sell for him. He wants the reputation and half the profit. He is willing to give the other half of the money to the man who does all the work.

It is one of the peculiarities of photoplay that it is the one branch of literature in which style counts for nothing. If the business is adroitly worked and the idea is new, the style does not matter, and therefore the loafer does not have the excuse that the literary "tipster" possessed; that he has ideas but no style. Any person really competent to think out really good plots is competent to develop those plots into plays after proper practice, but the loafer is not willing to face the hard work. He wants the glory and the money, but he does not want the work and so he floats along, offering his proposition to anyone likely to accept it and wondering why men like Emmett Campbell Hall, George Terwilliger, Pop Hoadley or others of that class will not jump at the proposition. They don't even take the trouble to evolve decent ideas, they just hash up a conglomeration of several of the best plays they have seen and let it go at that.

There is no place in photoplay for the loafer. The honors go to the workers and they are too busy developing their own ideas to spend twice as much time on another script for half the money.

If success is worth having, work for it. That's what makes it worth while.

Training the Imagination.

When you have nothing in particular to do and want to find some occupation, why not take your imagination out and give it a romp? If you kept a dog shut up in a kennel all the time he would soon lose the full use of his legs. Your imagination needs exercise, too. Take some film story you have seen or read about. See how many different climaxes you can fit to that start and how many starts you can get to fit that climax. After a time you'll have your imagination in trim for a script at almost any time.

One Did.

A correspondent in Berkeley, California, writes that he has made a bet that he can write and sell a photoplay inside of seventeen years, and wants to know if we think he can win. We are afraid the gentlemen is kidding us, but to cheer him along his way we would tell of a man in Seattle who, on a bet, wrote and sold three plays. He wrote all three in one day and he says that two sold for $25 each and the third for $15.

But the Seattle man is not content. He writes:

> No photoplay ever written was worth just fifteen dollars. If it is not worth ten times that much it is worth nothing. * * * Some day some firm is going to send out notice to all who dabble at play writing that thereafter it will not pay less than one hundred dollars for a script.

The writer goes on to argue that that firm will have the bulk of film sales until others make a similar offer.

Nine tenths of the companies are willing right now to pay one hundred dollars for a hundred dollar script. The trouble is that they cannot get them.

The price offered has nothing to do with the case. If the man who wants a hundred dollars apiece for the scripts he writes will write hundred dollar scripts, it will not be long before he can raise his price and get the hundred, but if he must be coaxed with the hundred dollar bid he will keep on waiting. Our correspondent reminds us of Jimmie Russell of the Russell Brothers, who couldn't remember a name, but thought he might for two dollars. Such talk is rot. Raise the standard and the price will raise itself.

Inquiries

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be mailed on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

RICHARD ROE—We lack that Nestor cast. Miss Jessie McAllister was the Village Gossip in "Hulda of Holland." Kalem did not make "A Yellow Streak." The reason the Edison titles do not remain on the screen long enough, is perhaps because the reels are run through too fast. Try and change to a house where they are run at proper speed, both for the sake of titles and pictures.

EARNEST BEGINNER—The best way to study photoplay form is to wait and get a copy of the new "Technique of the Photoplay," or borrow an old copy. The place to study photoplay is in the photoplay theater. See how the successful play is done, and why another is a failure. Then you'll know what to do and what to avoid. That's the only real course.

J. M. G.—"The Dead Man's Child" was made in Denmark. We do not get the casts of the foreign players. The kind of stories that are acceptable to film makers are the kind they buy. To find the kind they buy read the Stories of the Films each week. From $10 to $50 are paid for plays. In some cases more is given.

A. L. C.—The Los Angeles gossip was crowded out by more insistent matter.

B. J. N.—The information you ask for is not at hand. The independent companies do not print their casts regularly.

MRS. E. C.—We have no Pilot casts.

W. H.—The Duncan section of the Selig Company is in Los Angeles. We do not know whether or not Mr. Kerrigan owns his own automobile or not.

F. B.—Miss Lottie Pickford is now located with Pilot.

C. H. N.—Texas Gorman was the lover in "The Perfidy of Mary." We have not the cast for "The Left-Handed Man." Henry Hyde was the rich young man in "The Lady and the Mouse." Henry Walthall was the tenderfoot in "The Tenderfoot's Money." Alfred Paget was the leader of the Indians in "The Yaqui Cur." Frank Opperman was the thin friend of the plump Lionel Barrymore. We have no information as to the order of deaths in "Just Gold."

B. L. D.—In "For the Flag," Richard Stanton was Lieut. Ashford, and Miss Anna Little was Winnie. Shy the other cast.

ANTHONY—Why send us five cents? Keep your small change. And do not ask asinine questions. Send them to the M. P. Magazine, as you have been doing. "The Sea Maiden," May 10, was the first Vitagraph release with Edwin August.

R. H.—We do not know Mr. Moore's present connection.

J. M. S.—It is not forbidden to take such a paragraph as you send and work a play from it, but there is the likelihood that others may use the same paragraph. It is safer not to, but there is neither civic nor moral law to prevent you from doing what you wish with this sort of material.

D. D.—See R. H.—It was not Tom Moore you saw in Imp. Marriage is a thing we cannot discuss. That also goes in regard to relationships. Harold Lockwood played opposite Miss Williams in "Lieut. Jones."

R. A. D.—American did not cast "Ashes of Three." Note the rest of your letter with interest, but it does not belong in here.

F. E. B.—Ask Mr. Wesley for the proper title of that film.

B. D. P.—It is best to submit ideas in photoplay form, which is with a short synopsis and then the action scene by scene.

E. G. M.—When Kay-Bee calls it "A Black Conspiracy," do not try to improve on their work by calling it "A Colored Conspiracy." The Answers Man works from cards, and looks in C instead of B. Miss Mildred Bracken was Grace White, and Richard Stanton, John Tivers. In "With Lee in Virginia," Miss Anna Little was Miss Blair, and Joe King played Billy Gerard.

British Columbia's Regulations for Operation of Moving Picture Machines.

THE Province of British Columbia, Canada, has passed the following regulations governing the operation of moving picture machines. In this connection, while I shall severely criticise many of the provisions. I want to compliment the authorities of British Columbia on being, so far as I know, the first to break away from the "booth" idea, and dignify the operator's domain by the official word "room" or "cabinet." And now for criticism:

In Section 1, the word length is mis-applied. The length of the operating room is always understood to mean the way the machine sets, and its width the other way.

Section 2 gives very minutely detailed instruction for the construction of asbestos rooms, and, by its wording would, so far as I can see, forbid the construction of a brick, concrete or hollow tile operating room in a new theater building, although either of these forms of construction is by far, superior to that given. It looks very much as though the asbestos operating room makers had interviewed the law makers of British Columbia, even as I think they seem to have interviewed the law makers of many of our own states and municipalities. Section 2 also provides an eight inch vent flue, and that the wall shutters be hung on fusible links, which provisions are in the nature of a joke, so far as real fire protection be concerned. The vent flue should not be less than 18 inches in diameter and the cords suspending the shutter should be brought down over the aperture of the machine and over the film box so that they will instantly be severed and thus automatically close the shutters within two seconds of the starting of a fire at either place. Once let the audience catch sight of smoke or blaze and your fireproof operating room will not protect them from the resultant stampede. How often must we point out to officials the utter asininity of hanging wall shutters with a fusible link without bringing that link right down over the aperture of the machines, and over the film box, where any fire that starts would melt it instantly, and drop the shutters within two seconds of the starting of a fire, at the same time providing vent flue of sufficient size to carry off all smoke and blaze, thus turning the operating room into a regular stove, in which film can be burned without the audience being aware that there is a fire in the house. We also note that British Columbia has followed in the footsteps of others and perpetrated the four-inch-wide, 12-inch-high observation port outrage, which not only makes matters unnecessarily uncomfortable for the operator, but also insures poor results on the screen. There is no common sense in such a provision as this, and if the lawmakers, who presume to set themselves up as regulators for such things, would take the pains to inform themselves before gravely enacting into law such very bad jokes as this, perhaps the aforesaid poor jokes would not be perpetrated at all. But they do not and, as a consequence, British Columbia operators will have to look cross-eyed in order to see their picture. I would respectfully refer the British Columbia law makers who sprung this ordinance, to page 74 of the Handbook. I would also suggest that some good husky British Columbia operator hunt up the gentleman who drafted the ordinance and rub his nose on the illustration on that page and the reading matter that goes with it.

Section 7 says that the shutter shall be installed in front of the condenser lens hood. This requirement knocks out the dowser of all the machines, except, I think, the Edison, since all the rest of them have the dowser behind the hood next the condenser. Piffle!

Section 8 says, in speaking of arc lamphouses, that mica must be used for frame insulation. I wonder what they mean by that. It also says the self-closing doors shall be provided on the side and rear of the lamphouse. Huh! Self-closing doors on a lamphouse were long since discarded, and I do not know of a lamphouse made which has a door in the back.

As to Section 17, I would respectfully suggest the addition of the word "ripe," between the words full and age, with a comma after full. Under Section 17, the operator could not even have his book of instructions in the room.

The ordinance reads as follows:

Every owner, lessee, user, exhibitor, and operator of a kinematograph, moving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus, including every apprentice or assistant employed in connection therewith, shall observe the following regulations:

1. The room or cabinet in which any kinematograph, moving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus shall be placed for purposes of operation shall be at least 7 feet high, the floor-space to vary according to the number of machines so placed therein, as follows:

One picture-machine, not less than 6 feet by 8 feet.
Two picture-machines, not less than 9 feet by 8 feet.
And for each additional machine add 3 feet to length.

2. The room or cabinet in which any kinematograph, moving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus shall be placed for purposes of operation shall be constructed in accordance with the following requirements:

Frame.—To be made of at least 1½-inch by 1½-inch by ¼-inch angle or tee irons, as follows:

Four outside horizontal members at top and bottom.
Four corner uprights.

Intermediate uprights on sides and intermediate members on roofs not to be spaced more than 2 feet between centers.

A tee-iron to be placed throughout the length of each horizontal joint of asbestos board lining the room or cabinet.

Main doorway or entrance to be at least 2 feet wide by at least 6 feet high, with an angle-iron framing. The main door shall be hung on at least two heavy hinges and arranged to open outward and to close against a substantial metal rabbet, overlapping on sides, top, and bottom at least 2 inches. The door shall also be provided with a substantial spring which will keep it tightly closed.

All joints in frame to be made with 3/16-inch steel plates, to which each angle or tee iron shall be riveted or bolted by the use of at least two ¼-inch bolts or rivets; all bolts or rivets to have flat heads, said heads always to be placed on exterior side of cabinet and to be properly countersunk.

Covering of Cabinet.—Sides and top of such room or cabinet and main door shall be covered on the outside with hard asbestos boards of at least ¼ inch thickness. The asbestos shall be so cut and arranged that all joints between boards shall come over an angle or tee iron, to which the asbestos shall be securely fastened by means of proper bolts and nuts, said bolts to be spaced not more than 6 inches apart.

Flooring.—The floor of such room or cabinet shall be made of two parts, an upper and a lower floor. The lower floor may be made of wood flooring of ⅞ inch minimum thickness, and must be supported on the lower legs of the lowest horizontal angle-irons. Resting on this floor shall be a floor made of hard asbestos board of ⅜ inch minimum thickness, to be covered, if advisable, with lock-jointed metal of not less than 24 B. & S. gauge.

Openings.—There shall not be more than two openings in such room or cabinet for each picture-machine installed—one to provide for observation of the screen by the operator, and one to permit of projection of the light-beam of the machine; no other openings, with the exception of the main or entrance door and one ventilator opening in roof, will be permitted in such room or cabinet. An opening for the projection of the light-beam of a machine shall not be more than 6 inches high and 12 inches long. An opening to permit of observation of the screen by the operator shall not be more than 4 inches wide or more than 12 inches high. All such openings in room or cabinet shall be provided with gravity doors constructed of metal not less than 3/16 inch in thickness. When closed, said doors shall overlap the openings at least 2 inches on all sides, and be arranged to slide, without binding, in properly constructed grooves; said doors to be held open normally by use of a fine combustible cord fastened to a fusible link which will melt at a temperature of 160° Fahr., or in the alternative said doors shall be held open normally by use of an approved mechanical tripping device arranged with a fusible link which will melt at a temperature of 160° Fahr. In either case the equipment to be so arranged that the doors may be easily released and closed by hand. Operators shall release and close the doors once every working-day, and all such doors and equipment shall be continuously maintained in first-class working-order.

Shelves.—All shelves, furniture, and fixtures within such operating room or cabinet shall be constructed of incombustible material, or, in the event of any wooden fitting being permitted by any officer required by chapter 72 of the Statutes of British Columbia for the year 1913 to enforce the regulations passed thereunder, such fitting shall be covered with incombustible material in a manner approved by such officer.

Near the center of the roof of such operating room or cabinet shall be a circular opening of not less than 8 inches in diameter; the upper side of said opening to be provided with an iron flange, which flange is to be securely fastened to the angle or tee irons supporting the roof. Securely fastened to this flange shall be a riveted metal vent-pipe of not less than 8 inches in diameter, said pipe to lead to the outside of the building or to a special incombustible vent-flue; all parts of vent-pipe to be at least 6 inches from any combustible material.

The exterior covering, if any, of every operating room or cabinet in which any kinematograph, moving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus is used in any theater, hall, or other building for the purposes of public entertainment shall be of expanded metal and hard plaster: Provided that in case any theater, hall, or other building shall, at the date of the coming into force of said chapter 72, be provided with an operating room or cabinet differing in construction from what is herein provided, which is approved upon inspection by the Censor appointed under said chapter 72 as being of a reasonably safe fireproof construction, the said operating room or cabinet shall, so long as such approval of the Censor be not cancelled or withdrawn, be deemed a sufficient compliance with these regulations so far as the same relate to the construction thereof.

3. No portable operating-cabinet shall be used in any theater, hall, or building in British Columbia wherein moving pictures are regularly displayed to the public. Portable cabinets conforming to the standard of construction specified in these Regulations for such cabinets, or portable cabinets of a type approved in writing by any officer required by said chapter 72 to enforce the regulations passed thereunder, may be used in a building not equipped with permanent operating rooms or cabinets, provided written permission for such use is obtained from such officer; such permission not to cover a period of time exceeding six successive days.

4. Portable Cabinets.—All portable cabinets used in British Columbia in connection with the display of moving pictures to the public shall conform to the specifications provided in these Regulations for the construction of a permanent operating room or cabinet, with the following exceptions:

Intermediate uprights may be spaced every 4 feet apart.

Special means of ventilation need not be provided, except that in every portable cabinet there shall be an opening in the roof of same for ventilation; this opening to be at least 8 inches in diameter, and above said opening there shall be a solderless metal sleeve at least 8 inches in diameter and at least 18 inches in height; said metal sleeve to be provided at its top with a ventilating-cap.

Portable cabinets may be made in a folding type so constructed that when assembled they will be rigid and all joints tight, so that flames may not pass through them. The base of every portable cabinet shall have a flange extension outward on all four sides provided with a sufficient number of holes through which lag screws or bolts shall extend to fasten the cabinet firmly to the floor of the building in which it is used.

5. If limelight, acetylene gas, or any other gaseous illuminant be used in the kinematograph lamp, the gas-cylinders shall be tested to a pressure of 1,800 lbs. to the square inch before being used in any theater, hall, or public place where moving pictures are to be displayed to the public.

6. All kinematograph or moving-picture machines shall be supported on iron stands, and shall be equipped with a feed-reel enclosed in a metal magazine constructed of 20 B. & S. gauge; said magazine to have a slot at the bottom only large enough for film to pass through, and with cover so arranged that this slot may be instantly closed. No solder to be used in the construction of this magazine. Door on side of said magazine shall be of metal and be provided with spring hinges and latch, which will keep said door tightly closed. All such machines shall also be equipped with a take-up reel in a magazine similar in construction to that used to enclose feed-reel.

7. All kinematograph or moving-picture machines shall be equipped with a shutter in front of the condenser-lens hood and a shutter completely covering the film-aperture in the machine-head, so arranged and operated as to automatically close when rate of travel of film becomes slower than ordinary exhibiting speed. No operator or other person shall, under any circumstances, use any device to prop up or suspend from its seat any shutter designed to operate in the automatic closing of the film-aperture in the machine-head of any kinematograph or moving-picture machine when such machine is in operation. Said shutter must be permanently attached to gate-frame of machine. All moving-picture machines shall be provided with metal guards which shall adequately enclose the film in its passage through the machine-head from upper to lower magazine. No operator or other person shall, under any circumstances, remove said film guard or guards from any moving-picture machine when said machine is in operation. All kinematograph or moving-picture machines installed in any theater, hall, or building in which exhibitions of moving pictures are given to the public shall be operated by hand. The use of a motor-drive will not be permitted on any such machine unless by special permission of the Censor in writing. The handle or crank used in operating any such machine must be secured to its spindle or shaft in such manner that it cannot become detached from said spindle or shaft during the operation of said machine.

8. All arc-lamp houses used in connection with moving-picture machines shall be constructed and installed as follows: Said lamphouses shall be built entirely of metal, and shall be so designed as to provide for proper ventilation within themselves and for the prevention of the emission of sparks from the lamp when same is in operation. Mica must be used for frame insulation. Self-closing doors shall be provided on side and rear of lamp-house. Observation ports not larger than 2 inches square may be provided when closed with glass. Lamp shall be controlled by a double-pole, single-throw switch within easy reach of operator, said switch to be enclosed in a metal hood.

Conductors supplying current to lamp shall not be smaller than No. 6 B. & S. gauge or its equivalent. Stranded conductors provided with approved lugs shall be used between lamp and permanent wiring. A fireproof insulation shall be used on conductors inside lamp-house and on conductors connected to the arc lamp and resistance. Conductors passing through lamp-house shall be protected with porcelain bushings in lamp-house frame. Lamp-houses shall not be mounted on a base or frame of wood.

9. Rheostats.—All rheostats shall be mounted on slate bases; said rheostats to be properly supported and placed outside of cabinet, if possible. The supports of rheostats shall be made of iron and be securely fastened to the construction on which the rheostats stand. Rheostats shall be entirely covered by approved metal guards; said guards to be provided with holes for ventilation.

10. All electric wiring entering any operating room or cabinet in which a kinematograph or moving-picture machine is operated shall be conveyed to such room or cabinet in iron conduits.

11. One incandescent electric light will be allowed in such operating room or cabinet for each moving-picture machine installed in such room or cabinet, and one such light for the rewinding-bench: all such lights shall be provided with wire guards, and reinforced cord shall be used for pendant purposes.

12. All electrical wiring or apparatus used in connection with any auditorium, or located in any room, compartment, cabinet, or enclosure containing a motion-picture machine, in any theater, hall, or building in British Columbia in which moving pictures are displayed to the public shall be installed in full compliance with the rules of the National Electrical Code.

13. No films shall be exposed in the operating room or cabinet of any theater, hall, or building in which moving pictures are displayed to the public, other than those in process of transfer to or from the moving-picture machines, or in process of transfer from the upper to the lower magazine of such machines, or in process of rewinding. A separate metal case, made without solder and equipped with a self-closing door, shall be provided, and all films, except those in the machine magazines or in process of rewinding, shall be placed and kept in said case.

14. No material of a combustible nature shall be kept or stored within any such operating room or cabinet in any theater, hall, or building except the films necessary for one single show; and the number of films kept or stored shall not, in any case, exceed six reels.

15. Two chemical fire-extinguishers, or such greater number as may be required and directed by any officer required by said Chapter 72 to enforce the regulations passed thereunder as aforesaid, of a size, nature, type or pattern approved by any such officer, all to be continuously maintained in good working order, together with a large pail of sand and a hand shovel, shall be kept at all times ready for use and in such a position as to be immediately accessible outside of and near every such operating room or cabinet.

16. The entrance-door to the operating room or cabinet of any theater, hall, or building in which moving pictures are shown to the public shall be kept tightly closed, but not locked, during all performances or at any other time when the moving-picture machine contained in said room or cabinet is being operated.

Every such operating room or cabinet shall be kept in a position which does not interfere with or obstruct any aisle or passageway in the theater, hall, or building in which same is placed.

17. Every operator of a kinematograph or moving-picture machine in any theater, hall, or building in which moving pictures are displayed to the public shall be of the full age of eighteen years. Operators shall examine their machines and lamp connections daily, and shall devote their entire attention to the machine when operating. Operators shall not permit any person to enter or remain in an operating room or cabinet while a machine is being operated during any public performance, except such officers as are hereinbefore mentioned. Apprentices shall not be instructed in the operation of moving-picture machines during a public performance in any such theater, hall, or building.

No smoking or lighting of matches shall be allowed at any time within any such operating room or cabinet.

No reading-matter and no bare wooden fixture shall be used or allowed within any such operating room or cabinet.

18. No person shall, while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, operate or attempt to operate, nor shall any exhibitor permit any such person to operate, any kinematograph or moving-picture machine.

Projection by Reflection.

Mr. J. J. Lodge, Chicago, Illinois, sends the following very lengthy communication. I am giving it space, almost in its entirety, for two reasons, viz: (a) I have myself expressed a somewhat adverse opinion as to the practicability of the much-talked-about reflecting projector; therefore, I cannot consistently refuse publicity to a letter which apparently sets forth the honest views of another, who seems to have just claim to at least considerable knowledge of the subject under discussion. (b) In view of the large claims made by the Chicago gentleman, as well as by another gentleman in Utah, who also is perfecting a reflecting projector, this matter is just now a very live topic; therefore, I do not begrudge considerable space to its discussion, though I wish it to be distinctly understood that my views, as expressed in the former article, have undergone no change. My mind is entirely open on this proposition, but I wish to emphasize the fact that making a reflecting projector which will deliver the goods experimentally, or in a demonstration room, is one matter, but to make a projector of this type which will be a commercial success is quite another matter, and, as I said in the former article, the latter proposition will have to be thoroughly demonstrated to me. I sincerely hope it is true, but I also have very sincere doubts. Please understand this is not said to "knock" anybody's proposition. It is simply an expression of my opinion. I shall be very glad indeed to examine this projector when it is ready, and to reverse this opinion if the facts justify a reversal. I would particularly call attention to the sentence in which friend Lodge says: "Since then he has succeeded in making the machine absolutely practical, though not as yet commercially perfect." That is a pretty strong endorsement of my opinion, isn't it, Neighbor Lodge? The letter reads as follows:

> I have read, with interest, your article under the caption "Projection by Reflection." For many years I have been what is known as an amateur photographer and "Kodak fiend." Am somewhat of an humble student of photographic optics, and the many kindred subjects associated with that science. I have spent thirty years of my life in the theatrical profession, actor, manager and stage director. For the past five years I have been operating, in a limited field, a moving picture studio and laboratory in this city. Am fairly well conversant with, and experienced, in a practical way, in all departments of that work. I mention these details that you may give me credit for knowing something of the subject matter of this communication. In reference to the article above named, and the particular projection machine to which you refer, you state that, not having had opportunity to inspect the machine, or witness a demonstration of its merits, you are not in a position to either condemn or endorse it. In taking this attitude you are to be commended. Necessarily one in your position must act conservatively in regard to all such matters, if he has the true interest of his journal and its readers at heart. Let me say, before I go further, that I have no financial or pecuniary interest in the machine in question, either directly or indirectly. Nor is any other than myself aware of my writing you. Whatever is stated in this communication is prompted solely by my desire to acquaint you, and the many readers of the Department, with some pertinent facts, and I trust you will deem the facts so stated worthy of publication. I have witnessed the demonstration of this machine many times, and am thoroughly familiar with its governing principle and mechanism. From my conversation with its inventor and his associates I am assured that nothing would give them greater pleasure than to have the opportunity to submit the machine for your thorough examination, and to afford you every facility for its complete demonstration for the benefit of yourself and your readers. They are not, as yet, however, prepared to exhibit the machine outside of Chicago. When the time arrives that these gentlemen are in that position, not far off I believe, I am safe in stating that among the first who will have that opportunity presented to them will be yourself.
> Now as to the machine itself and its sponsors: It might be interesting to say at first that the original intention of the inventor was in the line of the development of an entirely new color process. The machine in question was only a necessary adjunct to that end. The inventor, however, was later induced to lay aside, for the time being, the color feature of the plan and concentrate his efforts in the perfection of the projecting machine itself. Since then he has succeeded in making the machine absolutely practical, though not, as yet, commercially perfect. Many operators, cameramen, exhibitors and other experienced moving picture men, have witnessed the machine in operation and have unanimously endorsed its merits. There may not have been one of them possessed of the wide experience and technical knowledge of the subject you possess, yet I can say I know several of these gentlemen are entitled to be considered experts in all pertaining to the art of projection. Many of them, after witnessing this demonstration, have declared in your own words, that it would be a "godsend to the business." The description of the machine, as given by you in your recent article, was fairly accurate, except that, at the present time, there are four reflecting mirrors used instead of but two, as formerly. You declare "* * * that in order to secure sharpness of definition, the movement of these mirrors must, at all times, be absolutely mechanically correct * * *." In this you are perfectly right. But is such mechanical precision impossible of attainment? You seem to believe it is, and so express yourself. Yet one of your extensive experience in the line of mechanics must admit that far more accurate precision has been accomplished before now, than is demanded in this particular instance. The film is moving continuously, the mirrors are doing likewise, and at the same time reflecting the pictures continuously through the lens to the screen. It is then plain to be seen that, in order to obtain a clear-cut or sharp definition of the pictures, there must be established a certain well defined ratio of speed among, and controlling the three separate and distinct movements, viz: the horizontal movement of the film (pictures), the circular action of the mirrors and the semi-vertical rocking forward, or tilting of the mirrors. The principal movement of the three, and that which has caused the most earnest study and attention, has been the tilting or rocking of the mirrors at the exact speed and degree required. It is in this last proposition that, as you so tersely put it, "is the splinter in the finger," or, rather—WAS. In the accomplishment of this particular desiteratum the inventor has been guided and governed by an old and familiar law in physical optics: "In order to keep any moving object stationary on the surface of any reflecting medium, the reflecting medium itself must be given exactly one-half of the angular velocity of that of the moving object being reflected, and in the same direction as that of the object." In the case in question, if each of the revolving mirrors, as it comes into the plane of action, is tilted, or rocked forward at one-half of the angular velocity of the film (picture), the resultant effect will be a stationary reflection upon the surface of the moving mirror and, consequently upon the stationary screen, as the picture is reflected from the mirror through the objective lens to that point. This feat in mechanics the inventor has succeeded in accomplishing to perfection, by a method both ingenious and simple. To attempt to describe it would, however, occupy too much valuable space. You will, no doubt, perform this office for the benefit of your readers—later.

I will not close this communication without informing you of a feature connected with this machine that, to me, appears to be of equal value to that of the primary claim, viz: that one can take a moving picture, with the ordinary camera used for that purpose, at one-half of the usual speed (eight pictures to the second), and that, when projected with this machine, at the same rate of speed, the effect will be as natural and as lifelike as though taken and projected at sixteen to the second. Not being positively convinced of this claim from the demonstration given, I determined to give it a thorough test. Using one of my own cameras I took two pictures, one at eight and the other at sixteen pictures to the second. The action and time in both pictures were exactly the same. The only change that I made was in decreasing the opening of the shutter when taking at eight to a second, so as to secure, as near as possible, an equal exposure. I secured two good negatives, one of about a hundred and fifty feet, the other of about eighty feet, from which two "prints" were made. I took them to the exhibition room of the machine and, personally, projected them at the rate of eight and sixteen to the second respectively. Only that I was aware of the facts I could not have told the difference between the two pictures. One was as perfect as the other. Several gentlemen present at the time of the demonstration, failed to distinguish any difference, and were simply astounded when informed as to the real facts and were shown the difference in the lengths of the two films. This will seem incredible to any but those who have actually seen the fact demonstrated. As to the accuracy of the experiments and the truth of the statements, I can swear to them. What this will mean to the business, in economy of production, transportation and storage, you can readily estimate. Another interesting feature of the pictures as projected by this machine and one that will especially appeal to the exhibitor is, that on account of the continuous movement of the film and the entire absence of any shutter, as well as the dissolving effect of the pictures, one can view them from the front seats of an auditorium as well as from the choicest location, with equal satisfaction. Being no flicker—there is no eye strain.

All this matter that I have written may not and no doubt will not convince you of the truth of it, nor is it intended for that purpose. You, as you state yourself, will not be convinced till you are shown. I have simply written for the benefit of yourself and readers, and in justice to the inventor and his associates whom I have found to be honorable gentlemen. No one estimates the value of the columns of the Moving Picture World any more than these gentlemen do. They have not been ready nor yet is the time opportune, for systemized press exploitation, and commercial advertising. From what I have gleaned, within the next six months the machine will be placed on the market. Before that time, New York will have the chance to see it and—I have heard these gentlemen declare that none will see it, or at least have the opportunity for so doing presented to them, sooner than the Moving Picture World.

From Milwaukee Local Union No. 164.

Messrs. Horace L. Conway. Frank Paradise and Percy L. Jones, Committee of Local Union 164 I. A. T. S. E. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, contribute the following:

> We wish to commend the most excellent article by Brother Joseph B. Basson, May 31st issue, and particularly that part of it pertaining to Local Union 35 and 37. We must, however, take exception to his proposed (as amended) Article 6, Section 2, of our I. A. laws. We quote his proposed amendment, or that part of it pertaining to our craft: "or to fifteen or more competent moving picture machine operators in any city where an operator must have a license, etc." Now no Wisconsin city has a charter which will permit it to license moving picture operators. That authority must come from the state and, up-to-date, our legislature has turned down all such amendments to city charters, and has also killed, in committee, a bill to have the state itself license picture operators. There are approximately five hundred moving picture operators working in Wisconsin at the present time, and only eighty of these are members of the I. A., therefore, for the love of Mike don't put any more stumbling blocks in our way which will prevent honest and competent operators from becoming union men. If this part of your suggestion were to become law, then no more moving picture machine operators' locals could be formed in the state of Wisconsin until such time as our state legislature experiences a change of heart. A certain city in a neighboring state does grant license to operators upon the payment of one dollar, and the correct answering of the following questions. 1. What is your name and address? 2. What theater do you work in?
> As far as we are able to ascertain, all candidates are compelled to pass this examination with a marking of 100%, before being granted license. Your proposed amendment would admit these "licensed operators," but bar out our Wisconsin men, to which we very seriously and most strenuously object. Our I. A. laws are mighty good as they stand—for the stage hands. We need new laws, however, to govern moving picture machine operators. We wish to call your attention to the following facts, and the conditions governing our craft in the state of Wisconsin. Every moving picture machine operator in this state is now within the jurisdiction of the I. A. T. S. E. (See resolution No. 28, page 187, proceedings of the 20th Annual Convention.) This wise resolution is now law, and it permits every competent and trustworthy operator to become a member of the I. A., providing the local nearest his voting residence cares to admit moving picture operators, this being optional with each individual local or, in other words, "left to local autonomy." And right there lies the reason that, out of five hundred operators in this state, only eighty are I. A. men. There are just fourteen locals holding jurisdiction in Wisconsin, and only one of this number is a moving picture machine operator's local, viz: Local No. 164, which has enrolled every competent and reliable operator within its jurisdiction who can be persuaded to join us. But we are surrounded by I. A. locals on three sides and by Lake Michigan, on the fourth, so our jurisdiction is mighty limited, and we regret to say that, up-to-date, very little effort has been made by the stage hand locals to do anything whatever toward organizing the operators within their jurisdiction. Local 18 of this city has, of course, no jurisdiction over operators, that being vested with local No. 164.
> But in fairness let it be said that local No. 18 has aided us in every possible way, for which we are duly grateful. The other twelve I. A. locals having jurisdiction in Wisconsin have something like thirty members running picture machines in this state. Fondulac, Madison and Racine locals, in this state, and the Freeport, Illinois, local have given local No. 164 the jurisdiction over Wisconsin operators within their territory but we have not been able to get the permission of International President Shay to organize the operators in this territory. Outside of Milwaukee there is no one city in the state in which fifteen operators are employed, and if our I. A. laws are lived up to in all of their requirements, no full and direct chartered locals can be formed in Wisconsin, even by forming combination locals of both stage hands and moving picture operators, with the single exception of Green Bay, where such a local might possibly be had. Four other cities in the state have enough operators and stage hands combined to form provisional locals, but this does not begin to cover the 420 unorganized operators of the state. Every one of these 420, who can prove himself competent and reliable, should belong to the I. A., and not be compelled to be non-union merely because the nearest stage hand locals don't want operator members. Our claim is that where any local of the I. A. does not wish to enroll honest, competent and reliable moving picture operators, jurisdiction should be given the nearest M. P. M. O. local. This is only fair to the non-union operators and to the I. A. T. S. E. and it is most unfair and dangerous to keep honest and competent moving picture operators out of our organization. Local No. 164 has a very simple yet effective plan whereby every honest and competent operator of the fourteen thousand now working at our craft in this country and Canada can be enrolled in our I. A. T. S. E., and no dishonest and incompetent operator could hold membership were our plan in force. We would be very glad to hear from any and all locals of the I. A. who have a desire to advance the moving picture end of our organization, and we would particularly like to hear from you as to the number of I. A. and non-union operators working within your jurisdiction—meaning all of your jurisdiction.

The contention of local No. 164, that every reliable and competent operator in this country ought to have opportunity to join the organization is nothing more or less than what I have repeatedly advocated in this department. In so far as the granting of jurisdiction over the three cities is concerned, I went up to the International office and talked the matter over. Their views were that, in the first place, such jurisdiction would not be practical; that it would not be right to have a man situated perhaps two hundred miles away governed by a union, the meeting of which he could seldom if ever attend, and with the conduct of the affairs of which he could have very little to do. The International office informed me also that it was not within the power of President Shay to grant such a thing, that being something that could only be done by a convention. If Milwaukee has a practical plan for the organization of operators it is too bad they did not send it along for publication in this department, so that it might be fully discussed, and delegates be sent to the convention instructed to work either for or against it according to the will of their constituents. However, be these matters as they may, there can be no question as to the value of the publication of such a letter as this in the department. Whether Milwaukee is right or wrong, the matter will be studied and considered by thousands of operators, scattered all over this country and Canada, whereas, it could not otherwise be laid before the membership at large, except at heavy expense, and even then, not in the best possible way. The address of the committee is 214 Alhambra Theater Building. I presume Brother Conway is Chairman of the committee.

"LAW AND THE OUTLAW" (Selig), June 4.—This is very truly a feature offering and justifies its length (two reels) very creditably. It is a story of the cattle country by Tom Mix and J. Edward Hungerford and was produced by William Duncan. In the first part, we find the outlaw coming to the ranch and being "taken on" by the foreman. Soon, a love affair begins between him and the ranch owner's second daughter, who has seen his dare-devil riding; but this her people discourage. The love story as it is carefully developed in the first reel is sincere and strongly convincing. The best things in it are the simple, natural and realistic glimpses of ranch life, including some big pictures of the great herd; but there are one or two thrills that made the audience here gasp and shout out. One of these is the rescue of the heroine from a mad bull by the hero, who jumps upon it from his horse and bull-dogs it. Tom Mix plays the leading role with skill, verve and nerve, regardless of breath or even of personal safety. Myrtle Stedman plays opposite to him. After the rescue and while the hero is lying breathless under the horns of the bull he has just thrown, the sheriff appears and puts the bracelets on him in front of the girl. In the first scene of the second reel, the outlaw escapes from the sheriff and a desperate man-chase follows, during which the outlaw, whom the sheriff calls "some man," shoots the handcuffs off his wrists. At the end the girl says she will wait. It is a desirable offering for most places.

"WHAT THE GOOD BOOK TAUGHT" (Patheplay), June 5.—A story of the lonely plains in which a girl has an adventure with some bad men. Somewhat as in "The Great Divide," one of them is not so bad as the others and in his chest he has a copy of the Bible, given to him by his mother. The girl, who is taking her sick mother across the plains alone, knocks at the wrong hut for assistance and is captured. In the inner room, her prison, she finds the Bible and has it in her hand when the man comes in to her. This is a good situation, but it is not well acted and doesn't convince as strongly as it might have. The backgrounds suggest the loneliness of the place powerfully, and the photography is clear. It is a creditable production.

"THE SUWANEE RIVER" (Selig), June 5.—A story of the South with some Northern scenes to give contrast and suggest the longing for home that the old song carries. The cotton planting colonel doesn't like his new neighbors, because they are Northerners and, when his son falls in love with the daughter of the newcomers, he disowns him. The lad goes North and makes a fortune on the market out of conditions that ruin the old colonel, but comes back after learning from a darkie, of conditions at home, in time to buy the old homestead. Harry Lonsdale, as the colonel, and the player who takes the role of his wife act in a very natural and convincing way at most times; but all the leading players do fairly well. Jack Nelson and Winnifred Greenwood have the romantic roles. The offering stands best on its special views, darkie cabin scenes, river vistas with quiet waters and grey beard moss hanging over them, etc. Its author is Gilson Willets and it was produced by Hardee Kirkland. The story is not wonderful and seems insensible of the finer points, but the picture makes a very likeable offering.

"THE HEART OF MRS. ROBBINS" (Vitagraph), June 5.—A well-acted picture, produced by Van Dyke Brooke and in which it is plain that the finer things have been felt and provided for. Vitagraph seems fond of the picture where a child is sick for love and is being neglected by its parents. In this case, it's the mother, Mrs. Robbins, a widow, charmingly played by Leah Baird. The kiddie makes the acquaintance of Leo Delaney, a chemist, and writes a note, in childish hand and orthography, telling his absent mother that he has found a "new daddy," to which Leo adds a line of his own. This provokes the mother at first; but, of course, the ending can be foreseen. The story is convincingly acted rather than convincingly written. It has charming scenes. Marie Jackots is the writer. The child, "Bobby," is well played by Addison Sargent Lathrop, a five-year-old.

"SLIPPERY SLIM REPENTS" (Biograph), June 5.—A burlesque with a comic temperance lecturer who persuades a couple of queer characters to empty their whisky into a spring. Later, he drinks of it himself, and others of the community also imbibe with not unexpected results. There was a good amount of laughter.

"JUST KIDS" (Biograph), June 5.—A picture of a co-educational college and, like the other on the same reel, a mixture of burlesque and rough farce. There isn't much story to this and it is a bit vulgar.

"THE LAST SHOT" (Essanay), June 5.—There is plenty of good atmosphere in this picture that in its story and in the way it was handled reminds us of a Biograph of some months back. It is set in very well chosen mountain scenes and deals with a feud with its climax in a rough cabin. The wife of the leader of the attacking party has gone to the cabin to warn the victim, who happens to be her brother, and through the window she is shot by her husband's rifle. When this is made known, it brings the feud to its close. It is played by one of the Essanay's western companies with vigor and has been fairly photographed. A pretty good offering.

"KATE, THE COP" (Lubin), June 5.—A farcical burlesque that made a good deal of laughter. It shows us a comically, timid cop (Walter Stull) with a touch of Dogberry in his dealings with a doughty burglar; it also shows us the cop's sweetheart (Mae Hotely), a very fearless cook. The Missis finds the burglar (Robert Burns) up stairs, while the cop is in the kitchen. The cook goes up and manhandles many funny tumbles out of the burglar and when the chief of police finds how things stand, he makes her cop and makes the cop a cook—everybody satisfied. The script is by Epes Winthrop Sargent and was produced by Arthur Hotaling.

"BOB BUILDS A CHICKEN HOUSE" (Lubin), June 5.—On the same reel, is this, which is really too slight to be much of anything. There was just a little laughter. It is short.

"NATIVE INDUSTRIES OF JAVA" (Melies), June 5.—There is freshness of interest as well as value in this offering. It shows us how the queer, elaborately decorated dresses of Java are designed; how that strange flame-like sword, the kriss, is forged and engraved, and how Javanese pottery and brass work is manufactured. Most of this stuff is new, though there is no difference in the way pots are moulded on the wheel, whether in Babylon or Thebes or Bangkok. The photography is clear enough to be acceptable.

"THE ARMADILLO" (Eclipse), June 4.—A worthy picture of one of the queer but well-known little animals of South America. We have good pictures of it and with them perfectly clear and very instructive sub-titles. We feel sure that the full explanation given by these has added greatly to the value of the offering.

"DELIVERING THE GOODS" (Eclipse), June 4.—On the same reel, is this rough and tumble comic, in which we see how a piano is delivered to its purchaser. These pictures with no meaning, but taken in the queer streets of Old World cities and well photographed, make acceptable offerings as occasional lighteners. This also seemed to amuse.

"THE FLAG OF TWO WARS" (Selig), June 3.—A picture that needs good music to make it go well. It has several scenes that, when followed rightly, are thrilling; they are battle scenes and especially a group of scenes showing Americans besieged by Spaniards in a block house (rather flimsy in construction) until they are rescued by the main force It happens that the hero has taken the C. S. A. Stars and Bars to Cuba with him and when the Stars and Stripes are shot away, Uncle Sam's boys raise the other flag and fight under it. It has not been strongly acted at all points. The photography is fair.

"BUNNY AS A REPORTER" (Vitagraph), June 3.—A Bunny-graph that made a good deal of laughter. There are other queer characters in it—suffragettes whose secret conclave he attends in disguise; but the fun comes from Bunny and the things he does. It is a good Bunny picture, written by Mrs. Breuil and produced by Wilfred North.

"THREE TO ONE" (Vitagraph), June 3.—On the same reel is this farce, a very slight yet fairly amusing offering played at Atlantic City, by Lillian Walker, James Lackaye and Hughey Mack, with the help of boardwalk attendants, etc.

"THE VALUE OF MOTHERS-IN-LAW" (Essanay), June 4.—A pleasing little picture of a quarrel and its ending. The two Newly Hitcheds have each been flirting and have caught each other and so the spat begins. It takes two mothers-in-law to patch things together again as good as new. Billy Mason and Dorothy Phillips play the young folks with Eleanor Blanchard and Clara Smith as the mothers-in-law. It is gracefully acted, the scenes are pretty and well made and the photography is clear. It is an offering to give amused enjoyment rather than laughter. It will be liked.

"WHEN FATE DECREES" (Kalem), June 4.—The story is conventional, especially so is its having the hero go on a hunting expedition and get wounded by an accidental shot. It is pleasingly played and Alice Joyce is very pretty in the leading role. When the heroine has married the wounded hero to console his dying hours and the villain, who has persuaded her to take the step that he may marry the rich widow, calls too often, her note to him is one of the most natural of its kind we have ever seen. Indeed, all the scenes that fall around the time of that note are as natural as can be. There are some pretty sets and some perfect photography.

"THE SAVING LIE" (Patheplay), June 4.—A very trashy story along entirely conventional lines. It isn't acted with much vigor. There are some fine sets and, in part, the photography is excellent.

"A MODERN PSYCHE" (Vitagraph), June 4.—A charming picture whose story is prettily contrived rather than deep or true. In such offerings, fancy takes the lead and there is little or no imagination; they entertain surely, but do not stir the soul. It is a little love story of an author who has written a book called, "The Modern Psyche," and of a girl just home from college whom he chances to meet in a Grecian costume. The producer (Van Dyke Brooke) has been very careful in getting his atmosphere. The rickety house and musty library of the girl's father and the quality shown by the way her friends live, make it a delightful offering. Its story would only be possible in just this cultured world, refined and scholarly. There are many lovely scenes and the photography is clear and in some scenes perfect. Eliza G. Harral is the authoress and the leading roles are taken by Dorothy Kelly and Earle Williams with Van Dyke Brooke as the old father.

"SOME SPOTS IN AND AROUND LOS ANGELES" (Edison), June 4.—It contains some new angles in its views of what has been shown many times. The camera work is not extraordinary.

"DON'T WORRY" (Edison), June 4.—On the same reel is this farce with a message; but C. J. Williams has done much more amusing work. In the first part the worry gets over but not the fun, and the last half makes some laughter by broad humor. Mrs. C. J. Williams and William Wadsworth play the leads.

"WOMAN—PAST AND PRESENT" (Selig), June 4.—A series of motion picture scenes, designed to point out a message. The first part of it shows a time of hurry and bad manners with something added in the suffragettes who break windows. The other half shows a time of courtesy, seventy years ago on election day; but no poor voters are shown and the town meeting can adjourn, after voting, to dance the minuet. It is not a very sincere picture in either half. Written and produced by Lem Parker, it has been gracefully played with Kathlyn Williams, Harold Lockwood, Eugenie Besserer and A. Ernest Garcia in the leading roles. The first two are the lovers and Miss Besserer's old grandmother is astonishingly real. The photography is clear.

"THE FORGOTTEN LATCH KEY" (Vitagraph), June 7.—This comedy picture gives us the adventures of a married couple who, having left their latch key on the bureau, can't get into their own home. It is very late, the cook is away at a wedding and the second girl is asleep and snoring louder than any door bell rings. One will ask many times during the picture, "Why doesn't the man break a window pane to get in?" The expense would have been much less, for the taxi waiting before the door till morning cost $15.50. This keeps the comedy dull, it fails to get over strongly. The authoress is Mrs. Victor Koch, and it was produced by Ralph Ince. Harry Morey and Anna Stewart play the leading roles as husband and wife, who are locked out. Josie Sadler plays the cook; Florence Ashbrooke, the other girl, and James Lackaye, the cop; all add to the fun. The photography doesn't do the faces justice; but is fair.

"THE BACHELOR'S BABY" (Vitagraph), June 9.—A very artificial story is not quite put over by good acting in this picture. To tell the truth, it is a jumble of old stuff put into good scenes by the producer, Van Dyke Brooke, and pretty well played by Rogers Lytton, Rosemary Theby and Kate Price. The photography is good. Such a picture might get by with strong support from the rest of the bill.

"A TIMELY INTERCEPTION" (Biograph), June 7.—A conventional romance with some comedy, as is usual. There is some good character drawing in it, but no new situations or fresh characters or depth of meaning. It is a commercial offering, skillfully put together for the market. The setting is an oil well country, and the farm is going to be sold for a song, but is saved by the "timely interception." The photography is poor for Biograph.

"GET RICH QUICK BILLINGTON" (Patheplay), June 7.—A farce depending on two freak characters (Paul Zanher), a nifty financier of Jewish blood and (Rose Gore), a spinster who is fabulously rich, but not rich enough to make Paul want to marry her. There is a cleverly constructed farcical story which brings these two into amusing juxtaposition and keeps them before us until Paul, after being bailed out of prison, along with Billington, Rose's nephew, makes a getaway on a passing freight to escape marrying her. Clearly photographed and well acted, it makes a good offering and will be liked.

"JENKS BECOMES A DESPERATE CHARACTER" (Biograph), June 9.—A farce picture that makes a great deal of laughter and in which Dell Henderson plays a sit-by-the-fire husband whom his wife sends out with a half-dollar to be "a regular man." A good deal of the fun comes from the city police force of five, led by Charles Murray, the man who makes faces at the camera, and they have their hands full when Dell at length gets a heap-big-chief-buzzer going.

"RED HICKS DEFIES THE WORLD" (Biograph), June 9.—On the same reel is this lively farce which seemed to be even more enjoyed than the first. It is O'Shea, the best fighter in the village, come up against the champion middle-weight, Hicks, and after being horribly mauled for a few moments knocks the champion out. He had put a horseshoe in the back of his glove and, during a back-handed stroke, it brings him luck. There was roar after roar of laughter from the audience. Both are pretty well photographed.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 25" (June 9).—The photography of this number is not quite up to the standard; some of the best items suffer on account of this. There is not a great deal of news in this week's topical.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S CAPTURE" (Essanay), June 7.—Broncho is in love with a woman, sweetheart of a badman whom, as sheriff, he "wants." The ruse that he employs to make sure that she also is an accomplice was cleverly thought up and well put over. It gives a good deal of interest to the picture. The rest of it we have seen before, but it was perhaps necessary as a setting for the fresh part. The photography is not artistic and this makes several of the scenes seem uninteresting.

"SWEENY AND THE FAIRY" (Selig), June 9.—Sweeny, it will be remembered, lost his unexpected inheritance at cards—it was shown to us in a former offering. In this picture, he gets it back for a short time, while he is stealing forty winks after dinner under the brick wall he is building. There was some laughter, not a great deal, but it seemed to be watched closely. The script is by Chris Lane, and it was produced by Charles France. John Lancaster plays Sweeny, and Lyllian Leighton Mrs. Sweeny. The photography is fair.

"THE LEGEND OF LOVERS' LEAP" (Lubin), June 9.—An Indian legend with no white people in the characters. It is played by white actors, and rather poorly. It doesn't convince at all and is not very interesting. The story is wholly conventional and seems stale; it is a triangle, with a suicide of the lovers at the end.

"THE GREAT PEARL" (Lubin), June 9.—A melodrama without much meaning or logic. The story is not romantic, but rather prosaic, even unpleasant. The backgrounds are the lumber yards in Florida that we have seen often and they are not well photographed.

"WHILE JOHN BOLT SLEPT" (Edison), June 7.—This picture, written by Bannister Merwin, and produced by Charles Brabin, makes a good offering because, though its story is unconvincing, it has been well handled. While John Bolt sleeps, his conscience takes him out into his past to show him unworthy things that he has done. Conscience comes, armed with gleaming sword and Roman buckler, lordly and imperious, as conscience really is. Most of the double exposure scenes in which he appears and disappears are perfect and wonderfully impressive, and this impression is steadily maintained by the acting of Marc MacDermott, as Bolt, an old paralytic, and of Charles Ogle, the Visitant. The author has made Bolt, after seeing his injustices, correct them and, after correcting them, be cured of his disability which, on the showing, seems apoplectic and incurable; he hasn't made us believe in it.

"OTHELLO IN JONESVILLE" (Edison), June 9.—A burlesque with enough freshness to get by; though most of it seems like old vaudeville sketch stuff. Old stuff seems to go with the audiences; it is strange how many people haven't seen the old situations or heard the old jokes. This picture is by Herbert Prior, and was produced by Charles Seay, and deals with the poor actor out of work and hoofing it through the country (Herbert Prior), and with the gawky girl (Mabel Trunnelle), who is stagestruck. He teaches the farmer's family acting for his keep and they try to give a performance of Othello at the town hall. The fact that it was burlesqued, rather than played as a farce comedy, tells against it as killing its freshness.

"WHEN WOMEN ARE POLICE" (Kalem), June 7.—A slight farce, in kind and quality much like the usual offering by this company. It has Ruth Roland as a woman cop, and other players are Marshal Neilan and John Brennan.

"PERCY'S WOOING" (Kalem), June 7.—On the same reel is this farce with much more substance than the former. The situation is far from new, but it gives Marshal Neilan a chance to play "some sissy" (we quote from a stranger's comment to the man with him), which he does very effectively. Mr. Neilan is no novice in acting; his comedy character work is fine. As a sissy, he disgusts the girl he is wooing, so he employs a wrestler to let himself be thrown in a bout. Marshal's reputation gets so big on account of the bout that even the wrestler is afraid of him, and everything comes his way. (Perhaps a reputation as a scenario writer would be just as effective.) It makes a very good offering and the audience heartily laughed over it. Ruth Roland, John Young and John Brennan also have roles.

"THE RUBE AND THE BOOB" (Kalem), June 9.—A very fair farcical offering with enough freshness and enough fun to go. The girl (Juanita Sponsler) with the rube (Marshal Neilan) sees the boob (John Brennan) at the head of the circus and, later on in the afternoon, she throws balls at him with his head through the canvas curtain.

"THE SCHEME OF SHIFTLESS SAM SMITH" (Kalem), June 9.—On the same reel, this farce is original and very amusing. It is played by John Brennan and Marion Sais and, at its best, has just the quality to make a farce bite. The two make a good offering to lighten a program.

"MERCY MERRICK" (Edison), June 6.—This adaptation from Wilkie Collins' "The New Magdalene," gives Mary Fuller an opportunity to do some effective acting. She is ably supported by an excellent cast, all of whom deserve mention, i. e., Robert Brower, Bigelow Cooper, Gertrude McCoy, Mrs. Erskine and Richard Tucker. There are several fine situations, the last, where the nurse turned in her straight path and pretended to be another, had been detected, and confessed to the minister, being one of the best. Mr. Brower, as the surgeon, was strong. The interiors are well handled, great care being given to details. Altogether it is a good picture.

"BIRDS AND ANIMALS OF BRAZIL" (Patheplay), June 6.—Many splendidly photographed and interesting views of parrots, boa constrictors, crocodiles, of a sloth and of many monkeys.

"TANANARIVE" (Patheplay), June 6.—On the same reel as the foregoing are many scenes of this Madagascar city. There are bird's-eye views, pictures of the people, humble and notable, and of a horse race and of the people and stands.

"MAX'S FIRST JOB" (Patheplay), June 10.—This split-reel is the best offering released today by good odds. In the first half, Max Linder comes back with one of his welcome farces, not quite at his best, but very good; it markedly pleased the audience and there was a good deal of laughter. Max plays an awkward and inexperienced picture actor who has been taken on by Mr. Charles Pathe. Motion picture patrons will enjoy this offering.

"THE CHATEAU OF CHENONCEAU" (Patheplay), June 10.—On the same reel is this series of clearly photographed views of one of the beautiful castles of France, which is built like a bridge across the River Cher The only fault we have to find with such offerings is that they fail to give us enough information in the titles to enable us to know what we are seeing. To a person of no reading, they have little interest; others want to know who built it and why it was built across the river.

"TWO LITTLE KITTENS" (Edison), June 10.—A little story of sentiment that is not without its charm, though by no means a great picture. A rich woman's son has married a girl in his mother's employ and has been disowned. He has died, and his widow with two children has applied to her former mistress (her mother-in-law) for help, and unavailingly. The story's object is to get the rich woman to accept the children, but the means it takes to arrive at this end are too plainly contrived to convince. In the first place, a couple of kittens are brought in boldly and then the chauffeur is told to give them to the housekeeper to care for while the rich woman is in Europe. Now he might have known the woman's former seamstress (it wasn't shown nevertheless), he takes the kittens to her and lets her substitute her children for the kittens so that the housekeeper will care for them for a while. The means by which the woman and her mother-in-law are brought together in the hotel are also conventional. Such things cannot deeply interest and do not. Yet the offering has merit. It is wholesome and attractive because of the things it deals with. The producer has handled his scenes pretty well. The script, by A. H. Giebler, has been produced by Charles Seay. Mabel Trunnelle has the leading role, with May Abbey, Elizabeth Miller, Cora Williams, Paul McAllister and others in the cast.

"A HUSBAND'S TRICK" (Vitagraph), May 30.—Good comedy; in fact, unusually good. Emma Freeman has written a script which William Humphrey excellently produces. It is another use of the suffragette theme and of the forgotten sister of the husband; but there is a lot of fun, and that's what we want when we are promised a comedy. Lillian Walker portrays the wife, converted to suffragism and later forced back into less glorious but more husband-pleasing ways. She does well. Mr. Humphrey has the role of the serious husband and to the comedy adds the personal note. Florence Ashebrooke is the converter, and Rosemary Theby the visiting sister. All are deserving of praise.

"THE WOOD FIRE AT MARTIN'S" (Selig), May 30.—A pretty story The Bohemian atmosphere of the restaurant is sustained throughout. The script is written by Marc Jones and produced by E. A. Martin. It is a tale of an unsuccessful composer and of an accidental opportunity to get a hearing. Of course he is successful. Everybody again gathers about the alluring, great, wood fire and happiness reigns. Even the audience is in a pleased mood.

"HONOR OF A SOLDIER" (Edison), May 30.—No attempt is made in this picture to stage a battle. There is shown just a bit of it. The story rests on an incident growing out of the conflict. It will entertain in spite of the unlikelihood of a sergeant being unable to identify one of his men. Herbert Prior has the lead. Harry Eytinge is the sergeant.

"THE FAITH OF A GIRL" (Lubin), May 30.—A picture containing some good fire scenes. Ethel Clayton, as the faithful wife of a man arrested on his honeymoon for former crookedness, does fine and intelligent acting. Harry Meyer has the part of the husband. There are some well-staged prison interiors. Why is it that even in a well-to-do audience there will be many who will laugh at the lockstep? "The Faith of a Girl" is a good release.

"THE SPIDER WHICH LIVES IN A BUBBLE" (Patheplay), May 30.—An interesting film showing the habits of the water spider.

"TRANSPORTATION METHODS IN JAVA" (Patheplay), May 30.—On the same reel is this short film showing the difficulties of getting human and other freight from ship to shore on account of shallow water. The camera work was not always the best, although there was no means of knowing the troubles faced by the cameraman.

"THE BUTLER'S SECRET" (Vitagraph), June 6.—Here is a splendid picture, and it may be remarked in passing that from first to last no woman appears in it, which again goes to prove that love stories are not absolutely essential to make a picture hold. The story is of a son of a butler who attempts to rob his father's employer; the son of the house entering just as the father is searching for the intruder is mistaken for the burglar and ordered from his home. There are many thrills, legitimate ones, created by dramatic situations competently handled. It is a fine story that Marguerite Bertsch has written. Mr. Humphrey, who plays the householder, also directs. The three others in the cast are James Morrison, Charles Eldridge and George Cooper. Perhaps the best scene is where the outcast son, down and out, steals into his old home and is fed by the butler and then goes to his father's room just to get a look at him asleep, the light striking in on his face. It will stir every heart.

"MANILA NORMAL AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS" (Selig), June 6.—An interesting educational film, showing the children of the Philippines, and also views of the natives at work basketmaking, weaving and lacemaking.

"AN EMBARRASSED BRIDEGROOM" (Selig), June 6.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this comedy of the West, containing much horseplay. A prospective bridegroom goes to town to get an outfit, celebrates too much, gets into trouble and nearly loses his bride, but is finally forgiven.

"THE PENALTY OF JEALOUSY" (Lubin), June 6.—This rather unpleasant story of the Southwest is well made—there are well photographed views of an interesting country and the acting is good. Romaine Fielding writes the script; he also plays the lead.

"PHILIP MARCH'S ENGAGEMENT" (Essanay), June 6.—A comedy in which William Mason and Beverly Bayne have the leads. They will make much fun. While the story contains some "convenient coincidences," at the same time it works out all right. Had there been a flash at the conclusion showing the mixed trunks restored to their proper owners, and the man and the girl arrayed in their usual apparel, it might have added to the amusement.

"THE TERROR OF CONSCIENCE" (Kalem), June 6.—There is in this picture a real dramatic touch when the Italian, fleeing from what he believes to be murder and seeking a priest to confess, comes upon the actor standing by the stage door in the robe of Richelieu. That the man in the garb of a Cardinal should be the husband of the niece the Italian believed he had killed furnished a situation which presented great opportunities. The picture is well made and interests throughout. The principals in the cast, James Vincent as the actor, Alice Hollister as the street singer, and James B. Ross as the Italian, all do fine work.

"THE ACCUSING HAND" (Lubin), June 6.—Romaine Fielding writes the script of this two-reel special, as he also produces it and carries the lead in it. The picture bears the stamp of Fielding—it has the impress of his personality. The accusing hand is the hand of a detective pointed to a man he believes to be a murderer. Pointing the hand may be a man garbed as a Mexican, prosperous or otherwise; a business man, vagrant, Jew, old man, Indian, woman or tramp, but it is always the same person. That the silent third degree should finally break down the criminal is only to be expected. The picture is well directed, well acted and finely staged—furthermore, it is interesting.

"DAD'S LITTLE GIRL" (Selig), June 10.—Dad is out of work and his little girl is adopted by his dead wife's parents; but she pines in luxury. This situation is not at all new, but it is more convincing than the development for which the author is responsible. The picture aims at pathos, but fails to reach it. The little leading woman wears her gems even in scenes of poverty and there is no sincere acting. It has been well photographed and has several excellent scenes.

"VIOLET DARE, DETECTIVE" (Lubin), June 10.—It is hard to tell, at first, whether this picture is intended as a farce or a drama. It is not a picture to call strongly to city audiences who know much about criminals and detectives. In the East Side audience there were several who jeered some of the things it showed. Isabelle Lamon, as Violet, is nothing but a very pretty society belle and more or less ridiculous in the role of detective, while nothing could be more ridiculous than the work of the criminal, as shown. Such a picture may go in places; it surely has many very pretty scenes and has been finely photographed.

"CUTEY TRIES REPORTING" (Vitagraph), June 10.—Very little of the comedy of this picture gets over and it has been made solely for the sake of its comedy; the story is not such as one would depend on to give entertainment. It is filled with old stuff. On the other hand, it has been pretty well acted and now and then one could hear some of the audience laughing. Wallie Van, as the reporter, who has had it put up to him to get a story, has an impossible role, as has Paul Kelly, the girl's small brother, who blackmails Van. Zena Keefe, Alice Nash and Tefft Johnson have minor roles.

"THE SHADOWGRAPH MESSAGE" (Essanay), June 10.—Very poor photography hinders this not very original picture in some of its scenes. In part, it would have been obscure anyway. The climax, which is the only part of it that has not been used many times, is reached by a far-fetched incident, and cannot be said to get over.

"THE TRAGEDY OF BIG EAGLE MINE" (Kalem), June 7.—This special offering has been reviewed at length in a former issue of The Moving Picture World.

Independent

"SINCERITY" (Victor), June 13.—A conventional love story of well-defined type and old characters. Among these is the rich, young man, played here by James Kirkwood, who goes out on his adventures in search of true love and gets a job as a farm helper. The farmer is a woman of harsh disposition whose orphan niece (Gertrude Robinson) lives with her and is overworked. Some of the farm scenes are interesting, such as the woman farmer plowing, etc. The three tramps who break in the house are not made at all convincing, nor is the rescue either comedy or drama. The story is pleasing and has proved itself popular in the past. It has been clearly brought out and fairly well acted and photographed.

"THE CAPTURE OF AGUINALDO" (Bison), June 14.—A melodramatic romance in two reels, dealing with love and adventure in the Philippines, and giving a picture of the capture of the redoutable leader of the Filipino forces. It cannot be called historical, nor does it contain much that is truly convincing in a human way. It depends almost wholly on its battle scenes and these, indeed, are commendable; they have flash and vigor at times. The offering has its good points, such as a glimpse of the head-hunters, and its melodramatic incidents are not without their feeling of danger and of rescue. The photography is fair.

"THE WAR OF THE BEETLES" (Imp), June 14.—Here is a true novelty; we have never seen or heard of anything like it in pictures before. It gives us a little, grand romance, played by black beetles armed with swords and halberds and dressed in boots and hats. There are scenes in palace and garden, in an armed camp and on the wall of a besieged castle, also there is one in the dungeon of the tower and one in a romantic spot in the woods. It is very laughable and will afford amusement to all kinds of people; in fact, we think it an exceptionally promising offering. It has been cleverly made, clearly photographed, and none of it is dry.

"CARTOONS BY HY MAYER" (Imp), June 14.—On the same reel is a short length of amusing cartoons by the noted artist. They are clever, too.

"OUT AND IN" (Keystone), June 19.—This, on same reel with above, shows Ford Sterling as an escaped convict. He eludes the officers and enjoys a straw ride, but is recaptured. Very slight.

"HIS SACRIFICE" (Thanhouser), June 13.—The story of a doctor whose wife becomes jealous of his patients and kills herself entirely without reason. He goes West and later reveals his identity in order to operate on a child and saves its life. The appearance of the second doctor rather spoiled the idea of an emergency existing. A film possessing a fair degree of interest.

"MIMOSA'S SWEETHEART" (Majestic), June 8.—This is the first number we have seen showing Fred Mace in his new affiliation. He appears as the sweetheart of a pretty Japanese girl, played by a real daughter of Japan. There are several villains from whom he rescues her and later she rescues him by jiu-jitsu. A fairly entertaining half-reel.

"GARDEN OF THE GODS" (Majestic), June 8.—This, on same reel with above, gives interesting views of the famous resort near Colorado Springs.

"THE WAITERS' PICNIC" (Keystone), June 16.—This full reel Keystone offering shows us a waiters' picnic at the beginning. Mabel falls from a cliff and Ford has a hard time rescuing her. The scene shifts to a hotel where she is cashier and he is chef. He "doctors" the food ordered by a rival. Some amusement in this, but it is not exceptionally good.

"WHILE BABY SLEPT" (Thanhouser), June 10.—A live snake dominates this picture and it causes fully as many shudders as could be desired. There is a circus parade from which the snake escapes. It crawls into a house occupied only by an old man, a baby and a dog. The snake crawls on to the bed with the baby and the old man, who is physically helpless, sends a note by the dog to call the father to the rescue. This is successful as a sensation, but will probably be repulsive to sensitive observers.

"APACHE LOVE" (Nestor), June 18.—A typical Bison Indian picture, rather similar to one we saw a week or so ago called "The Vengeance of Skystone," in some particulars. The struggle in the branches of the tree was realistic.

"SORROWS OF ISRAEL" (Imp), June 19.—This three-reel story will appeal principally to houses with a strong Jewish clientele. It is presented by an entire cast of Jewish players and brings in the feast of the Passover and other religious rites of the kind. The hero goes through fire and water to win his sweetheart. He deserts his people and becomes a Christian, but later returns to save his own kindred from massacre. The interior settings are not very attractive, but the out-door scenes are satisfactory. The third reel contains a big surprise and some genuinely gripping scenes. A race story of good dramatic structure.

"THE CALL OF THE ANGELUS" (Frontier), June 12.—A picture that might have been made convincing by strong acting; but this has been very poorly acted. There are weak links, unconvincing points in the chain and they keep us from being deeply moved. The story is of Mexico, and one of its two chief characters thinks he has killed his rival in a duel. The remorse he feels whenever he hears the Angelus makes him come back to the village and confess. He finds the rival still alive. The backgrounds are fairly interesting.

"THE $10,000 BRIDE" (Powers), June 25.—Two comedians on the Weber-Field style make much fun. A ripple runs through the half reel.

"IT HAPPENED AT THE BEACH" (Powers), June 25.—On the same reel as the foregoing is a renewal of the barrel-for-clothes stuff that is not new or very funny.

"THE HIGHER LAW" (Imp), June 12.—Nothing very new in this photoplay so far as the situations are concerned, yet it has the quality of suspense in a marked degree. The manner in which the paymaster's wife defends the cabin against the murderous intruder until help is brought through the agency of the family dog was well handled. The death of the would-be robber from a bolt of lightning was purely a melodramatic effort and not very convincing. A fair release.

"WITHOUT REWARD" (Nestor), June 16.—Another story of a bandit whose heart was touched by a sick child's need of medicine. He brings the medicine at the expense of his own safety, but the mother's entreaties save him from violence. This picture is not handled to the best advantage in places and is not quite up to the Nestor standard.

"HER JOKE ON BELMONT" (Crystal), June 15.—A half reel comedy on same reel with "An Expensive Drink," which has been previously reviewed. The humor of this is forced and inconsequential, though the photography is first rate.

"THE TWINS OF DOUBLE X RANCH" (Frontier), June 14.—The humor of this depends largely upon the situation where one of the girls pours the "Elixir of Love" in the well. Animals and human beings are alike affected by its rejuvenating qualities. There is a fair amount of amusement in this, but it is not up to former successes offered by this company.

"A CALL FROM HOME" (Crystal), June 17.—A picture verging so closely upon both comedy and drama that it loses some strength as a result. Chester's victory over a rival in winning Pearl's love, and the later adventures in a mining stock exploit, make quite an entertaining story, however. The waterfall setting in the fore part of the film was very pretty.

"HEARTS AND FLOWERS" (Gem), June 9.—An obscure plot is the chief shortcoming of this otherwise pleasing film story. There is a good deal of sincere and well meant acting, but the first scenes give no clue to the plot and the final ones leave it still more or less of a mystery. A number of sub-titles would aid materially in getting this story clearly before the observer. The photography is soft and pleasing to the eye.

"ALADDIN'S AWAKENING" (Nestor), June 20.—A half-reel subject in which the hero finds a magic bracelet and has only to make a wish and it will be granted. The rugged coast setting helps out this fantastic bit, which is rather entertaining

"DAD'S SURPRISE" (Nestor), June 20.—On same reel with above. The girls give a surprise party and Dad is very much pleased until he gets a bill for $40 next day. It seemed to us the plot did not work out as clearly as might have been expected. Why did Dad agree to pay for everything that was ordered in the first place, is the observer's natural query.

"WHEN LIGHT CAME BACK" (Eclair), June 11.—A two-reel subject which for coherency and gripping interest surpasses many of this company's recent productions. Alec Francis appears to decided advantage in the role of the father, Barbara Tennant as the daughter, and Robert W. Frazer as the lover. The plot is very ingenious for the first reel and a half and its worst fault then is that it piles on so many complications that it becomes somewhat farcical. The hero's struggles in the straitjacket at the asylum might have been shortened; his escape from the institution was very realistic. The suspense is admirable in this, until the final overdose of "punch" renders it somewhat laughable. As a thrilling production, it succeeds very well.

"THE COMEDIAN'S MASK" (Imp), June 9.—An entertaining two-reel subject, with King Baggot in the leading role. The photography is unusually good and the setting and costuming attractive. The story goes back for its motive to the theme of the tragedy that lies behind the mirth of the comedy player. The scenes on the stage, during the progress of the play, and behind the scenes with the stage hands, were nicely handled. Mr. Baggot gives a very effective piece of character work. We should have cut the part showing his sufferings under the influence of the poison as being too unpleasant for presentation. At the close, he recovers, and his wife and child are beside him, the former cured of her love for the juvenile man. A good release.

"ANNIE LAURIE" (Reliance), June 16.—An appealing little photoplay built up around the well-known song, by Forest Halsey. The father's heart is touched as his daughter and the unwelcome suitor play Annie Laurie on the gramaphone. He recalls his own love affair, and scenes during his military career are flashed upon the screen. There is a tender note in the story and it is on the whole very pleasing.

"HIS UNCLE'S HEIR" (Reliance), June 9.—A plot of a somewhat made-to-order type, in which the uncle disinherits his nephew and marries a young girl. There is a mixup in the matter of the two wills and in the end the nephew falls in love with the young widow and marries her, thus straightening out all difficulties. The opening scenes are somewhat disconnected, but the story, though conventional, is not without considerable interest.

"HALF A CHANCE" (Reliance), June 14.—A three-reel subject from the book by Fred S. Isham. It runs along like a Drury Lane melodrama. The action is brisk and interesting. George Seigmann appears as "The Frisco Pet," an ex-prize fighter, who is convicted of a murder accidentally committed by Lord Ronsdale, the villain of the piece. Some scenes are taken on board the prison ship Success, but the long sub-title describing this fact pulls the observer's mind temporarily away from the story. The story does not lag at any point and moves along to a successful conclusion, wherein the ex-convict gets justice and marries the girl whose life he saved in the storm at sea. The production is not without faults, but has sustained interest throughout and is very good of its kind.

"THE SEAL OF SILENCE" (Kay-Bee), June 27.—This two-reel offering contains good photography and is well acted, but the plot is rather far-fetched. The story begins with some very modern strike scenes and works back through the course of years into typical Western Indian fighting. The boy, who was carried West in a box car, grows up among the Indians, and years afterward finds his mother after a massacre. It is hard to justify the historical side of this production, which is otherwise handled in very good style and has various points of merit.

"THE SOUL OF A THIEF" (American), June 16.—This two-reel offering is interesting, but the interest is not always a credit to the picture, which contains some very odd plot situations. There is a pretty girl sleepwalker, whose instincts lead her always to a certain valuable brooch, which she moves about in her sleep apparently to suit the convenience of the complicated plot. The chief character is "The Fox," a notorious gem thief. It is a surprise to learn that the girl's father had a dishonest streak in him, and this was not led up to very well it seemed to us. The photography is good and the story must be given credit for some freshness even though it is highly improbable and lacks conviction.

"THE SNARE OF FATE" (Thanhouser), June 17.—A two-reel offering which stands out well in comparison with many recent double numbers. James Cruze gives a fine characterization of the unscrupulous usurer, who is by a turn of fate evicted from one of his own tenement houses by his own order. Florence LaBadie appears to advantage also in the part of the young wife. The story covers a period of six years and is very nicely worked out. The scenes are in harmony with the spirit of the story and the photography is good. A desirable release.

"THE MARINE LAW" (American), June 21.—This is a comedy reel of fair interest. The political boss wants to marry the mayor's daughter, but she is in love with a young fellow and will not have him. The slight plot consists of the attempt made by the girl's father and the boss to prevent them from marrying. No license will be issued them and every exit from the city is guarded. They finally solve the difficulty, however, by inducing the captain of a vessel to marry them at sea. Good photography helps out the rather indifferent plot.

"THE HEAD OF THE RIBBON COUNTER" (Thanhouser), June 15.—A neat, little comedy offering, in which Harry Benham appears as a ribbon clerk whose popularity arouses feminine emotion of various kinds. He is discharged three times when complaints are made, but the wily employer retains him each time in a different disguise. A pleasing number that will help to diversify a programme of stronger stories.

"THE MESSAGE OF THE FLOWERS" (Majestic), June 10.—The story of a romantic girl who tires of the prosaic young gardener when a stranger visits the place. But the stranger returns with another girl with whom he is in love, and the first girl becomes ill and pines for the young gardener. He sends her flowers and then comes to her bedside. A simple plot, as will be seen, but worked out rather prettily.

"THE UNWRITTEN LAW OF THE WEST" (American), June 19.—A story of considerable strength in which Pauline Bush, as a Mexican girl, stabs a man who has wronged her. The hero, Warren Kerrigan, is arrested for the crime and, though the crime cannot be fastened upon him, is advised by the court to leave town. His sweetheart clears him. The photography is good and the plot has good points.

"THE TALE OF A BLACK EYE" (Keystone), June 19.—A half-reel comedy in which Fred Mace appears as a flirtatious married man. He is thrown out of a department store and gets a black eye. Later, he is humiliated by seeing himself in moving pictures in company with his wife. Quite entertaining.

"GREGORY'S SHADOW" (Solax), June 6.—A melodramatic story of a man arrested on evidence that is rather weak. The guardian of a girl kills a man when he is assailed. He contrives to place the blame on his ward's sweetheart, although he tells the girl he will save her lover from the chair if she will marry him. The old guardian walks in his sleep; also he writes an accusatory note, which falls into the hands of his ward. On his deathbed, to which apparently he is brought by the shock of finding himself uncovered, he confesses. Strangely enough, one of his auditors is the man falsely accused, though how he gets out of jail is not clear.

"THE FATAL GROTTO" (Itala).—This multiple-reel subject will charm, not alone because of pretty settings, but also on account of the quality of its photography and its finished appearance. The acting is good. There are several strong scenes in which the suspense is marked. The spectacular feature is an explosion in a grotto, in which two pillars of rock fall on the smuggler who is trying to force a marriage between himself and the daughter of a patriot against whom he possesses incriminating evidence of a conspiracy.

"THE USURER'S SON" (Great Northern).—There is a sawmill scene in this three-part picture which will recall to older theatergoers a somewhat similar situation in "Blue Jeans." The difference lies chiefly in the fact that in the play the victim was bound to the plank being drawn to the great saws, while in the picture a lover jumps from a window and falls across the trunk of a tree being borne to the saw. It furnishes a thrill. The picture might have been shortened without sacrificing any essential feature of the story, the ending of which is apparent long before the finish. The film will carry on its excellent photography.

"AN ENGINE OF DESTRUCTION" (Gaumont).—In these two reels is told a story of business intrigue in order to force a young woman shareholder in a large property to marry a man who also is a big shareholder. The picture will interest. There are good views of manufacturing works. The photography is praiseworthy. Suspense is created in the second reel by the obnoxious shareholder attempting to deprive the sweetheart of the young woman of his invention—a rapid-fire gun. The weapon is a very small one, by the way—a six-pounder, perhaps; but its exploding missile sets fire to a town. The conspirator confesses defeat, resigns his directorship and the lovers are happy.

"THE ACE OF HEARTS" (Dragon), June 9.—Several incidents in this drama of barracks life tend to weaken it. An officer is asleep; a mischievous girl slips in his unbuttoned coat collar a card. Later, the officer plays cards with his fellows. The card works out at his wrist—an athletic bit of pasteboard. The officer is court-martialed and dismissed out of hand. Later, he appeals to the major, commanding for reinstatement. A picture of military life should have some regard for customs and regulations.

"THE CALL OF THE ROAD" (Ramo), June 18.—Tramp comedy goes far to lighten the serious side of this drama. Messrs Logan and Reising are among the knights of the road who make the fun. Pauline Curley is the older of the two children who by their good work add to the interest of the picture. There is a good cast.

"MATRIMONY'S SPEED LIMIT" (Solax), June 11.—Farce comedy that may amuse a part of an audience, but by many will be deemed silly.

"THE TONGUE MARK" (Majestic), June 15.—Fred Mace appears in this as Suresholk Holmes, a burlesque detective. He discovers the mark of a dog's tongue near the scene of the crime and follows it in a fairly amusing manner, finally arresting the dog. But the stolen silverware is found by an officer and the real thief arrested. A burlesque of average interest.

"THE LAUNCHING OF THE EDGAR H. VANCE" (Majestic), June 15.—This, on same reel with above, shows the launching of a big vessel on the California Coast. We saw the same launching in a film released by another company.

"BEAUTIFUL BISMARK" (Majestic), June 17.—William Garwood appears in this as a young real estate agent, whose father threatens to disinherit him. A lunatic discovers oil on his tract of land and the young agent becomes rich as a result. The photography is good and there are some interesting views of the Los Angeles oil wells in this. The plot is very slight.

"THE DREAM HOME" (Reliance), June 18.—Another story of the neglected child. Runa Hodges appears as the small boy, who runs away with his dog to find the home he has been longing for. His mother, after a long search, awakens to her neglect of the boy, and thereafter his home surroundings are more pleasant. A variation of an old theme handled with a fair degree of interest.

"PROFESSIONAL JEALOUSY" (Nestor), June 2.—The laughing moments in this overcome its drawbacks. The cigarette smoking by the actresses and certain "rough house" antics lower the tone of the comedy somewhat. As a burlesque, it passes, and there are numerous mirth-provoking incidents.

"THE SPELL" (Powers), June 2.—This two-reel film is just weird enough and different enough to hold the attention strongly. It shows how a foolish girl went with some friends to visit a hypnotist. She becomes his victim and he commands her to get her clothes and follow him about the country as a hypnotic subject. He puts her to sleep in store windows and through familiar stage tricks. The young doctor, who is her lover, is desperate over the situation. Mere exposure of the hypnotist does no good so he studies hypnotism himself and overpowers the faker by sheer mental force. Dramatic, well acted and nicely pictured. A good offering.

FIRST AIRDOME IN UTICA.

The Aerdrome, of Utica, N. Y., is the newest and most novel motion picture theater in this city, which was opened early in May. The Aerdrome is an open-air playhouse. This al fresco effect has never before been attempted by Utica exhibitors. Clusters of electric lights have been installed in the front of the theater, which are turned off while the films are being shown. The house has a seating capacity of over 350, which can be enlarged should the patronage warrant such a move. The machine is in a booth over the entrance. In case of rain, large tarpaulins can be easily and quickly rolled over the raftered roof. The proprietor is W. J. Jacobus, a local dancing-master. The theater is situated on John Street, near Bleecker, the latter one of the main business thoroughfares of the city.

SALES OF ITALA FEATURES.

Feature film purchases during the week include that of C. Lalumiere, of Montreal, who will rent Itala's "The Shadow of Evil" in Canada. Arthur Wirtenberg, of Schenectady, who is showing "The Great Aerial Disaster" in New York State, is negotiating for "The Shadow of Evil." The Attractive Feature Film Exchange of Philadelphia have begun well with "The Dread of Doom" and have also obtained many bookings on "The Fatal Grotto." The Monarch Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, Mo., will show "The Dread of Doom" in their territory. E. T. Peter, of Dallas, Texas, has purchased another print of "The Great Aerial Disaster." A. Bradley, of Chicago, has purchased rights on "The Great Aerial Disaster" for Wisconsin and nearby States. Sol Lesser, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, while in New York renewed his standing order with Itala for all of their features. W. B. Schram, of Detroit, Mich., encouraged by his success with "The Palace of Flames," has purchased rights for Michigan on "The Great Aerial Disaster." L. R. Frank, one time with the Gaumont Company, now with the Sedeg Feature Film Company, is negotiating for the purchase of "Tigris" rights in Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

FAMOUS PLAYERS ENGAGE J. SEARLE DAWLEY.

Considerable gossip has followed the engagement by the Famous Players Film Co. of J. Searle Dawley, one of the star directors of the Edison Company. Congratulatory remarks figure in these comments, directed now toward Mr. Dawley and now toward the Famous Players, but we venture the belief that both are to be complimented upon their association. Mr. Dawley has been engaged to produce some of the big subjects for which the Famous Players are becoming more famous, and his past performances encourage the conviction that he is peculiarly adapted to this more important work.

J. Searle Dawley.

Mr. Dawley grew up in theatrical circles, and after a varied and extended experience, but at still a comparatively young age, manifested a keen knowledge and discernment of the principles of dramatic construction and production. After an exhaustive study of the theatrical world in all its phases, equipped with a comprehensive mastery of stage technique and an intuitive sense of dramatic value, Mr. Dawley employed his creative and imaginative genius, and set to work on a number of plays. The public has applauded no less than fifteen of his dramatic works, three of which have been on the road for four years—a certain sign of their popularity and appeal. Mr. Dawley's works include such historical subjects as "Marie Antoinette," his greatest success, which made a decided hit and is still popular.

It was almost to be expected that a man of such obviously active turn of mind and keen mental vision should have realized the unusual and increasing possibilities of the motion picture. Becoming affiliated with the industry, he quickly mastered film technique and after an association of five years with the Edison Company as general stage director, he is today an authority on motion picture production.

Under Mr. Dawley's capable direction have been produced the most striking spectacular and dramatic subjects of the Edison studios, among them being numbered "The Battle of Trafalgar," "Paul Jones," "The Doctor," and "The Man Without a Country."

A remarkably developed artistic sense, an infallible dramatic perception, an eye trained in proportion and perspective and a dominant personality combine to make Mr. Dawley invaluable in producing large, spectacular plays. His connection with the Famous Players Film Company should presage big events, and the wide scope of that company should enable Mr. Dawley to surpass his previous efforts.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THE life of the moving picture man in Central America is one round of joy, according to a letter just received from H. H. Buckwalter, who is making a series of negatives for the Selig Polyscope Company in that section of the world. The letter, according to Mr. Buckwalter's notation, was written "Somewhere at Sea," on the United Fruit Company's steamer, Santa Marta, and its racy and humorous style will be enjoyed by readers.

"The prices charged down here for moving picture exhibition would make an American manager sit up nights a-countin' of his money," the letter begins. "In Panama they range from 15 cents to $1 per seat, and the houses are always comfortably filled, the general rule being two shows each evening, with a program consisting of from three to five reels. At The Variedades, at Panama, and in San Jose, Costa Rica, one awful act of vaudeville is given in addition, and this seems to offer an opening for a few really good acts to come down here and put the game on a higher basis. What these 'acts' are paid I did not learn, but certainly some got too much, if they were paid at all.

"The pictures are generally of foreign birth, and the class usually of the kind that would throw a censorship board into fits. Senor J. D. Amador, of Panama, who is the real brains of the whole picture situation in Central America, told me some of the plots of the filth he is getting abroad and is compelled to show. One, by a French maker, is based on a dog, two lovers and a girl, and the explanation was enough for me. I certainly did not care to look at the film which, I was afterward told, made a decidely bad impression even on the 'spiggoties,' who seem hardened to filth and smut.

"The sights and scenes in Central America certainly would not be quite appropriate for Fifth avenue where, possibly, the cold weather might compel at least 'some' clothes. And this is remarkable, too. In Panama, where the American tourist flourishes, the naked boys roam the streets and the mothers seem proud to show them to the multitudes. The girls seldom are naked.

"In Costa Rica the girls are the most beautiful found in the world, and here morality and convention reign with perfect control. The women have forms and complexions positively without equal, and the way they use their eyes makes a Northerner wonder whether all the stars have not dropped from heaven to grace the superb beauties of this tropical land. But it's not tropical, for the altitude is over 5,000 feet, and you sleep under blankets. That is, if you sleep. In the morning you figure how many lottery tickets you will buy, and then you count the flea bites on your body. If you have over 20,000 you don't buy a single ticket, because they issue only that many. Just think of the enormous expense of playground the body of a fat man offers, and then imagine my annoyance at being compelled to buy three tickets to approximate the number of bites!

"But let's get back to the girls. In Costa Rica, caste rules the game. If you meet a queen in the higher circles and try to introduce her to your very charming friend in a slightly lower circle, you immediately fall from grace. Feminine oil and water will not mix, and even the different grades of the finer qualities of oil refuse to mingle. When a young fellow goes gunning for a wife, he plays a full hand; for he cannot take the girl out alone. Mother and sisters go along, and seats at the Teatro Nacional cost as much as $5 each. Incidentally, the Teatro Nacional is the finest amusement house on the American continent, and only one in Europe is finer. The finest in New York and Chicago are commonplace in comparison. Well, the love-making game for the young Costa Ricans is played on the square and courtships are brief, because it would require a millionaire to keep it up very long. There are no locks, wickets or bars. But go to Colombia, where the windows have the old Spanish wickets and grilles and the love-making must be done at comparatively long distance—a few inches, possibly—and things are decidely different. The grilles may be intended for this purpose but they are not so used. The young folks don't even bother about laughing at locksmiths, but they quickly go the limit and the marriage ceremony is omitted, mainly because the priests charge such enormous fees.

"But this is straying from moving pictures. The theaters at Panama are quite nicely appointed. The Variedades, of course, is the most pretentious house, but it shows such awful 'vaudeville.' The Teatro Amador is not so large, but it is decidedly the best place in Central America. A new house has just opened at Avenida Centra and this will soon become very popular; but, just at present, the very best people in Panama patronize the balcony of the Amador which is strictly and closely reserved. President Porros and his beautiful wife are almost nightly visitors. Governor Thatcher and his charming wife are almost as regular in their attendance, and when they come it is certain the elite of the town will follow; for Mrs. Thatcher is something of a dictator in Panamanian society. She babbles Spanish like a native and is extremely gracious as well as diplomatic in her methods.

"At Colon the theaters are not very pretentious, but they enjoy very nice patronage. They do not try to segregate the classes, simply because the complexion of the place is extremely dark. I forgot to say that Senor Amador is being boycotted by the Chinese, because he will not permit them to occupy the president's box and mingle with the really nice people. It is remarkable that on the Isthmus the best English is spoken by the Chinese and the poorest by the Jamaican subjects of England. The American tourist ranks somewhere in between these limits; and, more often, nearer the lower scale than the higher. The Chinese are really the big merchants and solid citizens, from a commercial standpoint, while the natives put in their time effervescing and trying to start a revolution, which they can not do under present conditions.

"In Carthagena (pronounced Carta-hay-nah) the theaters are very nicely arranged and well handled. A new airdome is almost ready to open and it is quite equal to anything in the States. The seating capacity will be nearly 3,000 persons. The screen is solid wood and the orchestra chairs, the regular theater seats with five-ply veneer fittings, the same as used in the nice houses of the States. Around the outer rim of the place is the 'luneta,' or semicircle of boxes, and back of that the 'gallery,' or cheapest seats. French machines will be used, but the owners are trying to get American films with Spanish titles, which they seem unable to do at the present time.

"Carthagena is one of the most wonderful towns on the American continent. It is nearly 400 years old and is surrounded by a very thick wall, with sentry boxes and forts and all sorts of warlike things, once used to repel pirates. Back of the town is a big convent on the summit of a mountain, and from this an underground passage connects with the crypt below the cathedral. Centuries ago, when the original Mr. Morgan went a-pirating around and women were considered more precious than gold, he stormed Carthagena and took the town. Two hundred nuns cast themselves over the cliff and were instantly dashed to death.

The Keys of Carthagena for a Moving Picture World.

"The moving picture magnate of Carthagena is Senor Belisario Diaz, and, as he was educated in America, he is rapidly adopting modern ideas. The first question he asked me when the ship touched the wharf was, 'Have you a late copy of the Moving Picture World?' Very fortunately I had four copies that had accumulated at Colon, during my absence in Costa Rica, and when Senor Diaz got these he swore undying friendship and offered to get me the keys of the town. But I preferred to pay my way even if my day's expense did amount to the mere bagatelle of $1,500.

When I arrived in port, I exchanged a $20 American bill for just $2,000 Colombian money, which is worth 100 for 1. A bottle of White Rock water cost me $90, and the automobile something like $900 for a couple of hours. It cost $5 to send a letter back to the States, and another $5 to ride back to the dock in the little tram car. Gee! What a place for the motion picture plutocrats, who, a few years ago, did not eat with any regularity, and now try to dazzle the world with their extravagances!

"Puerto Colombia has no picture shows except the natural ones posed by the natives. The place is ultra-primitive, and a sign over the dock tells that it costs $10 to walk ashore and $15 to walk back. Santa Marta has one airdome, but it does not compare with the one at Carthagena. It is too far from the Bowery.

"The town of Puerto Colombia is made up entirely of thatched native huts and unwashed population. It is the seaport for the very pretty and busy town of Barranquilla, where picture shows flourish in profitable style. Every Sunday the railroad brings a trainload of the better class to Puerto Colombia, where they buy luncheon on one of the big United Fruit steamers, take a dip in the surf, and then go back.

Of Interest to Show People.

"There is one bit of information that may be of use to show people. The Y. M. C. A. organization of the Isthmus brings in a show company about twice a month. The arrangements are made, primarily, by the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in New York, but must be ratified by the convention of house managers on the zone. The acts desired are mostly musical, and must have at least three or four pretty girls. About eight or ten people is the limit. The commission furnishes all expenses and transportation from and back to New York, in return for eight shows. After that, from six to eight shows are paid for in cash, at from $75 upward, per night. If the company is strikingly good, an engagement is secured at the National Theater, Panama, where the profits amply pay for the trouble of the trip from the States. The class of shows wanted can best be described as the kind that make big hits at Chautauquas, although a couple or three good, clean vaudeville teams could work together and go big here, and not only fill in idle time but make considerable money as well. The fact should not be overlooked that the temperature on the Isthmus, in summer, is much more pleasant and cooler than in New York; so the trip would be delightful as well as profitable."

Mr. Buckwalter will return to the United States early in July.

Chicago Brevities.

A. M. Beglinger and J. Herwig, of Appleton, Wis., were visitors at this office June 6th. Mr. Beglinger owns the Bijou Theater in that city. He has been running vaudeville, but will discontinue that form of entertainment on June 15th. On June 21st the theater will be opened as a moving picture house, under the name of the Majestic Theater. The house has a seating capacity of 550. Licensed service will be used, and the admission will be 5 cents. Mr. Herwig will be manager of the Majestic.

H. Z. Levine, publicity and sales manager of Solax, arrived in the city Friday, June 6th. He left for Milwaukee Sunday night. His route thereafter takes in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Denver, and thence to the coast. He will return through the South, taking in Texas, Louisiana and other southern states. Mr. Levine stated that he has sold state rights in all states so far visited for "Kelly from the Emerald Isle." He stated also that he had made arrangements with several exchanges to take the Solax output. Mr. Levine will organize a national publicity system for his company, with local newspapers in every city visited, throughout his present trip.

J. E. Sloan, chief operator of the Star Theater, 63rd and Justine Sts., called at the World office last week and purchased a Handbook. Mr. Sloan is a progressive young man, and is desirous of learning all that he can about projection. He is a big booster for the new Handbook, which he considers an invaluable aid to operators. He reported that the Star is doing very fine business. Three-reel programs, licensed service, are offered at 5 cents. The program is strengthened by singing numbers and appropriate instrumental music. Messrs. Blanchard and Hill are owners and managers of the Star.

Thomas Furniss, of the Brunswick Company, Duluth, is building a new theater in that city, which will cost, when completed, $115,000. The auditorium will seat 1,400 people, and Mr. Furniss declares that it will be a model in regard to its arrangements for the comfort of patrons. There will be rest rooms, a children's nursery, smoking room, etc. The box seats will be placed in the rear. The lobby will be very elaborate, Mr. Furniss says. He has been an exhibitor for years in Duluth. The new houses will combine the best ideas gained by him, by extensive travel throughout the United States and Canada, and he is certain that when he throws the doors of the new house open to the people of Duluth, they will see one of the most up-to-date photoplay houses in the United States.

Gus Johnson, owner of the Majestic Theater, Ashland, Wis., paid the city a visit recently. The Majestic is the finest house in Ashland. It was built especially for moving pictures, and seats 700 people. His regular admission price is 10 cents, but when he runs specials, he charges 25 cents. He stated that business is in excellent shape in his locality. Mr. Johnson is enthusiastic over the future of moving pictures and prides himself on the fine projection of his pictures and on the musical accompaniment.

H. Mason, of the Masko Film Co., New York, paid a pleasant call at this office, Saturday, June 7th. Mr. Mason has just returned from the Pacific Coast, and is continuing a flying trip throughout the country in the interests of his firm. He expressed himself as being much pleased with the business outlook, and stated that there is a great demand for good feature subjects. He said that exhibitors are getting away from the blood and thunder films and that they demand instead high class productions. The Blanche Walsh Resurrection film, by the Masko Film Co., has proved a most successful feature everywhere, Mr. Mason stated.

Art Naylor, a colored playwright, writer of vaudeville sketches and contributor to magazines, announces that S. H. Dudley the well known negro comedian, and especially known as the leading man in the play, "Dr. Beans from Boston," is about to give up his work on the stage and engage in the production of films. These films, which it is said will be features, will be acted by colored people, and produced and manufactured by colored people. Mr. Naylor finds that there is a great demand from colored people throughout the country for films in which men and women of their own race appear as the actors. It is well known that there are quite a number of colored theaters in the South, but none in the North that I can call to mind at the present writing.

Carl Ray writes me, June 9th, that he has just sold the Amuse, Elite and Majestic Theaters to the Paul J. Schlossman Co., and his other two theaters, the Lyric and Orpheum, to Jos. A. Richter. As everyone knows, Mr. Ray lives in Muskegon, Mich., and that he controlled the amusement business there, both in vaudeville and moving pictures. Mr. Ray writes that it is possible he may enter into the manufacture of moving picture films in Los Angeles, in the near future.

MILLER BROTHERS SUE UNIVERSAL.

A suit for $100,000 damages was brought in the United States Court, Saturday, May 31, by the Miller Bros., owners of the "101 Ranch Wild West" show, against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and Carl Laemmle. In addition the plantiffs asked that the film company be restrained from using the name "101 Ranch" in connection with the manufacture or distribution of wild west pictures.

In their petition the Miller Brothers assert that they have been operating a moving picture plant and have established a business for the distribution of these pictures in connection with their ranch of 101,000 acres in Oklahoma.

Dennis F. O'Brien and M. L. Malevinsky are attorneys for the plaintiffs.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

THE NEW YORK CONVENTION.

PRESIDENT M. A. NEFF left Cincinnati, O., last Friday for New York, and will make his headquarters at the Imperial Hotel, 32nd St. and B'way, after that date. He will occupy suite 243 and 245, and the latch string will be out for all exhibitors until after the convention. The big convention and exposition promises to be one of the biggest events that has happened in New York in some time. Thousands of exhibitors from all parts of the United States and Canada, with a large delegation from abroad, are expected. The first session of the convention is scheduled to take place on Monday and it is expected that the address of welcome will be made either by Governor Sulzer of New York State, or by Mayor Gaynor of New York City. Addresses will also be made by Gov. James M. Cox of Ohio, and by the Hon. Joseph B. Foraker of Cincinnati, who is general counsel for the National League. John J. Lentz, counsel for the Ohio State League is also expected to be present.

Much Entertainment.

Elaborate arrangements are being made for the entertainment of visiting delegates and their families and friends. Chairman Hilkemeier of the committee of entertainment, announces that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has agreed to take care of the visitors on the first day of the convention. Motor busses will take parties to the several studios at Fort Lee, N. J., from the Grand Central Palace, with a stop at Palisades Park for supper. At the park a variety of entertainment will be provided including an open air show in which the photoplayers of the various producing companies will take part.

Tuesday, July 8, will be Edison Day. Arrangements have been made to give the delegates and their friends a sightseeing tour of a part of New York City, ending with a luncheon and entertainment at the Edison studio in the Bronx. Pictures of this party will be taken and displayed on the screen at the Exposition Hall on the following day.

A day will be set apart for the General Film Company, on which that company will take full charge of the entertainment. A big time promised for all who participate.

Other features in the line of entertainment will be provided by the Kalem Company, Pathe Freres, the New York Motion Picture Corporation the Biograph Company, Hugo Reisinger and many other firms interested in the motion picture trade.

On Friday, July 11, the delegates will be the guests of the Vitagraph Company. A special train has been secured to take the party to the Vitagraph plant in Flatbush where the big surprise of the convention will be sprung.

There will be available at all times automobiles and sightseeing cars to provide amusement for the wives and sweethearts and other friends of the delegates who may not be otherwise engaged.

Work for the Convention.

Among other things to be done by the delegates at the New York convention will be to perfect the machinery of the big organization that is to perform so important a part in the growth of the motion picture business in America. It is expected that several important changes in the form of the league will be made and it is advisable for all delegates to be present to take part in the deliberations.

At present there are several committees working hard to put the final touches on the arrangements. Clem Kerr, of Dayton, Ohio, who has been so successful in organizing conventions, assisted by L. R. Thomas of Wheeling, W. Va., another hustler for the league are on the ground helping the other committees with their work.

List of Exhibitors at the Exposition.

For the past eight months the Exposition Committee has been hard at work securing exhibits and attractions for the big show, which will be the first of the kind ever held in America. From the standpoint of the trade, the exposition will be complete. Every form of motion picture device known to the trade will be shown in operation.

For the public there will be much to attract and entertain. Features of every discription will be provided. There will be the several model theaters with pictures running from morning until night. Hundreds of the most popular picture players will be present to meet their admirers.

Up to the present writing nearly all the space in the Grand Central Palace has been taken. A partial list of the exhibitors follows:

General Film Company, Mutual Film Corporation, Kinemacolor, Famous Players' Company, National Educational Film Company, Nicholas Power Company, Precision Machine Company, Standard Machine Company, Eberhardt Schneider, Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., American Seating Co., H. W. Johns-Manville Co., United Electric Light Company, New York Edison Company, Novelty Slide Company, Scott & Van Altena Company, Manhattan Slide Company, J. H. Genter Company, Day & Night Screen Company, American Theater Curtain & Supply Company, Koerting & Mathiesen, Picture Theater Equipment Company, G. H. Masten Realty Company, Newman Mfg. Co., Menger & Ring, Lang Mfg. Co., Bell & Howell, Spray Ozone Co., Electrene Co., Bausch & Lomb Co., Whyte-Whitman Co., Ernest Boecker, Berry Wood Piano Player Co., R. Wurlitzer Co., Oshkosh Metal Products Co., Aschenbock & Miller Inc., United Ticket and Supply Co., and all the trade publications.

Banquet for the Windup.

As now planned there will be a big banquet for the concluding feature of the convention and exposition. The place for this event has not been announced, but it is expected that there will be accommodation for more than a thousand people.

Every exhibitor should arrange his business affairs to enable him to spend the convention week in New York, for the likes of the big meeting in July will not happen again in several years.

MAINE EXHIBITORS MEET.

Moving picture exhibitors from all corners of Maine met at Waterville, on Wednesday, June 4, and held what was known as the Maine Moving Picture Exhibitors' first annual convention. The inclement weather on Tuesday and early Wednesday, hindered many from attending who would otherwise have been present. There were sufficient present, however, to make the affair a great success. The convention opened with a special exhibition of Mutual films in the Silver Theater. Shortly after 10 o'clock, the exhibitors and various representatives of the moving picture machine manufacturers, witnessed one of the best exhibitions of films that has ever been shown in the State of Maine. Several single reel pictures were shown, but the greatest treat was the five-reel subject "The Battle of Gettysburg." Following the display of pictures, which was over shortly before 1 o'clock, the exhibitors went to the local armory, where a delightful buffet lunch was served.

At the conclusion of the luncheon, Fred B. Murphy manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's Maine Branch, called the exhibitors together and made an able address in which he earnestly urged the exhibitors to league together, as have their brother workers, in nearly every state, to protect themselves against unjust legislation that would be detrimental to their business. The exhibitors were advised what benefits the trade in other states had secured for their business simply by being banded together for a common cause. C. B. Kelleher, manager of the City Opera House, acted as chairman of the convention. A committee was then appointed to take steps toward making the temporary organization a permanent one. F. X. Cote, a well-known exhibitor of Biddeford, Me., was appointed a member of the committee but withdrew because of the difficulty of getting from Biddeford to the large cities, where the exhibitors will meet. The final committee appointed consisted of Arthur Allen, of the Palace Theater, Bangor; J. A. Emery, of the Star Theater, Bar Harbor; and Michael St. Ledger of Skowhegan.

Each exhibitor present was assessed a nominal sum, in order to defray current expense of the committee, and to bring M. A. Neff, president of the National League, and his organizers to Maine. The Board appointed will confer with the Exhibitors' League of America, and with Mr. Neff, who was unable to be present on account of sudden illness at Baltimore, and will report at a special meeting of the exhibitors, which will be held in Bangor, in about two weeks. The exhibitors left Waterville well pleased with the cordial reception tendered them, and, from indications, Maine exhibitors will soon have a healty baby in the shape of the youngest member of the Exhibitors' League. Now that such an encouraging start has been made the matter should be pushed right along, and nothing left undone to assure the formation of the Maine league.

MARYLAND EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

A large gathering of Maryland exhibitors assembled at the Hotel Emerson, Baltimore, Md., on Tuesday, June 3, to assist in the forming of the Maryland Exhibitors' League. The convention lasted two days and was composed of exhibitors from all over the state to the number of about 200. President Neff of the National League was present and addressed the assembled exhibitors during the convention and at the banquet which was held Wednesday evening. Officers were elected as follows:

President, Marion S. Pearce; National Vice-President, J. Howard Bennett; 1st Vice-President, Oliver J. Allenbaugh; 2nd Vice-President, James H. Hartlove; secretary, Frank H. Durkee; treasurer, Harry Morehead, all of Baltimore; sergeant-at-arms, S. I. Rosenburg, of Annapolis.

J. Howard Bennett, Elected National Vice-President for the Maryland Exhibitors' League.

Delegates to the annual convention of the National League in New York are: J. Wertheimer, Cumberland; George List, Frederick; Isaac Ulman, Salisbury; A. Anderson, M. S. Pearce and William Fait, Baltimore. Alternates: George Benjamin, T. J. Bohannan, Bernard Depkin, Jr., William Kalb, Joseph Brodie and Harry Lewy, all of Baltimore.

Auto rides about Baltimore, cabaret shows and trolley trips provides an abundance of entertainment for the exhibitors and their wives during the convention.

KANSAS STATE BRANCH CONVENTION.

The Kansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held their third convention at the National Hotel, Topeka, Kansas, on June 2 and 3. Although the attendance was not large the meeting was a very enthusiastic. A large amount of routine business was transacted and several important matters disposed of.

Delegates and Alternates to the National Convention were elected. The reports of Pres. C. E. Glamann and Secretary McGrum showed a healthy increase in membership. Jack Brainard of Mulberry was appointed State Organizer and he was assured a hearty co-operation of the visiting exhibitors in assisting him in increasing the membership.

National Deputy Organizer, G. H. Wiley of Kansas City, Mo., was a guest of the Kansas State Branch and made several effective addresses during the convention.

The next convention of the State Branch will be held at Hutchinson, Kansas, October 21 and 22. Hutchinson is the home of National Vice-President E. Wayne Martin and he assured the State Branch that no stone would be left unturned to make this convention a success.

EXHIBITORS MEET AT WILKESBARRE, PA.

A special meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Northeastern Pennsylvania was held at Hotel Hart, Wilkesbarre, Pa., recently. Exhibitors were present from Scranton, Jessup, Nanticoke, Plymouth and other nearby towns. The National Censor Congress plan advocated by President Neff was endorsed and other important business matters were discussed.

President Gilbert C. Miller, of Plymouth, suggested that the Northeastern Association make application for membership in the Pennsylvania State Branch. It is likely that this action will be taken.

BUFFALO THEATERS IN LEAGUE.

The following theaters are represented in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Buffalo; Amuse, 1820 Genesee St.; Amherst, 1848 Niagara St.; Ariel, 173 High St.; Arcadia, 439 William St.; Bellview, 311 Michigan St.; Bijou, Main and North Division Sts.; Colonial, Genesee and Grey Sts.; Elite, 867 Genesee St.; Edisonia, 516 West Utica St.; Empire, Main, near Ferry; Fillmore, Fillmore Ave. and Broadway; Fillmore Palace, 1264 Fillmore Ave.; Gem, 128 Grant St.; Globe, Main and Ferry Sts.; Happy Hour, 527 Main St.; Keith's, 213 Main St.; Lyceum, 330-332 Broadway; Majestic, 150 East Ferry St.; Mirror, Plymouth Ave. and Connecticut St.; New Theater, 649 Main St.; Oakdale, Seneca and Babcock Sts.; Orial, 1604 Genesee St.; Owl, Sycamore, cor. SCHULBERG—JAFFE.

Ben. P. Schulberg, publicity man for the Famous Players, and Miss Adeline Jaffe were married on Saturday, June 14, and gave a delightful wedding in the evening at the Savigny.

Group of Baltimore Exhibitors Constituting the Committee of Arrangements for the Recent Maryland Convention.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE WEAKER MIND" (Lubin).

This photo-melodrama is a powerful lesson for the cause of temperance and the horrors of life in the underworld. The worth of honest labor is set side by side with the rum shop and the failings of a reckless woman. The worthy side has the better of the fight and two souls apparently doomed are rejuvenated and made supremely happy.

Bracey Curtis, a solid engineer respected by everybody, took Bob Glore to the superintendent after he had been discharged for drinking and promised to be responsible for him. Bob sobered up and was beginning to make a man of himself when one day he met his sister Mary and Reina Loeb, a reckless girl, daughter of Dave Loeb, a drunkard. Reina enticed Bob into a resort and induced him to drink. Mary, his sister, went to Bracey, and the two assisted the intoxicated man home. Later Glore meets Bracey's daughter Beth. Her goodness and purity strike him forcefully and he returns to the path of rectitude. Dave Loeb in a drunken fit falls and breaks his neck and Curtis takes the reckless daughter into his home. There the pure environments soon have an effect on the former temptress and she bows low before the God that rules the Curtis household. Bob's reformation is rewarded by Beth's love. Mary gives Bracey, the widower, her hand in faith, hope and love, and Reina's heart overflows with thankfulness and appreciation.

Scene from "The Weaker Mind" (Lubin).

"ZOE, OR A WOMAN'S LAST CARD" (Hecla).

This three part feature is a direct adaptation from the famous novel of the same name by Coralie Stanton and Heath Hosken. Goeffrey Brooke, about to seek his fortune in Africa, leaves under a sketching pad a large sum of money for his best friend, Noel Crawley, an impecunious art student. Years later Noel is commissioned to paint a "Circe" for an art exhibition. A model styling herself only "Zoe" appears and is so beautiful that Noel paints a wonderful picture. He finds that Zoe loves him, but he repulses her, as he is engaged to marry. He sends Zoe a note telling her all is over between them. "The day you marry this girl I will kill myself," is Zoe's reply. Goeffrey Brooke returns home one day, a rich man. He has married in the meanwhile. Noel finds to his horror that his best friend's wife is Zoe, who has given him all her love. He gets into the art exhibition and changes the face of "Circe" so that Brooke may not know. Zoe seeks Noel for the final time, and on being repulsed, plays her last card. She takes poison. Noel gets Brooke to aid him and extracts his promise that he will not look at the face of the woman who killed herself in the studio. Goeffrey, all unknowing, helps Noel dispose of the body. He wonders why his wife does not return from her visit to relatives, but he never knows that her love for his friend has cost her life. He never knows.

"AN UNWELCOME WEDDING GIFT" (Great Northern).

In this rippling comedy, the proprietor of a motion picture theater, his charming daughter and a young film actor assume the principal roles. Mr. Striebolt has accumulated a fortune in his business and he is desirous of giving his daughter's hand in marriage to someone whom he considers entirely worthy. Jack Wormold, a young actor who has made a success in the silent drama, is an admirer of Agathe, but daddy objects because the ardent swain has not sufficient of the world's goods. There are many stormy scenes and in the end Jack is ordered from the house.

At this junction, Count von Swindlestone appears upon the scene. He is of the impecunious type of nobleman, but Striebolt favors his suit because he comes of a noble family. Much against her will Agathe is induced to become engaged to the count, but Jack in the meantime warns her to delay the marriage so that he may make good his suspicions of the count's good faith. He has not long to wait. The count makes an appointment with a well known music hall actress and arrangements are made for a short trip into the country.

Scene from "An Unwelcome Guest" (Great Northern).

Jack disguises himself and with a camera follows the couple to the train. He "snaps" many affectionate embraces and boards the same train with the count and his companion and remains until they reach their destination. Several days later, Striebolt arranges a theater party at his photoplay house and the Count and Agathe are among the guests. With the connivance of the operator in the theater, the pictures of the count and his fair companion are thrown upon the screen and at once there is a commotion in the Stiebolt party. The count tries to make explanations, but they are of no avail and after he has been handed his "walking papers" by the irate parent, Jack and Agathe receive the parental blessing and all ends well. The comedy is filled with lively action and is presented according to the Great Northern standard, which speaks for itself.

PREMIER FILM COMPANY ORGANIZES.

Announcement is made of the organization of the Premier Film Company, to be capitalized at $100,000. The officers are as follows: Albert Amato, president; C. A. Willat, of the New York Motion Picture Company, vice-president; H. J. Streyckmans, of the Mutual Film Corporation, secretary, and Oreste Zallio, treasurer.

The fact that such well known and able film men as Willat and Streyckmans are associated in this enterprise would indicate that the operations of the company will not only be extensive, but well handled.

"HER SUPREME SACRIFICE" (Pyramid).

Warner's Feature Film Company have just released "Her Supreme Sacrifice," a dramatic love story in three reels made by the Pyramid Film Company, of New York.

Thrill follows thrill with unusual rapidity throughout the entire production. The quarry scene, where a tremendous blast is set off, resulting almost fatally to the principal in the play; the ball-room scenes with "tango" dancing by professional cabaret dancers, and the picturesque country scenes have never been equaled in any motion picture. The photography is absolutely perfect in every scene.

HER SUPREME SACRIFICE

Scene from "Her Supreme Sacrifice," a Three-Reel Warner's Feature.

Mary Manson, a beautiful country girl, loves and is loved by John Bennett, the foreman of Stony Ridge Quarry. Against the will of Mary's mother the two are betrothed. Courtleigh, a millionaire's son, buys the Manson property for a fabulous sum. The remainder of the story deals with the schemings of Mary's ambitious mother to match her with Courtleigh against her wishes. How John, who has been injured in an accident at the quarry, finally wins his boyhood sweetheart, provides a story of unusual sweetness and interest.

BLINKHORN TO MARKET HECLA FILMS.

Albert Blinkhorn, whose offices are on the eighteenth floor of the World Tower Building, 110 40th Street, New York City, has secured the agency for Hecla Films for the American market. The Hecla Company is one of the largest European manufacturers of pictures, with establishments in London and Paris. The product is most favorably known through several pretentious features such as "Oedipus Rex," and "Adrienne Lecouvreur," in which Madam Sarah Bernhardt appeared.

Mr. Blinkhorn's first offering of Hecla films will be "Zoe, or a Woman's Last Card," a three reel adaptation from the famous novel of the same title by Coralie Stanton and Heath Hosken. Two famous Parisian artists, Regina Badet and Paul Guide, will appear in the leading parts. It is a distinct novelty and will be sold on the state right basis.

"QUO VADIS?" STATE RIGHTS SELLING.

The rapidity with which territory rights are selling for the three reel production of "Quo Vadis?" fully demonstrates the demand for that picture. The Quo Vadis Film Co., of 145 West Forty-fifth Street, has received a dozen bids for every state, in fact, state right operators are offering fabulous prices for territory. The South American rights have been sold to Walter McCallum; Colon, Panama, the European rights to H. Winnik, London, England, and the Australasia rights are sold to Geo. R. Harper, Sydney, Australia.

This splendid three reel production bases its appeal to the public on the many remarkable scenes laid in the time of the early Christians in Pagan Rome when Nero was extremely active in prosecuting the followers of Christ.

The Otis Lithograph Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, has gotten up a most elaborate line of pictorial printing for "Quo Vadis?" consisting of 1 thirty-two sheet, 2 twenty-four sheets, 1 sixteen sheet, 2 three sheets and 2 one sheets, also twenty different styles of photos, assorted cuts of all sizes, an eight page illustrated folder and a complete publicity equipment is furnished state right operators.

EARL J. HUDSON GOES TO CENTAUR.

Former Head of Universal Publicity Staff Becomes General Manager of Educational and Industrial Organization.

Earl J. Hudson, who has been connected with the publicity department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the past eight months, and for the last five of which he was in charge, resigned his position on June 7. He is now general manager of the Centaur Film Company, with offices on the ninth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second Street.

Earl J. Hudson.

The Centaur Company will make a specialty of educational and industrial pictures. In the educational field connections already have been established for the making and distribution of films for schools, churches and fraternal organizations. In industrial work the company will approach the making of motion pictures from a new angle—i. e., paying special attention to the educational side of commercial pictures. The company has in Bayonne, N. J., a studio and factory of reinforced cement construction, which has a capacity of 125,000 feet a week. Mr. Hudson will be assisted by Roland E. Blaisdell, who will be at the head of the accounting department.

While with the Universal Company, Mr. Hudson was especially successful in securing for his employers country-wide publicity. He conceived and instituted the first news syndicate disseminating matter relating exclusively to motion pictures. Mr. Hudson has a good grasp of the film business, is ambitious, and readily makes friends. Of these he has a host. They will all wish him success.

Joe Brandt, who since the first of the year has been in charge of the interests of the World's Best Film Company, returns to his old desk at the head of the publicity department of the Universal Company.

PATHE'S WEEKLY TWICE A WEEK.

Exhibitors throughout the country will be interested to learn that Pathe's Weekly will be issued twice every week in future, beginning with the week of June 23rd. There will be a weekly on Monday, June 23rd, and another on Thursday, June 26th, although this double service will not be inaugurated west of the Mississippi until the week of June 30th. The St. Louis exchange is west of the Mississippi, but it will be considered in the eastern territory because of the fast and frequent train facilities thereto. After the first week, of course, all exhibitors will be able to get the two Pathe's Weeklies every week.

Pathe Freres has installed a printing plant of their own and will supply the exhibitors direct with posters for the Weeklies. These posters will be mailed on a three months subscription basis and the price will be based on a sliding scale, graduating from five cents to three and a half cents for each poster, according to quantity. This new quarterly service applies only to the posters for the two Weeklies, and it will be necessary to subscribe for three months.

Besides giving the exhibitor an opportunity to book two weeklies every week, Pathe Freres say, the new arrangement will make both the weeklies more timely as the news of the world will, of necessity, be released three and four days earlier than was previously possible.

The addition of this second weekly will increase the output of Pathe Freres to seven reels per week, exclusive of multiple reel subjects.

CORRESPONDENCE

LOUISVILLE.

AUGUST 1st has been set as the opening date for the new house under course of construction by the New Albany Amusement Company on Main street, New Albany, Ind. The new theater will contain about 1,000 seats. A mixed program of vaudeville and moving pictures is to be presented. The original plan was to admit all persons for five cents, but it has recently been decided to charge ten cents for adults and five for children. The name of the theater has not yet been selected. C. E. Legg, president of the New Albany Amusement Company, will have the active management of the theater.

H. S. Morris, one of the old guard of amusement men, has opened an airdome in Jeffersonville, Ind., and is bringing into play some unique advertising plans. Mr. Morris advertised as an attraction for his opening performance the giving away of a live baby. Both residents of Jeffersonville and the police of that city were on hand to witness the initial performance. The "baby" turned out to be a wee pig, but a few days old. Mr. Morris' new airdome has a seating capacity of 700.

R. L. Swartz is the owner of a new airdome near Jeffersonville, Ind. Straight moving pictures are to be presented, five and ten cents being the admission charges. About 500 seats are available in the new open theater.

Col. G. A. McCowan, of the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the Simplex machine, recently spent a week with the Central Film Service Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., giving daily demonstrations and lectures in connection with the Simplex. Exhibitors of both Kentucky and Indiana were invited to attend the demonstrations and an average of 100 daily attested to the interest felt by the exhibitors in the machine question.

After short delays in construction, the Shelbyville, Ky., airdome has been opened. H. S. Gilbert is manager of the new house, which has a seating capacity of 700.

The Majestic theaters, controlled in New Albany and Jeffersonville, Ind., by Simon Shaefer, will raise the admission fee from five to ten cents in the future, when Bison feature films are exhibited. On ordinary occasions the old price of five cents will prevail. Both the houses have featured the Bison recently with marked success. Mr. Shaefer directs both theaters.

A popularity contest has been inaugurated at the Princess Theater, Earlington, Ky., the winner to receive a handsome gold watch. The second and third choices will be given sets of silverware. Only women are eligible to enter the contest, which will run until June 20. Every admission ticket will count for 100 votes. The standing of the contestants will be announced daily on the screen, interest being kept high by this method. A number of the women of Earlington have entered the contest, and attendance at the Princess has taken a big change for the better, packed houses greeting every performance. Four reels daily is the program.

R. L. Ransdall, of the Universal Film Company, was on hand at Home Coming Week in Paducah, Ky., and took pictures of all points and sights of interest. A monster parade was the feature of the week, which attracted hundreds of former Paducah residents to the city. The fire department also turned out for the benefit of the cameraman, who got pictures of the apparatus in action.

An airdome is to be erected on property adjoining Lamping's Theater, Hutchins avenue and Reading road, Avondale, Cincinnati. The open air theater is to be connected with the other house, the latter being used in case of rain.

The Grand Theater, of New Albany, Ind., will be closed down for a short time, pending the completion of the annex. Hitherto work on the addition to the house, owner by M. Switow, has been prosecuted without interfering with the daily program. The construction work now has reached the stage where the theater must be closed for a week or two. It will be reopened shortly with an extended seating capacity and with other modern features evident.

Manager L. J. Dittmar, of the Majestic Theater, Louisville, has returned from a trip to New York. Mr. Dittmar reported the business apparently in splendid shape in Gotham. John Bunny made his reappearance at the Majestic recently, after a long absence.

Changes in the plans for the Crescent Hill house to be erected by the National Moving Picture Company, of Louisville, have delayed the beginning of work on the structure. Joseph & Joseph, Louisville architects, will complete the paper work by June 1, when active construction will begin. The new theater will contain several stores, as well as a big moving picture show. Manager Martin ras arrived in Louisville and taken hold of the affairs of the National.

Robert Shrader, formerly with the Central Film Service Company, of Indianapolis, has taken charge of the Louisville brand of the Mutual, which recently was established in the Novelty theater building. The Mutual branch probably will be a permanent arangement, that company intending to go after business in Kentucky more aggressively in the future than ever before.

The Norman theater, owned by J. M. Wentzel, has taken on the Universal service, provided by A. F. Mayer, of the Louisville branch of the Central Film Service Company. The same is true of C. E. Hampson's Victoria theater, in New Albany, Ind. Mr. Hampson is making a big success of the amusement business as owner after doing the same as manager of several theaters.

That the educational authorities recognizes the value of the moving picture was demonstrated when the aPrent-Teacher Association, of the George H. Tingley school, of Louisville, entertained at the Preston theater, at Preston and Ormsby Streets. The aPrent-Teacher Association is composed of the teachers at the school, parents of the pupils and others interested in educational work. The theater was jammed for the performance, an educational film being shown in conjunction with the regular program.

Louis J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic theater and president of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has left for the East on a business trip and to arrange matters in connection with the State body's affairs. Mr. Dittmar will spend about a week away from business.

One of the best advertised films ever shown in Kentucky was that of the private one-day race meeting at the Hinata Stock Farm, owned by Clarence LeBus, a Lexington, Ky., capitalist. The showing of a dance which followed the races elicited strenuous protests from the participants. The newspapers, led on by a clever press agent, took the story up and made much of it. Then a rumor to the effect that Mr. LeBus, host of the society folk, had sold the rights to the moving pictures, gained ground and it was necessary to officially deny the report. It was explained that the pictures were taken by McMahon & Jackson, photographers, at the instance of Louis Ramsey, a well known exhibitor of Lexington, Ky. Mr. Ramsey, however, secured the privileges without payment and Mr. LeBus did not use his friends for a money-making proposition. The explanation of all this, of course, was good for the picture, which attracted big crowds when shown at the Orpheum theater and other Louisville and Kentucky houses.

Canfield & Shook, Louisville photographers, secured a view of the falling of the old bridge which connected the Kentucky metropolis with New Albany, Ind. Following the erection of a new steel and concrete structure, the old link was razed. The supports were removed and the steel girders were pushed over into the river. Thousands of people saw the drop, and the photographers captured a splendid view, which will be incorporated in Pathe's weekly.

The National Moving Picture Company, recently formed in Louisville, expects to begin work on its Crescent Hill theater the first of June. The plans are in the hands of Joseph & Joseph, leading architects of the Kentucky metropolis. The Crescent Hill lodge of Masons will probably have quarters on the second floor of the structure, which also will include several store rooms. Daniel L. Martin, the new manager of the National, has wired that he will reach Louisville about June 1, now being engaged in settling other business affairs.

Louisville probably will be well represented at the annual convention of the National organization to be held in June. Besides the officers and delegates to the national conclave, many members and exchange men have signified their intention of attending. It is probable that a special car will be utilized by the Louisville crowd, who will form an enthuiastic addition to delegations from other cities. Attendance from Lexington and other Kentucky cities also is expected to be much larger than usual.

E. L. Rakes, proprietor of the Theatorium, of Sturgis, Ky., has equipped his house with a new automatic musical instrument. The difficulty of securing high-class musicians to play to the music was the cause of Mr. Rakes' decision to use the automatic. The new machine is doing well, and is proving generally satisfactory.

The management of the Star theater, of Elizabethtown, Ky., was not discouraged when the opera chairs failed to arrive for the opening performance. Folding chairs were pressed into service and filled the place of the ornate seats satisfactorily pending the arrival of the latter. The Star has a seating capacity of 300.

The Grayson Amusement Company, operating a moving picture house at Grayson, Ky., has filed amended articles of incorporation increasing its capitalization from $500 to $1,000. The seating capacity of the house is to be extended and other improvements made.

M. Switow, of the amusement company of that name, expects to begin work on new houses at Salem, and French Lick, Ind., early in June. Each house will have a seating capacity of about 750. S. Switow, a nephew, will probably manage one or both of the theaters. Mr. Switow has several prospective purchasers of the Palace theater, Louisville, in view and will have the Kentucky metropolis as soon as the deal is completed. The Palace has changed hands a number of times since its erection.

Plans for the issuing of a program for moving picture theaters of Louisville are under way and indications are that the venture will materialize. Individual exhibitors have often discussed the proposition in the past, but none has reached the conclusion that it would be a success. The present plan, however, calls for the publication of a single program each week, covering seven animated picture theaters in the business district. J. D. Gibbs, of the Gibbs-Inman Company, a well-known local printing house, is the promoter of the plan, which has been agreed to by the exhibitors. The following houses will be included in the program: Majestic, Novelty, Casino, Orpheum, Columbia, Crystal and Hippodrome. The exhibitors will pay a small sum, while advertising will help to make the program a paying proposition. Instead of distributing the programs at theaters, the promoters will scatter them through the residential districts. A synopsis of each film will be given, enabling the patrons of theaters to select their amusement. Those who like the western plays will be enabled to see at a glance just which houses are running them and on what dates. Devotees of moving pictures who prefer comedy will also be enabled to use discrimination in picking their amusement places, and so on down the list. According to tentative plans, 25,000 programs will be issued weekly.

Plans for the new Jefferson Theater, on that street, between Third and Fourth, have been abandoned for the time being. The situation at present is a bit difficult to analyze, and those in charge of plans for the new vaudeville house decided to rest on their oars until further developments gave them insight into the situation. Irvin Simon, of the Princess Amusement Company, operating several moving picture theaters, was to be manager of the Jefferson, and this appointment will hold good in the event that the theater is erected.

The Parkland, is the name of a new airdome which has begun business at 2815 Dumesnil street, Louisville. T. F. Seay is the owner of the airdome, while John Riordan will have the active management. Straight moving pictures, consisting of four reels of Universal, constitutes the daily program.

S. H. Dudley, well known in theatrical circles as leading comedian in his own show, the "Smart Set," has entered the moving picture business in Louisville, establishing the Ruby Theater at Ninth and Walnut streets. The house has been fitted up in good style, box seats, with a price of twenty cents attached, being a feature. The negro house opened on June 2, showing, besides three reels of Universal pictures, three colored vaudeville acts. The Ruby contains about 600 seats. It is the second colored theater now operating in Louisville, the Olio, at Thirteenth and Walnut, being the other. Dudley himself will have no active connection with the theater. Robert Slater, of New York, will be resident manager of the house, while Joseph Clark, of Louisville, is assistant manager. The Ruby is one of a chain of vaudeville and moving picture theaters in which the colored comedian is said to be interested.

D. F. Cowan, of the Precision Machine Company, manufacturing the Simplex Machine, will be a visitor in Louisville in the near future. Mr. Cowan is now on a business trip and will spend several days in the Kentucky metropolis demonstrating the Simplex. The machine will be shown in the projection department of the Central Film Service Company, of Louisville. About thirty machines were sold to Indiana visitors as the result of Mr. Cowan's recent stay in Indianapolis, according to advices from that city.

The People's Theater, of Owensboro, Ky., has changed its policy, Manager A. D. Rogers settling on straight moving pictures as a better attraction than mixed pictures and vaudeville. Mr. Rogers is one of the best known members of the amusement field in Western Kentucky, having been manager of the Grand Opera House and others in Owensboro and elsewhere.

Alterations have been completed by L. T. McCarley in his house at Pembroke, Ky., and he is now showing with an enlarged seating capacity and better all-round facilities.

W. P. Glover will shortly open a new moving picture house at Calhoun, Ky. The theater will be put into commission some time in June, with a Universal program.

George A. Bleich, one of the best known exhibitors of Western Kentucky, is adding another house to his string there. The new theater is going up on Main street, at a cost of $10,000. It will have a seating capacity of 700. The theater will be opened about July 1. Mr. Bleich will manage that house as well as the Empress, also in Owensboro. He is one of the owners of the People's Theater, of Owensboro, and noted as an advertising genius.

The Star Airdome has opened in Jeffersonville, Ind., B. F. Swartz being the owner. The Star has a seating capacity of about 700.

One of the most disastrous fires of recent years in Hickman, Ky., came as the result of a film in a colored moving picture house igniting. The theater was a frame building, with little or no protection in the operating booth, according to reports from Hickman. The flames spread so rapidly that there was no chance of saving the theater. All of the negro patrons escaped without injury. Other adjoining buildings of frame were lapped up by the flames, the total loss being about $40,000.

Hickman has had bad luck as far as moving picture theaters are concerned, one house, which was put out of commission by the April flood there failing to resume.

Moving pictures of the Kentucky Handicap, run at Douglas Park, Louisville, proved a big attraction at B. F. Keith's house, which is running vaudeville and moving pictures for ten cents during the summer. Rudolfo, winner of the big event, is shown taking the lead in the stretch, the picture being one of the best seen in the Kentucky metropolis for some time. With a big part of the public interested in the thoroughbreds and their performances, the film will be a popular one for some time.

The Imp Theater has been opened at Pikeville, Ky. Straight moving pictures are used in the theater, which cost $2,500.

ILLINOIS.

THE moving pictures, which the Louisiana State Board of Health uses to teach sanitation and good health, have been shown in Illinois. At Peoria, they were shown at the Majestic Theater to 2,000 persons. The special health train was brought to Illinois to be examined by the Illinois State Medical Society at Peoria, and on its way back was thrown open for inspection of the public.

L. A. Bernstine, manager of the Quincy Theater in Quincy, is having his house redecorated and repainted.

The Majestic Theater at Kewanee, has booked a number of Warner's features.

The Princess Theater, at Woodstock, recently gave a picture show at 1 a. m., for members of a dancing club following their dance.

The week of May 26, was "Evanston Week" at the new Star Theater in that city, local views being featured.

Chris Taylor, proprietor of Dreamland and Tabard Theaters at Kewanee, has been seriously ill with typhoid fever.

The Ideal Amusement Company, which conducts the Varietie and Princess Theaters at Canton, has taken on first-run licensed service.

John A. Montgomery, who has had eight years' experience in Chicago photoplay houses, has opened an airdome at River Side Park, at McHenry. A five-piece orchestra will furnish music.

D. W. Shaw has leased the Grand Opera House at El Paso, and will resume its management. John Eilts, who has been conducting a picture house in it, has moved his picture machine and equipment to Minonk, where he is running a photoplay house.

Mayor Bennett, of Rockford, has signed the ordinance which permits the moving picture theaters to open on Sunday. There was some talk of a veto over the mayor's head.

Joseph Quinn, manager of the Majestic Theater at Rock Island, has enhanced the appearance of his moving picture show by a mass of bright-hued flowers along the roof of the porte cochere.

The Evanston Theater, at Evanston, opened May 26, with motion pictures. Special subjects will be given for the children at matinees.

Silas R. Wooley, manager of the Crystal Theater in Champaign, fell dead on a street in that city May 22. He placed a basket which he was carrying on the sidewalk, threw his arms above his head, cried out, sank to the sidewalk and expired in about fifteen minutes without regaining consciousness. The remains were taken to Salem, Ill., for burial.

Manager Carl Rademacher, of the Orpheum, at Freeport, has returned from Chicago, where he purchased a new pipe organ to be installed the middle of June.

The Moline "Mail" published a coupon, which, with ten cents, admitted children to the performance of the Kinemacolor pictures at the Moline Theater, June 2 and 3. The orphans of Bethany Home were guests of the paper at its performance.

W. L. Augustine has purchased a site in the 1400 block, on East Williams street, in Decatur, for the erection of a moving picture theater to cost $5,000. The building will be 30 x 90, with inclined floor. It will seat about 500 persons, and is expected to open for business in about a month.

H. L. Hunt, manager of the Grand Opera House at Jacksonville, announced that every vaudeville act will be carefully censored and nothing which can be in any way termed objectionable or suggestive will be permitted.

The Starland Airdome has been opened at Bryan and Adams street, in Peoria.

The lease of D. C. McClelland upon the Celestial Theater at Pekin, expired June 1.

L. B. Anderson is in temporary charge of the Majestic Theater at Lincoln, awaiting the confirmation by Will Foley, of Geneva, Switzerland, of the sale of the theater to him. If the sale is confirmed, Anderson will remodel the building.

The Empire Theater, at Quincy, has forsaken the dramatic field, it is reported, and will reopen August 25, as the Hippodrome, featuring vaudeville and moving pictures. All seats will be ten cents, seven days a week. It is announced that the highest class attractions have been booked in Quincy, but have not been profitable.

"A moving picture show reproducing the Hagenbeck & Wallase circus, has been showing in several towns about this section recently, and from newspaper notices, we would say that the show is a fake," says the McHenry "Plaindealer." A representative of the "Moving Picture World" has seen in Illinois some circus pictures purporting to be circus pictures, which obviously were faked and also padded, to make a feature.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

ST. LOUIS.

THE Olive, a moving picture house on Olive street, near Sarah, has been converted into the "legitimate," renamed the Marguerite Clark Theater, and recently reopened for the summer with that star in her favorite comedy success, "Baby Mine." This is the first time a strictly moving picture house has been put to dramatic uses in St. Louis.

The Pathe Weekly, working in conjunction with the St. Louis "Times," an afternoon newspaper, has put on an innovation in picturing strictly St. Louis news and showing the same weekly to over 300 picture houses in Missouri and Illinois. The "Times" announces each day in its columns the various moves made by the Pathe man, and the houses where the pictures are to be shown. The first set of reels opened with views of the Jefferson Memorial dedication at Forest Park, followed by May Day fete at Carthage, The Peace Congress session at the Odeon, Views of Andrew Carnegie, taken on a recent visit of the Scotchman at St. Louis, Runaway mules at Clarksdale, Miss., when the Pathe man had a narrow escape for his life while covering the Elks' Convention; G. A. R. Session at Alton, Ill., Harvard men at St. Louis, Schwiz Memorial views, and others.

Timing by moving picture machines was one of the features introduced at the International Automobile Races at the Indianapolis speedway, the invention of George Weidley, designer of Premier automobiles, and umpire of the course. The idea of timing auto races by the aid of moving picture machines was first suggested in a recent lecture by John Guy Monihan, before the Hoosier Motor Club anent the coming Indiana to Pacific tour of the Indiana Automobile Manufacturers' Association, when the feasibility of timing the big races was discussed. The results of the innovation have not been made public, but will be watched with interest.

Lyman H. Howe opened an indefinite engagement at the American Theater recently, showing his animal travel pictures.

The Kinemacolor is at the Columbia, with actual scenes of the Balkan War, and the Panama Canal. The Panama Canal pictures are proving highly instructive and interesting, as evidencing the magnitude of the enterprise and the ingenuity of American engineering. The Kinemacolor pictures will run all summer at the Columbia.

"The Prisoner of Zenda," by special arrangement with Daniel Frohman, of New York, was the attraction of the New Grand Central, on Grand and Lucas avenues, with James K. Hackett, a St. Louis favorite, in his famous role. This picture played to capacity houses and has been booked by Manager Sievers for a return engagement. An additional feature, in conjunction with "The Prisoner of Zenda" reel, was the fine singing of the Grand Leader Choral Club, a local organization, with sixty trained singing voices, under the leadership of Arthur Lieber.

The Columbia Theater was filled to overflowing recently with newsboys, guests of the St. Louis "Republic," who watched with wide-open mouths and bristling hair, the views of the Turko-Bulgarian War, the subject of so many "wuxtras."

The Hamilton Airdome, at 5900 Easton avenue, has been overhauled and is considered to be the largest open air theater in the United States.

F. J. FEGAN.

PITTSBURGH.

CAWLEY & EAGAN have closed a lease for the East End Amusement Company, which will conduct a vaudeville and motion picture show on the roof garden of the Rittenhouse Hotel. It is the intention of the company to open in the early part of June.

Moving picture machine operators in the motion picture theaters of Pittsburgh have made a demand for higher wages, and the matter was considered at a conference between representatives of Local No. 171, Moving Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union, and the Exhibitors' League of this city. The union asks that the operators employed in theaters in the outlying sections of the city, which are open only part of the day, be paid not less than $15 a week, and those in the downtown houses a minimum of $18 a week, for a working day of eight hours.

Appeals from the decision of Magistrate Christ Saam in fining Harry Davis and J. P. Harris, proprietors and managers of several Pittsburgh theaters for their alleged violation of a city ordinance for failing to secure an amusement license, have been filed in the county court. On May 6, last, the petitioners set forth in their petitions that they were fined $25 and costs by Magistrate Saam, and asked that the fine which they paid be refunded and the decisions reversed. The Court allowed the appeals and set June 14 as the date for the hearing. Similar appeals are also to be filed by Barney Dreyfuss and Thomas F. Kirk. The amusement men declined to take out new licenses because the fee was materially raised by an act of councils, and they have determined to fight the issue in an effort to have the act repealed.

The McKeesport Amusement Company has been incorporated by A. H. Berg, E. L. Stillwagen and Pier Danals, of this city, with a capital of $15,000. The company will operate a moving picture theater in McKeesport.

With a capital of $10,000, the East End Amusement Company has been incorporated to conduct a motion picture house in the East End, Pittsburgh. The incorporators are: David Adler and Harry Adler, of Pittsburgh, and H. F. Redenback, of Ross City.

Because of the recent act passed by the councils of Altoona, three moving picture men of that city are contemplating raising the price of admission to 10 cents where the former price has been only five. The act to which the moving picture men have taken exception is the new building code, which prohibits admitting any spectators who cannot be seated. Heretofore, the picture theater managers have permitted standing in the rear of the house, and in this way a much greater list of admissions could be secured than under the new code. A meeting will be held shortly by the Altoona managers and plans discussed for a simultaneous raising of prices, in order to overcome the loss of revenue that will be occasioned with the new building code in effect.

P. J. Wall, who owns considerable property in the California avenue district of the North Side of Pittsburgh, has had plans made of a moving picture theater that he will build on California avenue, near Tremont avenue. The building will cover a plot 40 x 150 feet, and although it is to be but one story high it is to be elaborately furnished, and will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000. It will be the first building especially erected for a moving picture theater in this vicinity.

The Garrick Theater Company has leased, for a term of ten years, the property at 136-38 Federal street, between Penn avenue and Duquesne Way, the total rent for the term being $150,000. The lot is 36 x 112, and the building on it is being dismantled, and is to be replaced with a modern high-class motion picture house of very attractive design. The lessor is M. Glukoff, who recently bought from the Phillips estate the property now leased at a cost of $145,000. The new building will have a white terra cotta front, with a lobby and entrance of Italian marble. Work on the structure will be pushed night and day, as it is aimed to have it finished in 60 days. On the second floor will be a large billiard room, and bowling alleys will be located on the third floor. Altogether it will be one of the handsomest and most complete theaters in the city.

What is to be known as a cabaret theater, will be erected on the North Side this summer. This one is to be the Imperial, owned by the Imperial Amusement Company, of which R. T. Eicholtz is manager, and it will be located in Beaver avenue, at Juniata street. Despite the promising name of a cabaret theater, however, the only beverage to be served at the new theater will be soda water and other soft drinks. The structure will be three stories high, the upper floor being let out as offices. The first floor will contain the stage and the floor at which the audience will be seated at tables. The seating capacity of the house will be 1,500 and it will be open about August 1st.

John J. McCosker, aged 45 years, manager of the New Kensington theater, a moving picture house, died at his home in Kensington last week. He is survived by two sisters and a brother.

Miller & Davis, managers and operators of the moving picture theater at 339-41 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, have renewed their lease on the property for a term of years. The present lease expires this spring and the renewal for a long term evidences the success of this downtown house.

The Family Theater in Fifth Avenue, formerly managed by John P. Harris, has been taken over by Fred Hilton, who has changed the name to the Columbia. The interior of the theater has been changed somewhat and new projection machines added to the equipment.

Senator Synder, of the Pennsylvania State Legislature, recently introduced a bill which would empower the school boards of each school district to appoint a committee of censors for moving picture shows. Mr. Synder says he intends to push the bill and believes it will be the remedy for the pictures which are believed to demoralize school children. However, the bill did not get out of the senate committee to which it was referred and so Mr. Synder's bill will not become a law this year.

The old Kenyon theater on the North Side, formerly owned by H. B. Kenyon, has changed hands and is now known as the American. Mr. Kenyon's other show-house, the Kenyon, in Penn Avenue is now a union theater and employes none but union men. This theater is now called the Penn Avenue Theater.

W. A. Thomas has awarded a contract to W. B. Bennet for the erection of a $25,000 fireproof motion picture house for the Lyceum Amusement Company. The new theater is to be erected at Fifth avenue and Marion street and is to contain all the most up-to-date improvements and innovations for motion picture exhibition. Although the building of the structure has not yet started it is reported that offers for the renting of it have aleady been made by several of the leading moving picture interests in this city.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

VITAGRAPH.

THE SNARE OF FATE (June 23).—Part One. Ralph, the son of Andrew Mason, the famous capitalist, falls in love with Marion Marbury, and proposes to her when one day calling at the house. Mrs. Marbury is delighted when she is told of the engagement, thinking that probably Ralph's father will consent to help her husband out of his financial difficulties, which threaten Marbury with bankruptcy. At a ball that evening, Ralph introduces Marion to his father, who is obviously delighted with her appearance. Mason himself becomes infatuated with the young woman and decides that he wants her himself, and that he intends to have her. A day of two later, Ralph having been suddenly called away on business, his place is taken by Mason, who fulfills the engagement he had made with Marion. She does not think of Mason's intentions as anything more than a friendly interest in his son's fiancée.

The fact that Mason has fallen in love with her daughter is soon discovered by Mrs. Marbury, who discusses the matter with him and agrees to give him her help. She does this because she knows that Mason is the man with the money, and sees in the match an immediate way to retrieve her husband's fallen fortune. She says nothing to Marbury, however, knowing that he would bitterly oppose any scheme so affecting his daughter's happiness.

Part Two.—A meeting of the company of which he is president, gives Mason the opportunity to get rid of his son. It is proposed to build a new railroad in Africa and Mason has Ralph sent out there to take charge of the engineering operations. The young man's consent is easily won by a little flattery, for such a job gives him a chance to show what is in him.

As soon as his son is out of the way, Mason commences to press his suit to Marion, who cannot understand him. Her mother makes it clear to her that Mason wants her for his wife, and tells her that it is her chance to save her father from ruin. It is for this reason alone that Marion consents, with the result that three months after Ralph's departure to Africa, she is married to his father.

In Africa, Ralph has full scope for his genius and rushes ahead with the railroad construction, surprising everyone with his grit and determination to succeed. Some of his friends suggest one day that he shall take a day off and come with them on a lion hunt, which he does. During a hurried rush through the bush he sprains his ankle and falls, and is pounced on a moment later by an infuriated lion. The devotion of a native servant saves his life, but he is carried wounded back to his bungalow.

At home, the joyless honeymoon being over, Marion settles down in her new home with her husband, whose money has by no means brought happiness to her. Edmund Marbury realizes that Marion contracted the marriage for his sake and his heart is eaten out with sorrow that he had not seen this in time to prevent her sacrifice.

Part Three.—Although Mason has helped him out of his difficulties, Edmund Marbury does not become his old self again. The strain he has been under has been too much for him and this, together with the added worry concerning his daughter's obviously unhappy marriage, so troubles him that he falls very sick. Mrs. Marbury telegraphs to her daughter to hasten to her father's side, but the telegram is handed to Mason, who places it in his pocket. It is the night of Marion's first reception since her wedding, and he does not wish to have the evening spoiled by her hurried departure to her father's side. The reception is a brilliant success, and makes certain the position of Marion as a social leader. It is an empty honor, however, for at the end of the evening a second telegram arrives, telling of the death of her father.

Ralph, in Africa, becomes convalescent from his injuries, and, the work on the railroad being well under way, he decides to start for home and surprise everybody by his sudden arrival. Reaching New York, he dashes to his father's house and bursts in upon him. After telling him hurriedly of his work, Ralph takes up a photograph of Marion, which he sees on a bureau, and presses it to his lips. This gives Mason the opportunity to tell him of the marriage. A violent quarrel follows, the son denouncing his father and angrily leaving the house. Upstairs, Marion is lying on a bed of pain, as an heir is about to be brought into the world.

As Mason sits glooming over his son's departure, the doctor enters the room and gently breaks the news to him that his hopes are blighted, mother and child are both dead. Mason takes the news calmly enough, but, after the doctor has left the room, he is obsessed by visions of what might have been. When the grief-stricken Mrs. Marbury descends a while later, she finds Andrew Mason a corpse in his chair. She alone is left to suffer the consequences of her own selfishness.

THE LION'S BRIDE (June 23).—A menagerie keeper's daughter Christine Johnson, makes great friends with Nero, one of her father's lions. She is able to go into his cage with him and do as she pleases, the lion even allowing her to tweak his ears. With other people the lion is always surly tempered, but with his mistress he is different and readily performs all the stunts she teaches him.

Among the visitors to the menagerie one day, is Basil McDermott. He greatly admires the manner in which Christine handles the animals and obtains an introduction to her after she has left Nero's cage. Christine is amused when he expresses his fear that Nero will some day hurt her and tells him that they are the best friends in the world. Basil does not like it and tells Johnson so, when, later, he is accepted at the house as Christine's fiance.

Nero at first takes no notice of Basil, but when he sees that Christine loves him, the ill-tempered beast becomes very jealous and tries to get out of the cage to attack him. When Basil is taken into the cage by Christine, the lion shows his evident hatred of him, but is forced to acknowledge him as his new master.

The wedding day soon arrives and everything goes well, until Basil and his wife return to the house with the guests to celebrate the wedding breakfast. Christine leaves the room and enters the menagerie to say good-bye to her old friend, Nero, as her husband is going to take her away. Basil follows later and finds her there. She sends him back to the guests, telling him to let her make her last farewel to Nero alone. Nero senses that she is to leave him and is obsessed by a furious fit of jealousy. When Basil returns a few moments later to fetch his wife, he finds her lying dead beneath Nero's feet. The lion has claimed her for his bride.

NO SWEETS (June 24).—On a street car one evening, Tabitha Martin, a somewhat corpulent woman, seats herself next to Harry Prettyman, a decidedly fat man, who is reading the paper. She looks over his shoulder and notices the advertisement of Mme. Milo, who guarantees to reduce your weight in a short time. Henry notices her copying the address and he does so also, intending to make inquiries about the matter. Prettyman is a clerk in the same office as Jack Martin, Tabitha's husband, but does not know who the lady is. Henry and Tabitha meet again that evening at Mme. Milo's physical-culture school, when both make appointments to turn up for a cross-country run the next afternoon.

Next day Henry gets away from the office by feigning sickness and makes his way to Mme. Milo's. Jack Martin also gets off and follows Henry to see what the game is. To his great astonishment, he sees both Henry and his wife Tabitha enter what is apparently a private house, and determines that he will set a watch and learn more of the affair. Henry's arrival at the house is also seen by his wife, Mabel, who has become suspicious on finding a strange address and the card of appointment in her husband's overcoat pocket, and fears a possible rival in his affections.

That evening Tabitha and Henry both refuse to tell their spouses anything about the events of the day and the next night they slip away from their respective houses to attend a lecture by Mme. Milo. Jack and Mabel both become suspicious and go along to the house. There they see Henry and Tabitha talking together and they make trouble. Jack rushes at Henry while Mabel attempts to make mincemeat out of Tabitha. Mme. Milo comes between them and explanations are soon made. Jack and Mabel are appeased when they hear that Mme. Milo's is only a flesh-reducing establishment and all four go off to enjoy a little supper together. Henry and Tabitha both decide that they are satisfied with their present size and start eating sweets once more, a luxury which had been strictly tabooed by the physical culture expert.

JACK'S CHRYSANTHEMUM (June 26).—Lingering amidst the beautiful scenery of Southern Japan in search of pretty subjects for his paintings, Jack one day meets his heart's desire. In turning a corner in his rikisha he collides with another and in the confusion sees uncovered for a moment the pretty face of its occupant, Kichimatsu, the daughter of Nakamuta. Following her at a distance, he discovers her residence, the garden of which he visits clandestinely the next day. Jack experiences considerable difficulty in speaking to Kichi, who tells him that it is not seemly for a maiden to converse with strangers. His winning smiles quickly win others in return and arrangements are soon made for future meetings. They meet at an old temple, where she poses for one of his pictures. She tells him that her father wishes her to marry Waki, a rich Japanese whom she detests, and that she fears to go against his wishes. Jack breaks down her objections and they elope and marry after the American fashion.

Writing home to his father, Jack asks him to visit Japan and see his beautiful Japanese bride, promising to show him a right good time. The announcement of the sudden marriage surprises the old man a good deal, but he telegraphs his acceptance of the invitation and leaves on the next steamer. During the voyage, he is much troubled by sea-sickness and is very much annoyed when Jack laughs at his account of the trip. As soon as he sees Kichimatsu, the old man is completely captivated and forgets all about his previous troubles. At first he has difficulty in dropping into Japanese customs of living and eventually suggests that Jack and his wife return with him and that they all live together. The tables are turned on the voyage home when Jack is the sea-sick one and his father has the laugh on him.

HER SWEETEST MEMORY (June 26).—The sole topic of conversation among the girls at the Eagle Lunch Room is the coming ball to be given by the "Associated Waiters." Most of the girls are anxious to attend and discuss eagerly the problem of what to wear. Mary Francis, however, tells the girls that she does not care about going. One of the girls insists that she accept a ticket in spite of her protest that she cannot use it.

Among the regular customers that patronize Mary's tables is Philip Marston, a wealthy clubman and stockbroker. At the lunch hour next day, Mary absent-mindedly places the ball ticket before him instead of the lunch check. Marston laughingly calls attention to her mistage and she becomes covered with confusion. He asks her about the affair and whether she is going. She tells him that she will stay away as she has no beau to take her. Touched by her loneliness and regarding the affair as more of a lark than anything else, Marston offers to escort her and takes the address of the boarding house where she is staying.

The great problem for Mary now is the matter of suitable clothes. She has nothing that is of any use to her as a ball dress, but is kindly helped out by the girls in the house, one of whom lends her a dress, another a switch for her hair, and so on, while the old lady boarder insists on her wearing a necklace that she had worn as a girl. By the time that she is all ready, Marston arrives in his automobile, bringing with him a glorious bunch of roses.

At the ball, Mary proves to be an uncommonly graceful dancer and the eyes of everyone in the room are turned upon her and her partner. Towards the close of the evening a prize is offered for the handsomest couple and is won by Mary and Marston.

Phillip takes her home and so closes what has been to him simply a passing incident, casting away as valueless the rose that Mary hands him on parting. Mary, however, fondly treasures the prize and the faded rose leaves and clings to the remembrance of every event of the evening as her sweetest memory.

ONE GOOD JOKE DESERVES ANOTHER (June 27).—Jim Wilson gets sore when, on the first of April, John Bunny, the bridge watchman, makes a fool of him. Bunny gets his silk hat and rubs it the wrong way when Wilson is not looking and then laughs at him. Wilson makes up his mind to pay him back.

He goes home to his mother and makes arrangements with her for what he considers will be a gigantic joke. They get a pillow and tie it up with twine, so that it looks like a baby, and put on it an automobile coat and hat. Then, taking the chauffeur into their confidence, they drive down to the bridge and throw the supposed baby into the river as they pass the horrified Bunny, who at once gives the alarm to the watchman at the other end of the bridge to stop the auto. Wilson gets past the bridge all right, but the hue and cry has started and they are followed by a mounted policeman and an auto-cyclist. They are caught and taken straight to the police court, which is in session.

and try to get the baby out of the water, a difficult proceeding as it sinks at once to the bottom. After dragging the river for some time one of the men gets it out of the water and finds out that the supposed baby is only a pillow. He gets mad and starts to fight with John Bunny, who had told him to fish for the infant. Both of the men are arrested and taken to court, where they meet Wilson and his mother, who have just been brought in. The four are taken in straightway to the magistrate and the case is tried at once. Even the majesty of the law has to laugh at the episode and decides to have a hand in it. His honor tells them that they are all fined five hundred dollars and sentenced to six months in jail. At the sight of their rueful faces he laughs and pointing to the calendar remarks, "April Fool's Day, the case is dismissed."

ONE OVER ON CUTEY (June 28).—Some people are so conceited that to watch them is positively painful. Cutey belongs to this class. He takes his sweetheart, Claire, to the college masquerade ball, and acts so stand-offishly with the college boys and shows himself so conceited because of his self-importance that even his sweetheart is annoyed: the more so when, during the evening, he does not give her a chance to dance with any of the other fellows, but keeps her to himself all the time. When the time comes to unmask, she manages to slip away and, meeting some of the boys in the corridor, she plans with them to take Cutey down a peg or two. Rushing to her dressing room, Claire changes to her ordinary clothes and send the pierrot dress she has been wearing to her cousin Tom, who puts it on. Tom, wearing a wig and a mask, goes into the ball room and is at once seized by Cutey, who thinks that he is dancing with Claire.

Later on, Cutey takes his partner out into the corridor, where he proposes that they go at once to the parsonage and get married. They are overheard by Claire and the boys, who follow them. The minister is ready to perform the ceremony that will tie the knot when Tom unmasks and discloses his identity, much to Cutey's discomfiture. The boys rush in and much laughter follows at Cutey's expense. He cannot stand being guyed and takes off his coat to fight one of the young chaps, who seems to be the leading spirit and who is doubled up with uncontrollable laughter. Cutey's cup of misery is filled to the brim when the "young man" lifts his hat and Cutey sees that "he" is really his sweetheart, Claire, who has donned Tom's dress suit and is enjoying Cutey's discomfiture as much as any of them.

CLOISONNE WARE (June 28).—An interesting educational feature, showing how this beautiful ware is handled by the clever potters, illustrating the difficulties of applying and firing these wonderful enamels.

EDISON.

LOVE'S OLD SWEET SONG (June 21).—Sue Joyce, a whimsical young girl, while attracted to Jack Temple, still coquettes with other young men. Even after their engagement, she mildly flirts with other men, and one day she is caught by Jack sitting in a summer garden with another young man, having her palm read. Jack reproves her bitterly, and, going home, packs his trunk and leaves for the South. At the railway station his suit-case is stolen by a sea-faring man, who later dresses in his clothes, and, carrying a picture of Sue, takes passage on board a steamer. The ship is burned and the thief is identified as Jack. Upon learning of the report of his death, Jack telegraphs to his parents that it is all a mistake, and the overjoyed parents convey the news to the heartbroken Sue, whose mind is a little affected by grief. Even when Jack comes home she flees from him, until he changes her delusive mind by playing on the piano the sweet love melody, "Love's Old Sweet Song," when she slowly comes to him.

THE PYRAMIDS AND THE SPHINX (June 23).—In this short subject excellent views of the pyramids, built some three thousand years ago, and of the sphinx are given. Interesting scenes of native life are also photographed.

A TASTE OF HIS OWN MEDICINE (June 23).—The seed of jealousy is sown in Jones when two gentlemen, unknown to him, bow to his wife. His unfounded jealousy is intensified when, a few days later, Mrs. Jones' sister sends her a present for Mr. Jones, which arrives while the Joneses are at breakfast, with instructions not to show it to him until his birthday. Mr. Jones' angry expostulations to see the package avail him nothing, and he leaves for the office in a "white heat," where he writes his wife a letter in a disguised handwriting, purporting to be from a former admirer, and begging for a clandestine interview. Mr. Jones' jealousy is further inflamed when the florist sends a bouquet of flowers to his office instead of to his home address, as given by Mrs. Jones. When Mrs. Jones receives the forged letter, she takes it immediately to the police station and a number of "coppers" are sent to watch for the admirer. Seeing nobody around but Mr. Jones, who had come to surprise his wife in the act of infidelity, the policemen arrest him and he is brought to the station house, where matters are finally straightened out.

WHERE SHORE AND WATER MEET (June 24).—John Strong, an architect, and Mabel Newman, interior designer, meet in the office of a contractor, whither both have been called to confer over certain plans. The acquaintanceship which rapidly springs up between them, soon ripens into a warm affection, and when Strong proposes marriage, Mabel gladly accepts him.

William Addison, the contractor in whose office the two were brought together, has almost unconsciously fallen deeply in love with Mabel. The news of her marriage to Strong reveals to him the full extent of his love, with all the pitiless distinctness of a lightning flash.

After their marriage, John and Mabel spend their honeymoon in a little bungalow by the sea. John, an enthusiastic fisherman, goes out one day after tuna, is overtaken by a storm, blown far out to sea and finally wrecked on a small island many miles from shore. His signals of distress are eventually seen by a passing ship and he is taken aboard, but as the ship is off on a long whaling voyage in Antarctic waters, it is over a year before he is able to get back to his home.

Meanwhile, Addison, anxious to redeem his first great mistake, has been eagerly wooing the supposed widow. Mabel, resigned to her husband's death, and doubtless influenced by Bernard Shaw's doctrine that all widows should marry again to show that their first experience was a happy one, has begun to listen to his suit with favorable ears.

To the happy Addison suddenly appears the supposedly drowned husband, John Strong, demanding news of his wife's whereabouts. Seeing the cup of happiness about to be dashed from his lips for the second time, a dreadful temptation lays hold of Addison. Shall he send Strong away on a hopeless wild goose chase and leave the wife in ignorance of her husband's return, or shall he act the man's part and transform his dreams of future happiness into the wormwood and lees of vain regret?

In bitter silence he arrives at his decision and gazing with quiet, hopeless eyes into the barren future, restores the wife to her husband's arms.

HOW DID IT FINISH? (June 25).—Father, finding his daughter, Mary reading a novel, takes it away from her, and, in order to ascertain how low his daughter's tastes have fallen, he starts to read the book. He soon becomes deeply interested in vicissitudes of the leading characters. Being interrupted frequently by members of his family, he moves from room to room, until he finally takes refuge in the cellar.

The story is exciting. The heroine and hero are captured, brought to an old mill, where the villain intends to drop the hero into the waterhole unless the heroine consents to be his wife. But the villain is thwarted by the plucky heroine, who cuts the ropes around her lover's hands while the villain and his gang are talking the matter over, thereby effecting their escape. Later the heroine is lured to a rendezvous by a forged note from the villain. Learning of this the hero rides at terrific speed on his bicycle to the place, and a struggle takes place. Father discovers that the last page of the book is missing, while mother discovers that the stove needs more coal. Descending into the cellar she falls over father, who, in the course of the resultant lecture from his better-half, notes that the last page of the book is among her curling papers: but mother will not consent to give it to him and so father will never know the outcome of the fight.

FORTUNE SMILES—Being the Twelfth and Last Story of "What Happened to Mary" (June 27).—Now we meet Mary arriving in New York, going back to her old lawyer who promises to help her. He takes her to his home and leaves her there for the night in the care of his sister.

In the back room of a little Bridgeport hotel, Richard and Henry Craig are deciding what action they should take, for on the following day, Mary will be of age and the money in trust will be turned over to her. They finally decide to hire an automobile and get to New York without attracting attention, and be at hand at the Occidental Trust at noon sharp.

Mary, in the meantime, has retired, and while all of this action is taking place, is sleeping peacefully. Billy Peart, on the other hand, receives a wire from Lawyer Foster to appear at his office and we see him sailing in his launch to the New York dock, to collect, as he hopes, the ten thousand dollars promised by Craig. So closer and closer all the people gather.

It is morning and we see Mary enter the lawyer's office. Two plain clothes men are on hand as Peart comes on the scene. The two Craigs are hiding behind the stairs just outside the private office of the Occidental Trust, watching and waiting. If Mary does not appear the money is theirs! Back in Foster's office the issue is at stake. Peart in handcuffs has confessed all.

It is nearly noon. The two Craigs enter the Trust Company's office just as the telephone rings. Lawyer Foster is on the wire and he says he will be right down. The secretary then turning to the two Craigs, asks if he can be of service. They immediately get down to business, meanwhile watching the hands of the clock as they slowly turn around. They introduce themselves as being the rightful heirs. At the critical moment Mary enters and asserts her rights. She receives her fortune and at the end of the picture bids her friends a fond farewell.

CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE HEROES (June 28).—Jack, tall and broad shouldered, Thomas, an intellectual young man, and Willie, who is neither brawny nor intellectual, love Mary Wilkins. Sheriff Wilkins prefers Jack, Tom is Mrs. Wilkins' favorite, while Mary has a sneaking preference for Willie. Willie makes no pretentions to being of heroic

Long Acre Bldg. 42nd St. and Broadway New York City mould, and when Mary goes rowing he sits on the bank and mourns. One evening as Jack and Thomas are sitting beside Mary in the parlor talking with her, while Willie is lurking in the darkness outside, afraid to come into the house, the father enters and notifies the boys that he will give his daughter's hand in marriage to the one who manages to apprehend the burglar now terrorizing the neighborhood. After the boys and the sheriff have started on their man-hunting expedition, Willie enters and Mary tells him the offer her father has made. She gives him a pistol and orders that he also go in search of the burglar. Hearing the return of the men, Willie, still holding the pistol, hides under the table. The sheriff goes upstairs, while Thomas and Jack resume their conversation with Mary. Suddenly upon them springs the burglar, who takes their revolvers and valuables. Willie, rising to the emergency, pulls the rug upon which the burglar is standing, thereby throwing him upon the boys. He then jumps out from beneath the table and covers the thief. The sheriff, hearing the noise, descends and takes charge of the burglar. Mary reminds her father of his promise, and, true to it, he tells her that she may have Willie as her future husband.

THE FLY (June 28).—We have produced in remarkably clear detail every stage in the development of a fly, following which we have shown the terrible unsanitary conditions prevailing in a large city. For example, scenes showing garbage by the ton either lying or being dumped into the streets; women nursing babies practically on top of garbage heaps; children wallowing in prevailing squalor, and so forth.

In the same connection we have produced a series of interesting scenes showing our dangerous and horribly unsanitary neighbor, the push cart peddler, and with flies swarming about his products which rapidly decompose by the fierce heat of the sun.

KALEM.

THE STRUGGLE (Special—2 parts—June 25).—Masterson, having become a captain of industry, leaves the details of running the works to his employees and moves to another city to take life easy and enjoy the wealth that has come to him after years of toil. Shortly after the departure of Masterson the domineering superintendent cuts the wages of the employes, thereby bringing ruin not only to the factory, but to the homes of the workmen. Jimmie Blake, a young boy of fourteen, the only support of his sister, Maggie, is brutally struck down by Mooney, the superintendent, for being late one morning. Just then a huge iron beam becomes loosened and crashes down upon Jimmie. The laborers declare a strike and carry the boy to his home where the doctor announces that only an operation performed by a skilled specialist will prevent the boy from being a cripple for life. Being without funds Maggie Blake goes to the factory intent upon robbing the safe. Hearing steps upon the stairs, she hides herself in the closet. Masterson, who has been summoned by Mooney who has had a bad fight with the strikers, places the unconscious superintendent in a chair, and, going to the closet for suitable bandages, discovers Maggie, who tells him that she was hiding from the strikers.

Bent upon revenge, Maggie, after sending the capitalist for water that she may bathe Mooney's head, calls upon the telephone "Bat" Thomas, her sweetheart, whom she knows is addressing a meeting of the strikers at a hall and tells him that Masterson has her imprisoned in the office. After hearing Maggie's story, Bat leads his men to the office, the door of which is barricaded by Maggie and Masterson, Maggie helping in the barricade work for Masterson, having heard her pitiful story, assures reparation. Bat effects an entrance into the office by climbing to the roof and going through a window. In his struggle with Masterson the stove is upset and soon the room is ablaze. The fire spreads rapidly and soon the whole factory is a seething mass of flames. By a unique method all escape from the building just before the walls fall in. Later, with the owner at the helm, the Masterson Iron Works again becomes a model factory. Bat, with Maggie as his wife, is the new superintendent, and little Jimmie is restored to health by the specialist.

THE DETECTIVE'S TRAP (June 23).—Steele and Blunt, wanted by the police for a big jewel robbery, are arrested in a city railroad station. Before his apprehension, Blunt has just time to check a small black grip, containing the jewels, and hides the check under the moulding of the counter with a piece of chewing gum.

The grip remains in the check room unclaimed and is ultimately auctioned off at a sale of uncalled-for baggage. It is bought by Harry Graham, who opens it in the seclusion of his room and is amazed at the contents.

His gift of a necklace to his sweetheart, Helen Grey, leads to his arrest, as Helen's mother recognizes the jewels, which have been stolen from her.

Feeling confident that Harry is guilty, the authorities release Steele and Blunt. The thieves recover the hidden check and trace the grip to the auction room, where the purchaser's name and address is given them.

Helen secures the aid of detective Brinton to prove Harry's innocence. Brinton lays a trap for the thieves, into which they are carried. Their guilt is clearly established and Harry is exonerated.

THE KNIGHT OF CYCLONE GULCH (June 25).—Although Bill Johnson is sheriff, he is the most timid man in Cyclone Gulch. When called upon to round up a desperate character, he always manages to have efficient deputies experience the hazards. Finally his girl tells him that the county has made a pretty poor choice and Bill is greatly chagrined.

One day, Bad Pete, a desperado, dashes into town, waving his pistols. Mary demands that Bill apprehend the bad man, but when Bill accosts Pete he is spanked and sent on his way.

Bill hits upon a scheme and secures a suit of armor. Clad as a knight of old, he baffles the desperado, whose bullets have no effect upon the coat of mail. As Bill, with his sword, prods the bad man to jail, he is acclaimed the hero of the day.

CURING HER EXTRAVAGANCE (June 25).—After Arthur's marriage to Kate, his troubles begin. Her extravagances soon deplete his exchequer. He calls upon her father, Mr. Morton, for funds. The latter supplies $50,000, with the warning that the spendthrift must be cured. Soon the fifty thousand vanishes and Arthur is desperate. He determines to teach Kate a lesson and writes a note, stating that he has gone to end it all. While sitting on a park bench, he is arrested for loitering and serves thirty days in jail.

Thinking that Arthur has kept his word, Kate, grief-stricken, pawns all his clothes and the household valuables. When Arthur returns from prison his happy wife conducts him to the cemetery and shows him a handsome monument which she has had erected to his memory.

THE CLOAK OF GUILT (June 27).—James Dana, a supposedly wealthy broker, dies suddenly and leaves his daughter, Helen, penniless. The girl secures a position as secretary to Mrs. Stuyvesant, a woman of wealth, with whom she makes her home.

Mrs. Stuyvesant has a daughter, Alma, whom she is in hopes will marry Jack Mason, a handsome young millionaire who frequently calls at the house. Jack, however, becomes greatly interested in the pretty secretary, much to the annoyance of Mrs. Stuyvesant. Helen observes, with deep regret, that strained relations have developed, but she cannot control the dictates of her heart.

One evening when Jack is taking dinner with the family, Mrs. Stuyvesant insults Helen by ordering her to take her place with the servants. Helen, brokenhearted, makes no reply, but prepares to leave and places a note on Mrs. Stuyvesant's jewel box in the boudoir.

Anxious to make an impression upon the young millionaire, Mrs. Stuyvesant asks Helen to secure her necklace. While in her mother's room Alma sees Helen departing and a cruel revenge occurs to her. She hides the jewel box on a shelf in the closet, but accidentally breaks a bottle of perfume.

Alma returns to the dining room and excitedly declares that the necklace is missing and that Helen is leaving the house. Things look dark for Helen, until Jack discovers a clue through the perfume, which enables him to establish the girl's innocence.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH (June 28).—Chadwick, the overseer, aspires to win the hand of the beautiful Dorothy Jackson, who owns the plantation. The rough man does not appeal to her and she agrees to become the wife of Dick Patterson, a promising young attorney. Finally the overseer becomes so persistent that Dorothy finds it necessary to discharge him and he swears that he will be revenged.

One afternoon Chadwick intercepts a message which Dorothy is sending to Dick, inviting him to luncheon. He succeeds in decoying the young attorney to a deserted steamboat, where he securely binds his prisoner.

The overseer then sends word to Dorothy that her lover is in danger and will only be liberated upon the condition that she come to the village church and be united in marriage with Chadwick.

Dorothy hits upon a scheme to outwit the overseer and sends her negro servant-maid, heavily veiled. The subterfuge enables her to gain time to reach her sweetheart.

Meanwhile, Dick, struggling at his bonds, endeavors to burn them with a candle which has been left him. In his desperation he upsets the candle and the cabin of the old boat is soon ablaze. Dorothy is just in time to extricate the young lawyer from his peril and puts the authorities on the trail of the overseer, who is brought to justice.

THE SULTAN'S DAGGER (Produced in Java, Dutch East Indies), (June 26).—A young European doctor has come to visit his cousin, an official of the Dutch Government stationed at Djokjakarta, Java. Together they visit the ruins of the ancient summer palace of a one-time Sultan of Djokjakarta and on the trip an old fakir predicts that the young doctor is destined to do some great deed.

Next day, reading up an old history of the ruins, the doctor learns that in olden days the Sultan, defeated by the Dutch, surrendered all his regalia except a jewelled dagger. This was hidden away, and tradition says that until it passes into possession of the rulers there can be no abiding peace.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

And on an old bit of paper in the book, dated 1867, the doctor finds a note to the effect that the only men who know where the missing dagger is are Bimgee Mal, keeper of the ruins, and his young son Devaka, the secret having been passed down in that family from generation to generation.

The cousins resolve to follow the clue. They again visit the ruins. Bimjee Mal is long since dead and Devaka is now an old man with a son and a blind daughter. Devaka is reticent and will give no information regarding the dagger, and his young son is even more hostile towards the Europeans.

The doctor takes an interest in the blind girl, and pronounces her affliction curable by a slight operation, but the father and especially the brother is very much opposed. Finally the old man, without the son's knowing it, consents to the operation, and the young girl is made to see. And as an only favor the doctor asks the hiding place of the dagger. In gratitude the old man reveals the secret of centuries, and the doctor, presenting the dagger to the present rulers establishes everlasting peace, acording to destiny and tradition.

SELIG.

ALONE IN THE JUNGLE (Special—2 parts—June 14).—The Brown family, which consists of Hon. John Brown, his wife, two sons, Harold and Billy, and a young sister named Helen, have settled on an isolated plantation in the jungles. Jack Arden, son of another English planter, who comes over frequently to hunt with the boys, has fallen in love with Helen. But Papa Brown discourages the lovers, saying that Helen is too young to be married. Jack agrees to wait.

Some time afterward the Browns receive a letter from Jack stating that he is coming for another week-end of shooting with the Brown boys. On his way to the Brown's home, Jack knocks down Concho, an overseer, for being cruel to one of the slaves. His action is approved of by the Browns. In honor of Jack the family start on a lion hunt, and, after a long trip, they return by the river route. They espy a lioness drinking at the river's edge. She is killed by Jack and taken aboard. That night Jack again asks Mr. Brown for Helen's hand and is again told to wait. The next day when Jack is going away, Helen, unknown to anyone else, accompanies him a little way into the jungle. Concho sees this and follows, until he sees them part. On the way home Helen dismounts and starts to pick some wild flowers until her attention is attracted by a lion cub. She ties her horse to a tree and trails the cub. She is followed and accosted by Concho. At the moment when she seems to be at the complete mercy of this half-breed brute, a leopard leaps from the undergrowth and attacks the villainous overseer. While the half-breed fights desperately with the ferocious beast, Helen makes her escape. She manages to make her way back to the spot where she left her horse, but, discovers a huge lion devouring the mangled remains of her mount. Terror-stricken she runs aimlessly into the jungle where she is soon followed by the lion and its mate. Concho, in the meantime, has managed to escape from the leopard. He crawls back to the plantation and accounts for his wounds by maliciously declaring that Jack Arden had abducted Helen and made off with her. Brown and boys start off in pursuit of the alleged kidnapper.

The posse overtake Jack only to discover they have been tricked by the malicious half-breed. The mystery of Helen's disappearance is still unsolved and Jack, beside himself with lover's grief, returns with the party to organize a searching expedition. In the meantime Helen has been chased to the banks of a river by the frenzied lions. In her fright she falls from a cliff into the stream below. She swims through the turbulant waters to the opposite bank and once more rushes into the dense brush. The maddened lions follow her through the water toward the oposite shore. The searching party are coming down the river at this time on rafts. Jack Arden's raft rounds a bend in the stream just in time for him to see the lions plunge into a thicket. Simultaneously he hears a scream and realizes that it eminates from Helen who lies at the mercy of the beasts. His rifle springs to his shoulder and two shots ring forth. The shots are guided straight to their mark by the unerring aim of true love and Helen is saved just before her life is crushed out by one of the wild beasts. When Jack reaches her side the huge lion is actually found dead and is lying over her body. Helen has sustained but slight wounds, and the clasp of Arden brings her back to life.

THE KENTUCKY DERBY AT CHURCHILL DOWNS (June 23).—The Kentucky Derby, the thirty-ninth annual event at historic Churchill Downs, in Louisville, Ky., attracted over 300,000 true lovers of sport, for which the blue grass state is famous. The assembly, numerically and otherwise, surpassed the recollection of the faithful old-timers, who never can forget the wonderful Ten Broeck and Molly McCarthy match. The bay-colt, Donerail, sired by McGee, from the dam Algie M., easily ran away from the longest priced horses in the betting, paying his backers princes' ransoms. Jockey Goose, on speedy Donerail, carried the victorious colors of T. P. Hages of Lexington, to the fore on one of the hardest fought racing fields of history, establishing a new record.

THE MARSHAL'S CAPTURE (June 24).—The marshal is compelled to arrest his brother-in-law for accidentally shooting a Mexican. His wife pleads for his release, but it is ineffectual. When he is asleep, she takes the calaboose keys from his pocket, but finds that the prisoner has been helped out by a half-breed. The marshal is awakened by her return and discovers that his keys are gone. He finds them in her possession, concludes she has released her brother and follows the trail into the desert. The half-breed "gets the drop" on the marshal, and is about to finish him, when the prisoner intervenes and saves him. The half-breed then steals all the horses and leaves them marooned in the desert. The prisoner proves true blue and finally gets the marshal back to his wife and friends. As a game man, he eventually gets the half-breed that perforated him while in the performance of his duty.

PAPA'S DREAM (June 25).—Papa Ward, a portly and dignified person, sits drowsily smoking in his study as his adorable daughter, Fannie, comes and bids him good-night. Shortly thereafter Toby Bates appears on the outside of the house muffled up in auto garb and throws pebbles against the window of Fannie's boudoir. She opens the window and presently comes down a ladder that the auto-lochinvar has placed against the house. They have made a fair start in their auto when Papa Ward misses her, finds the ladder, and starts his own machine in mad pursuit. Toby finds that he is short of gasoline. He pursuades the girl to hide and disguises himself with goggles and mustache turning his machine about, facing the direction from which it came, and pretends to be mending the machine when Papa Ward comes in pursuit. He does not recognize his would-be son-in-law, who gives the old man the wrong direction to follow. The girl comes from concealment and their machine is turned back home. When Papa Ward comes back utterly wearied, he finds his daughter peacefully sleeping. She pursuades the old gentleman that he acted under the impulse of a dream. With confidence restored they elope the next night. Then Papa Ward forgives them and all ends happily.

THE CITY OF GOLD (June 25).—The most noted place in the Birman Empire.

WHEN MEN FORGET (June 26).—Tom Hunter, a rising and sympathetic young artist, elated over his succes in getting into the National Exhibition, spends a day in the country. In front of a poor farm, he meets a girl staggering along under the weight of a heavy bag of washing. This girl, Grace, is the drudge of a harsh, cruel guardian. The chance acquaintance ripens to love and Tom marries her. For a time they live a simple life in the country. Then Tom learns that his paintings have made marked success in the exhibition, he goes to the city and then into society, where he is the lion of the hour. This adulation turns his head, and he continues to postpone his return to his now lone and worrying wife. She falls sick suddenly and passes away. The village postmaster finds her and wires her husband. The news reaches him in the midst of an uproarous dinner party, where he is making love to a butterfly of fashion. The shock of the tragic news is so severe that he is stricken blind.

A WESTERN ROMANCE (June 27).—The particular comfort of Col. Jordon, the superintendent of a big western irrigating project, is his lovely daughter Bessie, in a rather lonely land. Kellog, the engineer of the works, is in love with her; but as his habits are doubtful, she desires the attention of his assistant. One day when a party is investigating the site of a dam in the mountains, a premature explosion of dynamite endangers the life of the girl. In this emergency the engineer proves himself a coward, but his assistant rescues the girl. The unscrupulous Kellog is not slow in observing the growth of affection between the young people, and he manages to shift suspicion concerning a Mexican woman, whom he has treated shamefully, toward the good young man. This leads to the temporary disgrace of the young engineer; but he saves the works from distraction at the revenegeful hand of Kellog. Kellog eventually gets what is coming to him in deserved punishment, while his assistant is promoted and the girl is delighted.

ESSANAY.

A BROTHER'S LOYALTY (Special—2 parts—June 21).—The play opens with a happy scene in the home of Hal, the erring brother. Through the persuasions of a friend, Hal begins to frequent a questionable pool room. His brother, Paul, a cleric, warns him against his evil associates, but Hal disregards Paul's counsels. In a short time he begins to play for money. He gets into a game with a young man, who unknown to him, is a notorious counterfeiter, one of a gang whose headquarters are under the pool room, and of which the pool room proprietor is a member. In settling the stakes, Hal is handed a couple of crisp new bills. One of these he unwittedly passes on a local merchant. In the meantime, a detective has been on the trail of the counterfeiters and has begun to suspect Hal. When the merchant shows him the "queer" and describes the man who "shoved" it on him, the detective begins a search for Hal. The latter is warned by a pal and goes to his brother Paul for counsel. Paul persuades Hal to let him (Paul) takes Hal's place. Accordingly the brothers (who are twins), exchange vestures, Hal donning Paul's clerical raiment and Paul assuming his brother's layman's attire. The detective arrives and arrests Paul, who is subse-

In the gun play which takes place between the police and the criminals, the young counterfeiter is fatally wounded. Hal persuades him to confess. Paul is now pardoned and resumes his missionary work. The closing scenes show Paul preaching to a crowd, with Hal and his family in attendance.

ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE (June 24).—Brinsley Shaw engaged to Evelyn Selbie, leaves her to make his fortune in the West. Evelyn promises to wait until he returns. Twenty years elapse and Evelyn sends her son in search of his father. Father and son meet in the wild of the West, through the father's recognition of the ring the boy wore. Brinsley had given it to his sweetheart years ago. The father protects his son from an outraged posse who have gone in pursuit of the supposed cheating gambler. Brinsley Shaw straightens out the tangle and sacrifices his freedom for the sake of his son, who escapes.

EASY PAYMENTS (June 25).—Julia James leaves her country home for the city, to make her way in life. Dabney Briggs from the same town, tries the same thing. Both stop at the same boarding house. Julia is refused a position on account of her country clothes. She buys some clothes on the installment plan and is given the position. Dabney is given a position with Mauritz & Rosenberg, as collector. He is sent to collect the money for the clothes that Julia had bought. Dabney returns to his employers empty handed. Mrs. Briggs arrives in the city, calls on her son and offers him a flattering proposition. Dabney takes Julia back to their home town to start life anew.

THE DIVIDED HOUSE (June 26).—Old Farmer Smith and his wife give up their homestead to their married sons and depart to make their future home with their widowed daughter. One week later, a present from the old folks brings on a family feud. The cow, gets into a lot of trouble, by having so many owners.

WITNESS "A 3-CENTER" (June 27).—Pete Kelly, alderman, insults John Phillips' sister. Phillips orders Kelly off his premises. Kelly complains to the superintendent of the factory in which Phillips is working. The interview ends by Phillips hitting the superintendent. Phillips is discharged. That night, Phillips passes the evening at a theater, and very courteously obliges a young lady who is sitting on his left, by giving her his seat, so she will be next to her girl friend. That night, the superintendent of the factory is killed. Circumstantial evidence places Phillips behind the bars. Everything looks pretty bad for Phillips, until the girl he had given his seat to, proves an alibi for him.

BRONCHO BILLY'S STRATEGY (June 28).—Juan, a greaser, tries to influence Tom Morgan to steal some money from his wife. Juan finally persuades Morgan. The money Morgan gambles and loses. A week later, Juan discovers the express agent placing two bags of gold in the safe. Juan induces Morgan to help him rob the office. Evelyn, Morgan's wife, overhearing the conversation, notifies Broncho Billy. Broncho Billy gets the strayed husband out of trouble.

LUBIN.

RUSTIC HEARTS (June 23).—Dan Breen, the doctor of the little village of Oak Town, tiring of his humdrum existence, bids farewell to his cousins, the Owens, on his departure for the city. He meets with success, and, while engaged in hospital practice, becomes infatuated with Silvia Bates, a pretty nurse. Influenced by wild companions, a mock marriage ceremony is performed. The little nurse believes she is Breen's wife, until unexpectedly entering the room where Breen is recounting the affair to a party, the terrible truth is revealed to her. Denouncing him, she spurns the money offered, and, frantic in her grief, decides to go as far away from the scene of her sorrow as possible. Pawning her rings, she uses the money to buy a ticket to a point as far as possible, which, strangely enough, ends her journey at the little village which was formerly Breen's home. Wandering through the country side, she asks for a drink of water at the home of the Owens. They pity the evident distress of the girl and finally engage her as a servant in their household. As time goes by Ned Owens falls in love with Silvia and asks her to become his wife. The old pain, which the balm of her sweet surroundings has quieted, comes back as Silvia tells Ned she can never be his wife.

One day Breen decides to take a vacation and visit the home of his country cousins. For his reception a dance is given. He arrives and is warmly greeted by his friends. He then comes face to face with the woman he has wronged. Afraid of exposure, he terrifies Silvia into leaving her new home. Mounting his horse, he goes to make sure of her departure, when his steed becomes frightened and bolts. Breen is fatally hurt. Silvia, who has witnessed the accident from a nearby road, is with him in time to grant him her forgiveness. Ned's true love at last finds its reward and the clouds of unhappiness pass out of Silvia's life forever.

AT THE TELEPHONE (June 24).—Clarence Murray, a henpecked husband, calls up his wife on the 'phone during lunch hour, and tries to explain to her that he will not be home for supper, as he has an important business matter to attend to at the office. Jane does not let him get in a word, her tongue is a cyclone, and Clarence is bewildered. Old Bud Fisher wants to get hold of the 'phone, but is told that it is busy. Fisher pushes and tries to give Murry the hint to ring off. Finally he grabs the receiver and tries to talk to his party, but Jane does not let up her tirade, still believing that Clarence is on the other end of the wire. Fisher, who thinks that he has his call, is in turn almost driven crazy by the talk that comes back to him. Presently he asks Murry, who is on the wire, and is informed that it is his wife. The old man knows he stands no chance against the "lingo" of the woman, and, throwing the receiver down, walks out. Murray again returns to the attack and finally being worn out, shouts, "good bye," and staggers out.

THE ZULU KING (June 24).—John Smith is abused and henpecked. He is left at home to wash the dishes, while his wife has a good time. Brown and Jones sympathize with him and carry some of their sympathy in a bottle. Smith revolts and ships as a cook on a steamer bound for Africa. It is one slavery for another, and when a party is landed to get fresh water, he beats it up the beach and runs into a party of Zulus, who drive off the others and make him their prisoner. They take him before their king and when Smith deceives them by telling them he is bullet proof, and giving them a pistol loaded with blank cartridges with which to fire at him, they are so surprised that the shots have no effect upon Smith. They think he is supernatural and proclaim him king. The original king gives the crown and scepter to Smith. Later Mrs. Smith has turned missionary. She is shipwrecked on the very coast where Smith is king. Smith is delighted at the news of a new queen, until he finds out who it is. He then tries to commit suicide by abusing the sacred idol. But Mrs. Smith saves him. She drives off his numerous brunette wives and dethrones him. She becomes the ruler and makes Smith take the place of the fan boy and he becomes the humblest of her subjects.

THE OTHER WOMAN (June 28).—Lawrence Richards is a hard-working young business man, but his pretty young wife, Isabel, worships daily at the shrine of her demigod—society. This leads to extravagancies on her part. The husband is worried to distraction and incidentally Lucy, their little daughter, is neglected. The strain almost wrecks the husband. His mother, Elizabeth, visits him at his home for the week-end, and in despair he asks her aid. Thoroughly understanding young people, the mother promises a remedy. She studies Isabel and her acquaintances. Isabel, after a lavish social function, becomes prey to her usual obsession for fine clothes. She pleads with Richards for money. Angered, and somewhat surprised by his refusal, she confides to the mother. Elizabeth apparently sympathizes with her. She goes further. She tells Isabel the reason she is being refused is because Richards is spending all of his hard-earned money on a woman. Sparks of jealousy are kindled and speedily fanned into a flame when, on the following day, she sees from her bedroom window Richards bidding good-bye to a pretty young woman, who is carried speedily away in an automobile. She does not know it is her husband's niece. Some days later Isabel again receives an invitation to a reception, and once more she asks Lawrence for a large amount, to be spent on clothes. He refuses. His action leads to disagreement between the two and a quarrel. Isabel then hurls into his face the accusation made by Elizabeth, that Richards is squandering his money on a woman. Astounded by her charge, Richards returns to his office, miserable and worried. On the same night, Elizabeth reasserts her grave charge against him to Isabel, and is delighted with the progress she is making. She tells Isabel that if she will come to her house tomorrow, she will have the opportunity of meeting the woman face to face. The bait is tempting to the frenzied wife. Working herself into a state of rage and indignation, she goes to Elizabeth's home on the following day. Elizabeth receives her in mysterious silence. Giving whispered instructions, she tells her that if she will pull aside the curtains leading into the next room, she will confront the woman and will have her at her mercy. Isabel does as directed and sees the image of her own face gazing at her from the depths of a large mirror behind the curtains. She stares, dumbfounded, at her reflection, while Elizabeth reproves her for her past way of living. She cuts Elizabeth short in her lecture, and leaves the house in a flurry of anger. She enters her bedroom in the heat of anger. Gradually this wears away as the sound words of advice by the mother sinks into her conscience. The truth of the admonition and the distressful mental picture of Richards slaving at his office for her sake, causes her to succumb to tears. When Richards arrives home, he finds Isabel, dressed in a plain gown, embracing Lucy and telephoning that she will not be able to attend the reception that night or any other.

BOB BUYS AN AUTO (June 27).—Bob Thompson is induced by Clarence Dickson to buy an auto, and, after looking at many different makes and kinds, finally gets one that he thinks will suit him. The family immediately decide to take a trip to the seashore and look forward to a very enjoyable day. Bob's daughter, Vivian, her sweetheart, Clarence, Kemp Thompson and his friend John, make up the party. All goes well for a few miles when suddenly the car stops, something is wrong. Vivian discovers that they have no gasoline. Being far out in the country, where gasoline cannot be obtained, they are in a bad fix. The men leave Vivian in the car, and tying a rope to the machine, proceed to haul it until they can find a garage. Though slow, they are getting along all right until going down a hill Vivian, who is at the wheel, runs the car into a wall and smashes it. By this time all are pretty well worn out and disgusted. Bob gets sore and declares he will pull no further, and he walks off, followed by the rest. Finally, after a long hike, they reach home and Bob falls exhausted into a chair. Kemp, John and Clarence come in and try to console him, but Bob chases them out and they beat it very lively, swearing "Never again."

THE BEAUT FROM BUTTE (June 27).—Bill Bragg comes East to visit relatives and friends. He is in full cowboy regalia, and cuts a wide swath while he is the guest of Mrs. Bayne, whose pretty daughter, Nell, throws over Jack Scott for the dashing westerner, who is not afraid to shoot up a sheriff's posse. Bill tells all the girls exciting stories of his wonderful adventures and thrilling rescues. They think he is quite a hero and adore him. When Bill goes home, he leaves his photograph with all the girls, and they remain true to the attractive stranger. Then comes a letter from one of the town boys who went West. He has looked Bill up and encloses a snap-shot of Bill in his true colors, which shows him to be far from the romantic cowboy which he represented himself to be. The boys take the snap-shot over to the sewing circle to show the girls, and cupid gets on the job once more.

THE LOVE TEST (June 26).—Ralph Holden has been working his mine with fuse as an explosive. One day a blast fails to discharge and a workman is badly injured by the delayed explosion. The accident preys on Holden's mind, and he decides to try another method. Being of an inventive nature, he begins work on an electrical device which will automatically discharge the blasts. He is so engrossed in his work that he neglects his wife. Dr. Harding, a young physician in the neighborhood, is a friend of the Holdens, and his social visits are welcomed. One night Harding telephones the Holdens, asking them to accompany him to town and visit a picture show. Ralph, who has almost perfected his invention, refuses to go and asks Harding to take Katherine, his wife. On their return from the theater, a slight accident happens to Harding's automobile, and, while waiting for its repair, Harding preys on Katherine's lonesomeness and begs her to elope with him. She is foolish enough to listen, but does not finally consent until the next morning, when Ralph rushes off to his work without even saying good bye. Katherine then decides to leave Holden and, packing a few of her belongings, she leaves a note for her husband and leaves. That morning Holden is trying out his new device; it fails to work. As he enters to investigate, a careless workman stumbles over an electric coil, causing a contact, which explodes the charge. Holden is badly injured and blinded by the accident. A miner rides for the doctor and catches up with him at the railroad depot. He tells them of the accident. Mrs. Holden knows her husband needs her and they rush to the scene of the accident. They assist him to his home and minister to his wants. Dr. Harding calls the next morning, but learns that another physician will be engaged in his stead. The miners make a discovery of an enormous gold lode, and inform Mrs. Holden. Their future is assured, even though Holden may be hopelessly blind. The right road lies open to Katherine now and she gladly follows it.

A CORRECTION.

On page 1168 of last week's issue we published a synopsis of a Lubin two-part special subject, entitled "A Hero Among Men," giving its release date as being on June 9. The date is wrong; the film will not be released until July 9. Exhibitors will kindly note the error.

CINES.

THE RIVAL ENGINEERS (Special—2 parts—June 16).—Jean Caletti and Pierre Brazon are engineers in the employ of the same railway company. Jean, a favorite among the workmen, has incited the jealousy of Pierre, who, aided by his own surly disposition, seeks to injure him.

One day an opportunity presents itself to Pierre. While Jean is beneath his engine inspecting it, Pierre purposely bumps his engine into Jean's, causing serious injuries to him. Jean is carried to a near-by hospital, where his recuperation afterwards takes place. Pierre in attempting to make his escape, is arrested, and while pacing his cell, swears that he will yet avenge himself.

Jean is back on his old engine. Pierre having been released from prison, finds another opportunity to satisfy his heinous purpose, and mounting to the cab of Jean's engine, he almost completely severs the brakes, so that they will give way to the least pressure. When approaching a gang of workmen, Jean finds it necessary to use the brakes, but they do not respond to his efforts and several of the gang are killed. When the engine is brought to a standstill, Jean is found in a state of collapse, the horror of his experience having driven him mad. The engine is examined and the defective brakes are discovered, thus betraying the cause of the accident.

When Pierre sees what his nefarious scheme has brought about, he at first rejoices, but the death of the two workmen comes as a shock to him, and conscience-stricken, he ends his own life by jumping in front of an approaching train.

Meanwhile, Jean is placed in an asylum. Medical aid fails, and as a last resort, his favorite child is brought to him with a hope that the power of love will restore his sanity to him. The plan works splendidly, and his mind fully comes back to its normal state. Upon Pierre's person is found a full confession of his guilt, which completely restores Jean to his employer's confidence.

PATHEPLAY.

THE CARRIER PIGEON (June 24).—Every person has heard of the carrier pigeon, but few have ever had an opportunity to study the nature and care of these interesting birds, because they are far from common in the United States. The film treats the subject thoroughly, through the different stages of growth of a pair of squabs, their early training, the interesting method of wedging a rolled message to one of the pigeon's tail feathers, the remarkable system employed to determine the winner of a carrier pigeon match and one scene showing the start of some ten thousand pigeons in a race.

HOW A BLOSSOM OPENS (June 24).—A timely film which shows a flower's growth which the naked eye cannot discern and which is released at a time when every man and his neighbor is concerned with his garden.

THE HUNGER OF THE HEART (June 25).—Morton Gill, who has no scruples about the manner in which he obtains money for his support, makes the acquaintance, at a summer colony, of young and wealthy Mrs. Stoddard. Mr. Stoddard has made the common error of neglecting to appease the hunger in the heart of his wife by paying her some of the little attentions which won her during their courtship. Mrs. Stoddard, therefore, encourages Gill just a little. Gill attempts to borrow some money from Mrs. Stoddard. She refuses. He takes a necklace which she wears and it is then that Mrs. Stoddard realizes that she cannot complain without causing a scandal. There seems no hope for Mrs. Stoddard when her husband misses the necklace. But a deputy sheriff arranges things so that the thief is punished and Mrs. Stoddard learns a lesson.

CLARENCE, THE COWBOY (June 26).—Clarence, a really refined young man, went west to grow strong and sturdy with the rough life of the plains. With his hair nicely parted, he donned a cowboy outfit, diamond ring, shooting iron and all and set out to be one of the boys. The real cowpunchers tricked Clarence into believing that he had killed a man. In a panic Clarence flees. The pursuit is hot and to escape he unlawfully enters the home of a sweet little miss, the belle of the town. When he discovers that he has been hoaxed, Clarence turns the tables on the bunch and he wins the girl into the bargain.

THE SPOTTED ELEPHANT HAWK MOTH (June 27).—One of the most beautiful and gorgeous of all the moths, is the perfected insect transformed from the familiar red and yellow striped caterpillar. In this film the entire metamorphosis is shown in a clear, concise, instructive and entertaining manner.

ATHENS (June 27).—This film permits the audience a personal visit to the ruins of the city which was once the center of civilization and of which millions of persons have read and studied, but have never seen.

THE SECOND SHOT (June 28).—To end a feud, Dave Burns and Dr. Lopez agree to have one shot at each other. In the duel Burns wounds the doctor slightly before the latter can take advantage of his shot. Later, Burns on the way to summon Dr. Lopez to attend his mother, who is ill, meets the physician who has come to fire the shot that is due him by the agreement. Burns pleads with him to attend his sick mother first. The doctor agrees and, after Mrs. Burns shows signs of improvement, he and Burns go out. Dave stands motionless before the doctor who raises his gun to fire but——.

THE TRAPPER'S MISTAKE (Special—2 parts—June 28).—Tom Underwood, an Easterner who has come to the West in search of health, is living with a trapper named Bob Turner, whose wife, Rose, and their baby daughter, Violet, are the objects of frequent attacks because of the husband's unreasonableness and unfounded jealousy. The couple's frequent quarrels embarras Underwood so much that he finally decides to leave the house. Tom's kindness has been so much appreciated that when he goes Mrs. Turner is heartbroken. Her husband's cruelties and lack of consideration as she recalls them to mind give birth of a wild desire to be free of him and accordingly she writes a note to Turner bidding him farewell. As she turns to go her glance falls upon her baby daughter at play beside her. Instantly, her determination collapses and clasping the child in her arms she crumples up the note addresed to Bob. She resumes her household duties and a short time later leaves the house to get some water at a well near-by. While at the well, Rose is attacked by two redskins and carried away to their camp where she is forced to work with the other squaws at mending canoes, wigwams, blankets and the like. Turner returns to his home and finds the discarded note. Putting two and two together he naturally suspects that Rose has eloped with Tom Underwood. A year later, Tom is trading some furs at an Indian camp when he sees Rose at work. With the aid of his Indian servant, Tom escapes with Rose. They are pursued to a frontier post settled by some whites. The Indians surround the camp and a stirring battle ensues. The men from the neighboring plains come to the rescue of their white brethren and among these arrivals is Bob Turner. The fighting continues fast and furious until finally the redskins are routed. After this is accomplished Turner publicly denounces Underwood, accusing him of eloping with his wife. Underwood denies the charge, and so does Rose, but Turner is skeptical. He is finally convinced that he has made a mistake when Underwood's Indian servant substantiates Tom's account of the rescue of Rose from the Indian camp.

BIOGRAPH.

A COMPROMISING COMPLICATION (June 23).—When a lady beau of the present century leaves her defenseless lover piled high with bundles on the park bench and a bully boy appears with a timorous Lady Rose, complications are bound to arise. There he left her with the defenseless one while Bud and Bessie proceeded to compromise the honor of both. The sheriff was out posting the Mayor's edict—"No flirting allowed in this town"—when Bud and Bessie appropriated his shackles and bound the timid two. It started something, as any spectator will soon see.

MISTER JEFFERSON GREEN (June 23).—Lazy Jefferson Green considered his constitution purely a mental machine. His mind was employed in getting his body out of work. On this occasion he decided his physical self should have appendicitis. The best medical aid in Dark Town was employed—very serious case, immediate operation necessary. Jefferson's mental machine could not cope with the situation, so his physical part started to run. Open air and exercise did the rest.

IN DIPLOMATIC CIRCLES (June 28).—The reporter assigned to obtain a copy of the message from the Japanese Government unraveled the mystery of its disappearance in a clever manner. Every foreign government naturally was eager for a copy ahead, while the meeting of the Japanese Ambassador and Secretary of State was surrounded with greater risk than they imagined. But the well laid plans of the diplomatic spies were undermined and the innocent lover freed.

HER MOTHER'S OATH (June 28).—The orthodox mother's indomitable will dwarfed the child's individuality, defeating the very purpose it would attain. The girl ran away with an actor and the fearful prayer, "If I ever speak to that man again, may God strike my mother blind," was fulfilled, but in the end the woman was saved from herself.

FRONTIER.

THE SQUAW MAN'S REWARD (June 26).—Edwin Wright, an artist, falls in love with his uncle's ward, Anges Worth. Their affair progresses and he becomes engaged to her. He is desirous of obtaining western atmosphere in his paintings and to that end makes a trip to the far west. He paints several pictures at different spots, most of them near the residence of a band of Indians. One day, as he is painting, he is struck with the beauty of an Indian maiden whom he sees filling her olla at the water hole. He gets her to pose for him and a month later has completed a canvas which he feels he will never equal. The picture is a full length panel of the Indian maiden, Waneta, holding her olla. He sends this east to Agnes deeming her worthy of his best work as well as of everything else he has that is best.

Not long after he has sent the portrait east he receives a newspaper clipping telling him of Agnes' engagement to a boyhood rival. He is heartbroken. The emotional reaction which follows this news, determines him to take Waneta as a wife. He buys her from her father and the two are married after a quaint Indian ceremony. For a time they are happy, but Edwin feels the call of his own kind sometimes and a letter from his uncle crystalizes this feeling into a determination to return to his eastern home and to Agnes. The letter gives him news which forces him to the conclusion that the newspaper story was a false one and he reverts to his original love of Agnes, or so he thinks.

He goes back east, and there he is again much with Agnes. She has admired the painting a great deal and when he comes, admires it more in his hearing. Every word, of course, is a reminder of the poor little Indian girl whom he has deserted. His uncle has promised him $100,000 on the day he marries Agnes and is doing everything possible to push the matter along. Edwin is torn by doubts, however, and feels that things cannot return to their old basis between himself and Agnes until he has told her of his affair with the Indian girl.

Silas Marler, the uncle, councils strongly against this. His hard, mercenary old soul causes him to tell Edwin to marry Agnes and say nothing of the Indian girl. Both he and Edwin are sure she will never cause trouble, but Edwin is made of finer stuff than his relative and finally confesses to Agnes his love and his sin.

Agnes is horror stricken, but despite the revelation, continues to love him as much as ever. Her love is indeed so great that she is unselfish in it, and urges Edwin to return to the Indian girl, to whom he owes a duty. She tells him to go. Obedient to her, he goes.

Once back at the Indian village he finds Waneta and with her, his reward, a baby son. Thus out of his sorrow and grief, the obedience to his duty brings him his reward and poor Agnes is left to bear the sorrow that is woman's portion all to frequently.

BISON.

THE GUERRILLA MENACE (2 parts—June 24).—In the hills of Dixie live Jed and Sue—a country lad and lass—who are very much in love with each other. The keeper of the wayside tavern is an unscrupulous fellow who has coveted Sue for sometime. He makes advances to Sue, but Jed, who suspects the man, warns him to keep away and not molest her.

Jed longs to enlist in the cause of the Confederacy, but Sue protests at his leaving her. Jed is torn between two desires—the one to become a soldier, and the other to please his little sweetheart. But on the day when Captain Bruce Douglas and his detachment pass by, on their way to join their regiment, Jed's ambition to be a soldier proves the stronger and he begs the captain for permission to join his troop. The captain gives his consent and Jed rushes back to bid Sue a hasty farewell. Jed does not omit, however, to again warn the tavern keeper to stay away from Sue and says: "If she ain't smilin' when I come back I'll kill you." Jed leaves with Captain Bruce and his detachment.

Bruce's sweetheart lives at Sage Ridge in the vicinity of Sue's home, and both men while in camp, sympathize with each other in their longing for the girls they left behind. Jed being unable to write, Bruce helps him to scrawl a line to Sue, and encloses the message in a letter to his sweetheart, asking her to deliver it to Sue.

While Pauline receives the letter, she determines to deliver the message personally. A band of guerrillas have come to town, and the tavern keeper bids them welcome. They camp near the tavern, awaiting their opportunity for a marauding expedition, while the leader becomes very friendly with the tavern keeper. Pauline, on her way to Sue's home, stops at the tavern to inquire for Sue. The keeper gives her directions and follows stealthily with evil intentions.

Pauline delivers Jed's message to Sue and helps the latter to pen a line in reply. Sue watches Pauline depart—too bewildered to thank her and sees the tavern keeper stop Pauline's horse and try to drag her from the saddle. Sue rushes to her rescue and with smiles and coquetry calms the keeper, who is angry at the loss of his prey, and coaxes him to follow her to the hut, where she slams the door in his face. The keeper grins maliciously and slinks away, swearing to win.

Bruce receives a dispatch from Gen. Beauregard, informing him that a band of guerrillas are near Sage Ridge and instructing him to go there with a detachment and take necessary action. Bruce immediately leaves with his men, taking Jed along.

Arriving in the vicinity, his first thought is to see Pauline and ordering his men to prepare camp, he takes Jed and sets out for Pauline's home. Jed awaits nearby while Bruce goes to the house, and sees the tavern keeper and the guerrillas sneaking up to attack. He rides off to to camp to give the alarm. In the meantime the guerrillas, led by the tavern keeper, have overpowered Bruce and the keeper drags Pauline away. Jed, returning with the troopers, sees the keeper and while the troopers ride on to Bruce's assistance, Jed goes to rescue Pauline. The troopers quickly scatter the guerrillas and release Bruce.

Jed discovers the loss of his gun and a hand to hand struggle ensues between him and the tavern keeper. Bruce arrives in time to shoot the keeper in the arm as he is about to stab Jed. The keeper makes his escape, and angered at his defeat, seeks revenge on Sue. Together with the remaining guerrillas, he goes to Sue's hut. They drag her out, but she breaks away from him. Jed, on his way to see if Sue is smilin', comes upon them. Sue runs to him and in the unequal fight that ensues, he is hard pressed. Sue goes for assistance—Bruce's men drive the guerrillas back while he goes in search of Jed. He comes upon Jed, who, in a struggle with the tavern keeper, has gained a hold on the latter's throat and choked him to death. Bruce leads Jed back to the house, where the girls attend to Jed's wound. That night the moon beams on two happy couples.

THE ANGEL OF DEATH (June 26).—A mother pleads with the doctor to save her child's life, but the case is hopeless. The child dies. The mother pleads with the angel for her child when death's revelation of the child's future life appears, first at the head of his school class, later showing him in love, then happily married. He is a trusted employee, but he is later tempted by a woman whom he meets through a friend and he steals at the woman's command. Overhearing by chance that he is duped by the friend and the woman, he strangles the woman, and the vision fades out and the mother hands her baby to "The Angel of Death."

HIS MOTHER'S LOVE (June 23).—The son of a poor inn keeper, decides to leave his home to seek his fortunes in a foreign clime. Bidding his mother good-bye, she puts a locket around his neck as a remembrance. Years roll by and the folks have not heard from their son. In the meantime, the son has struck it rich, but he has neglected his parents, and in a quiet moment, he remembers the locket his mother gave him. He desires to return home, but to surprise his parents, he writes them he is coming home poor instead of rich. Years have changed his appearance and on his return his parents do not recognize him. He rents a room from them without telling who he is. In paying for his room, he shows a large sum of money, which tempts the mother to steal, so she can have money to welcome her poor son's return. She enters his room and kills him. She then discovers it was her own son by the locket hanging around his neck. The sheriff arrives and takes her away. While pleading with the sheriff, she awakes and finds it all a dream. The son comes down and tells her who he is.

BROTHER AND SISTER (June 27).—Gertrude, an Italian girl, has a brother Jack. He is employed in a stone quarry, and she is a nurse in the family of the owner of the quarry, Jim. There is a strike agitation among the workmen at the quarry. A leader among the agitators makes love to Gertrude against her will. Jim sees this, and not realizing Gertrude's unwillingness, discharges her. He also discharges the threatening workmen.

Jim has a sum of money at his quarry office, and fearing to leave it there, takes it home. A workman sees this and notifies the leader. They telephone Jim, luring him from home, with the false report that trouble is expected at the quarry. Jim leaves his house unprotected.

Jack overhears this plan, and runs to her with the news. Gertrude sends Jack for Jim and goes herself to his home. She and Jim's wife and child are beseiged by the robbers, who break down the doors.

The dining-room door is barricaded with a sideboard, and eGrtrude leads the wife and child to a bedroom. The robbers break through the dining-room, and pursue the women through a hall, and to the bedroom door which is barricaded with furniture.

Meanwhile Jack has notified Jim at his office, and he is on his way home with a rescuing party. They arrive just as the last defense gives way. The robbers are overcome, and Gertrude's bravery receives the recognition that it deserves.

THE FLYING CIRCUS (3 parts—June 28).—The Flying Circus was the largest traveling artist band in the country, and among its favorite artists were the rope-dancer, Laurento and the snake tamer, Ula Kiri. The hot blooded gypsy snake tamer is passionately in love with the attractive young man, but he does not quite return her feelings. She is hasty and ill-tempered, and not far from being cruel to those depending on her.

For the first time the Flying Circus pitches its tents in a small country town. The daughter of the mayor attends. The rope dancer meets her and for him it is a case of love at first sight, and he decides to do all in his power to win her. That night a great fire breaks out in the town, and the flying embers ignite the home of the mayor. The townspeople strive in vain to deflect the flames, but all in vain. The mansion is doomed to destruction and it seems that the mayor's daughter must perish. At this juncture Laurento beats his way through the flames and scales the wall, and, picking up the frantic maiden, jumps to the mesh of telegraph wires outside the window. Carrying his burden over the fragile wires, he saves her amid the frantic cheers of the populace. The grateful mayor makes him a welcome guest, and he soon wins the heart of the young girl, but he has yet to obtain the father's consent.

He worries continually about this problem, and not even at home can he rest in peace, for Ula Kiri, who feels that her beloved friend in sliding away from her, keeps tormenting him with jealousy and mockery.

At last he plucks up his courage and goes to the mayor. The latter is friendly to the young man, but he compels the rope dancer to leave with a vague promise for the future, if circumstances should alter.

A capital idea strikes the young man to obtain money. He arranges to do a rope dance to the church tower. The circus director is delighted with the idea.

The great day arrives, and the people of the town gather around the church. The rope dancer cannot forget Erna's sorrowful eyes and pale face as he walks along the flaccid rope towards the dizzy height. A snake has escaped and its body bars the way to the entrance to the tower. The snake tamer has, in her mad jealousy, forgotten all about her duties, and this negligence now proves fatal. Erna implores her in vain to call back the reptile, as she is the only one that can do it, but Ula Kiri will not listen to her in her storm of jealousy and hatred. But Erna overcomes all difficulties. Her great love teaches her what to do, and thus she saves her sweetheart. The mayor can no longer withhold his consent to the marriage and the same evening the Flying Circus goes away to the other regions, leaving a happy couple in the country town.

NESTOR.

POLEON, THE TRAPPER (June 23).—Poleon is a trapper of the North woods. He loves Rosie, but finds it's difficult to tell her of his love. Pierre, a good looking, unprincipled, fur buyer and trapper, arrives at the post. He finds Rosie and does not hesitate to make love to her, while poor Poleon looks on from afar. Pierre marries Rosie in secret and swears her to silence, promising to return and to claim her as his wife. Rosie trusts him implicitly, but time goes on and Pierre does not come, nor does she hear from him.

Poleon returns for trading purposes. He sees Rosie and finds her ill and wretched. The love in him surges up and he determines to find Pierre and bring him back to her. Poleon follows Pierre with all the skill of a trapper. He comes upon him at his camp fire. There is a struggle, in which Pierre is overpowered and bound. They start homeward and one night Poleon sleeps from exhaustion and Pierre, working his bonds loose, steals to Poleon's side and taking his knife, attacks him. Poleon grapples with him and in the fight Pierre inflicts a bad wound upon himself.

Poleon carries him back to the store. He calls Rosie and sending for a priest insists upon the marriage ceremony being performed. Pierre dies and again Poleon goes away to still his great grief. While in the woods and pondering beside his camp fire, Poleon sees a vision of Rosie, with arms outstretched, beckoning him to come back. Poleon immediately breaks up camp and starts for the post to claim his happiness and Rosie.

PARTNERS (June 25).—Tom Devery, a prospector, unexpectedly meets Jack Carson, whom he knew in the East. Tom invites Jack to share his cabin. A few weeks later they strike a rich vein of gold ore and decide to form a partnership. Jack sends for his wife and they settle down.

All goes well for a time, until Devery falls in love with Jack's wife and during his absence,

Tom makes advances to her which are repulsed. This angers him, and knowing where Jack's partnership paper is secreted, gets and destroys it. Mary tries to prevent this, but is unsuccessful. Jack arrives in time to prevent further insult to his wife.

Jack and his wife are driven out of their cabin and seek the aid of the sheriff, who was a witness to the partnership agreement. He agrees to assist them, but on their arrival at the cabin, find it almost destroyed by an explosion. Devery had had a quarrel with a newly engaged miner. Shots were exchanged—one of them hits a can of dynamite which fatally injured both men and blew up the cabin. Devery lives long enough to ask Jack's forgiveness and give him all right of the mine.

PROFESSIONAL JEALOUSY (June 27).—Signor Bigcheesi, the impresario of the Slanhardi Opera Company, finds the audience that greets the opening performance of his company at Angelton a very appreciative one, but Signor Bigcheesi finds cold consolation in this fact because behind the scenes bedlam reigns.

Signor Muchmoutho, the much advertised basso, has discovered that the fickle public has grown cold in their appreciation of his art and has transferred its favor to Signor Somebumma, the tenor of the company. To add to his sorrow, Muchmoutho, finds that Madame Highschreechi, the prima donna, has likewise transferred her fickle affections to his hated rival.

The basso and the tenor have a heated argument in the wings and an exciting outbreak before the audience, and Signor Bigcheesi fines all three a week's salary for creating the disturbance. Then follows an "artists strike."

Bigcheesi, in despair, puts a musical stagehand in the tenor's role, but is at his wits' ends to fill the place made vacant by the prima donna. He rushes away to a lunch counter for a cup of coffee to steady his nerves. Miss Hasher sings his order in such an artistic manner that Bigcheesi immediately signs her up as a prima donna.

The "striking artists" are greatly surprised when they read the next day of the wonderful success of the substitutes, and Miss Highschreechi becomes "green with envy" when she reads further that Miss Hasher is soon to become the bride of Signor Bigcheesi.

POWERS.

THE $10,000 BRIDE (June 25).—Jack Gayboy tried hard to pass his afternoon in the East Side Club, but at length in disgust he throws down his hand with the ultimatum of finding a show or something beside cards for entertainment. His companions entreaties were lost and he sallies forth to seek the great white way.

Mary O'Malley known to stagedom as "Phedra, the Egyptian dancer" was hurried from her dressing room by the impertinent manager ere she had time to powder her nose more than ten times. Now Phedra had eyes like the stars of Arabia, but her mouth was awful. A carefully draped veil of Egyptian gauze, however, hid this defect and Jack Gayboy fell hard for the descendant of Cleopatra. A carefully worded note of invitation sent to Phedra's dressing room brought her to Jack and his waiting auto. Her closely veiled face she refused to disclose until she was well ensconsed in the cafe, and to Jack's murmured "will you marry me" she shyly assented and raised her veil. "Suffering Rachael, what a face!" Her mouth cut bias, pointed heavenward and her few remaining teeth were surely in morning. Jack made one frightful leap and vanished out the door. Phedra, not to be fooled at this time, followed.

Now, in the meantime, Solomon Lobelsky, of the tribe of Israel, and his stout German friend Max Straus, were gunning in the woods. Max and Solomon both fired simultaneously at a pheasant, and the bird falls. A hot argument ensues as to the slayer and Solomon runs away with the prize. Max, in his anger, fires at Solomon and the child of Israel falls. At this critical juncture Jack Gayboy, closely followed by Phedra, runs on the scene. Hearing Max say he would give $10,000 if Solomon were only alive, Solomon raises up and demands the money. They are confronted by Gayboy, who offers them the $10,000 to relieve him of Phedra by marrying her. She, breathless, has caught up to Gayboy and he tells her Max wishes to marry her. He shoves the check in Max's hand and flies. Max goes up to Phedra, raises the veil and with one frightened look seeks safety in flight. Meeting Solomon he gives him the check and tells him he is the chosen one. Solomon goes to Phedra, lifts her veil—"Oh, Israel, what a face!" Still $10,000 is ten thousand dollars, and with eyes glued to the check he consents.

Max shows his true friendship by being best man, and Gayboy gladly signs the check for Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Lobelsky.

IT HAPPENED AT THE BEACH (June 25).—The weather was delightfully fine when Max and Lon, accompanied by their spouses, started to the shining sands. Everything was lovely until the boys wandered away while their wives was dressing. The venuses of the surf caught their eyes and caused them to get into the wrong bath houses, from which the horrified inmates hurled them to the sand. Safe at last in their bathing suits, they disport in the waves. Ocean water is chilly, even on lovely days, so the wives seek the sands and dry clothes.

The hubbies, seeing their chance, open a violent flirtation with the bathing girls and forget the indignant wives altogether. But they were not forgotten by the ladies, who investigate their delay; and coming upon the gay Lotharios, give chase with parasols.

Not content with this the angry wives tear the bathing suits from their trembling forms, and only two empty barrels save them from arrest. Edging their way to the bath house, they sigh with relief and go inside. Simultaneously there are two howls of despair. Their clothes are gone!

Again parading in the barrels, they tell their wives of their loss. Sympathy is not expected, but the wives fear their own embarrassment. At this crisis, however, a big policeman, with a tramp in tow, passes. Oh, rapture! The men see their clothes, reclaim them, and screened by their wives, they make a hasty toilette.

THE SPELL (2 parts—June 27).—A young doctor makes a superficial study of hypnotic suggestion and discovers that he has powers in that direction. He practices upon his sweetheart and her friends. One day a traveling hypnotist comes to town and the girl, Ethel, decides to see what he can do. She and her acquaintances attend the seance and Ethel offers herself as a subject. She proves an amenable medium and her beauty appeals to the hypnotist, who neglects to release her from his influence and forces her to go away with him.

On hearing of the disappearance, the distracted doctor hurries to the girl's home and gets a clue from a newspaper clipping. He follows several clues, and finally traces them to a town where he sees her in a store window in a trance. He endeavors to get through the crowd, but the hypnotist influences the police and he is ordered away.

He appeals to headquarters and that night attends the performance with detectives. He creates a scene when he invades the platform, but the girl, under the spell, says she does not know him and he is turned away as an imposter.

Baffled and heartbroken, but determined still, the doctor pulls himself together and calming down thinks the extraordinary situation out. He keeps in touch with the faker's movements, and remembering his own hynotic powers, determines to put them to the test. With a friend he studies and practices and finds he has a wonderful will power. He travels to where the girl is on exhibition and taking a position in the audience, concentrates his mind upon the one thing. Gradually he finds the girl uneasy at some foreign influence, turning her eyes toward him. Their eyes meet and when she withdraws her own with a gasp, she knows something is wrong.

The professor is unable to get her will bent to his own and gets more and more uneasy as she fails in simple tests. The audience commences to murmur and for once the man's self-possession fails him. He looks around for opposing influence and in time encounters the penetrating gaze of the doctor. He falters and is lost, for there is a will power stronger than his own facing him. Hysterically the man points to the doctor, telling the audience that he is the man who is ruining the performance and the people hold their breath as the doctor goes slowly to the platform and makes the wretch confess upon his knees. The police take charge of affairs, while the doctor gathers the rapidly recovering girl in his arms.

THE BURDEN BEARER (June 26).—The burden bearer, Lois, a young bride, enters into matrimony with a full realization of the serious step she is taking. Her husband, a gay young clubman, thinks little of his obligations to his wife and enters into marriage in the same reckless, care-free manner in which he has formerly lived. Upon the first evening of their honeymoon the young bride has her first burden, when at dinner her gay husband insists upon drinking glass after glass of liquor in spite of her remonstrances. She is horrified and ashamed when they rise to leave the table to discover that he is intoxicated. Bravely she attempts to hide his condition from others in the room and in the hotel and spends a sleepless night of grief while he slumbers in a drunken stupor upon the couch.

The following morning he is repentant when he sees Lois' suffering and promises never to drink again. His old companions of the office and club, however, soon persuade him to return to the old habits and he laughs at his wife's scruples when she attempts to warn him of the danger ahead. A young neighbor, Ramona, receives a letter of introduction to Lois and finding that her husband is already a friend to the bridegroom, suggests that the two couples go to a fashionable restaurant for a good time. Here all drink but the bride, who vainly attempts to induce her husband to refrain. Dancing begins and when the bride declines to participate, she is left alone at the table and classed by Ramona and the merry-makers as a "killjoy." A half-drunken man comes to accept Lois as a partner, but she gazes ahead heartbroken at her husband's conduct. The bridegroom having become intoxicated during the night's revels, the bride is forced the next morning, in order to save her husband from disgrace, to tell his employer that he is ill. Again he promises to reform, but now she has little hope that he will do so. The arrival of unpaid bills makes her burden greater for she fears not only for the present, but for the future.

The husband in penitence brings his wife flowers as a peace offering, but the unpaid florist bill takes away the pleasure of the gift and Lois' unenthusiastic manner makes the husband angry. Ramona, chancing to call and see the wife's unresponsive manner toward her husband, writes her friend that Lois is incomprehensible and most unappreciative of her husband's kindness.

Lois now realizes what her burden will be and starts a music class to help pay the bills. The husband protests and makes a great show before his friends of the uselessness of his wife's work. Ramona, like others of her class, having no serious thought in life and reckoning little of the consequences of her gay life, is thoroughly disgusted at the bride's persistence in going against her husband's wishes, when, as she thinks, he is so willing to make everything pleasant for her. Her last letter to her friend reads: "Such a woman would drive a man to drink."

DRAGA, THE GYPSY (June 29).—At the suggestion of a guest, during a fashionable country house party, the guests visit a gypsy camp nearby to have their fortunes told. Jack Harlow the hostess's son, there meets and falls in love with Draga, the gypsy chief's daughter. She is attracted to him, and he persuades her to meet him secretly. She meets him and later he persuades her to run away with him and be married.

It is the law of the gypsies that the women cannot mary outside of the tribe. If they do, they can never return, so when Draga's father learns of his daughter's loss, he is heartbroken. He orders the camp broken up and the gypsies depart.

Jack's mother, upon learning of her son's wild marriage, is horrified, but decides to make the best of it for his sake. Draga's education is begun, and she does her best to learn, but her wild nature rebels against the conventional life she is compelled to lead, and she often longs for her father and the old life of freedom. Jack's affections for her cools, and soon he neglects her for the company of others.

Later, upon the night of her debut into society, driven to desperation by her husband's coolness and the scorn of his friends, she decides to leave. She quietly leaves the reception room and dons her old gypsy costume.

In the meantime, the gypsies again visit the neighborhood. Draga's brother, during her absence from the gypsies, has fallen into evil ways. He decides to rob the big house, not knowing that Draga lives there. He enters, and is about to leave with his plunder, when Draga, on her way out, intending to leave her husband's home, comes upon him.

While she is pleading with him to leave without the stolen silver, she hears some one coming. Her husband has missed her and is looking for her. Hearing their voices, he tries to enter the room, but Draga runs quickly and locks the door. Jack knocks loudly and begins to force the door open. The brother makes his escape through the window. Jack forces the door open and enters, followed by his mother. Seeing the silverware tied up and Draga dressed to go, Jack accuses her of being in league with her people to rob the place. She refuses to explain, and during the excitement, he orders her to go. Draga leaves. As Jack returns to join his guests, the brother is brought in by the servants who caught him hiding in the garden. He confesses to the attempted robbery.

Jack is overcome when he realizes the terrible wrong he has done his wife, and he orders a search made for her. His conscience is awakened. He knows that down in his heart, he really loves her, so he starts after her.

Draga returns to her father, who refuses to take her back. He hands her a dagger and tells her to obey the law of their tribe. After she has left the camp to carry out her father's order, Jack comes to the camp seeking her. The old chief tells him the direction taken by Draga and her purpose. Jack, frenzied with fear, comes upon her as she is about to plunge the dagger into her breast, and a reconciliation follows.

In the middle of a conversation with Pearl, Chester suddenly rushes from the room. This state of affairs continues on and off, until Pearl by accident came across the book and understands her beau's strange actions. The next time Chester calls, Pa again wills that he go, but Pearl wills that he remain, and Chester is kept running in and out of the house until Pearl's superior and stronger will wins and he remains. Pa sinks exhausted and consents to allowing Chester's attentions to Pearl.

THE SPIDER (June 8).—The plot of the story has to do with two rivals for the hand of a beautiful Japanese girl, who shows her preference for one. There is a combat between the two, and the favored lover is victorious. The happy couple then continue on their little picnic in the woods, which had been interrupted by the rejected suitor.

Leaving their lunch at a certain beautiful rock, where they had been resting, the two happy lovers climb up a small hillside to secure some particularly beautiful flowers, which caught the little lady's fancy. The villain, who had been following, discovered the lunch, and taking up the cup from which he knew his rival would drink, he killed a poisonous spider and crushed it into the cup, pouring the poison then into the bottle of wine.

The lovers return, and the favored suitor drinks from the poisoned bottle and is overcome. The villain comes in to gloat over his dying rival, and another fight ensues, but the poisoned man has not strength to withstand his enemy. Seeing the death of her lover, the girl secures his dagger and stabs the murderer in the back, and then kills herself.

HE COULD NO LOSE IT (June 8).—This is a short comedy of the troubles of a tramp with a wheelbarrow, which did not belong to him. He was compelled to move it through a misunderstanding with the village officers, who thought he was the owner. They refused to allow him to leave it anywhere, much to his disgust.

HE SLEPT WELL (June 15).—And here comes our old friend "Snookums" again and his Dada and his beautiful "mozzer." This time Dada has made arrangements to go to a fancy dress ball, and has secured a wonderful costume. He is dressed as "Chanticleer." The "Precious One" thought the costume very fine before they started, but he was left alone with the maid, who was given strict instructions to 'phone if she should need them.

Well, just as they were having a wonderful time at the ball, one of the servants called Dada to one side, and told him that the maid has 'phoned that "Snookums" was crying. Without waiting for any further word, Dada ran out of the ball and down the street like mad, to see what ailed his darling.

On the way, he caused a colored "gemmen" to faint, when he saw such a big chicken, and had an altercation with a big bull dog, but he reached home finally, somewhat the worse for wear. When he rushed in—there was "Snookums" sleeping as peaceful as could be. The maid had calmed him, and he had only been awake for a very few minutes.

A HUSBAND'S MISTAKE (June 23).—Jack Worhington and his wife were happy in their own love and the love for their baby Helen. Evelyn had never told her husband of her brother Dick, whose besetting sin was gambling.

Going away on a business trip, Worthington gave his wife a handsome necklace. That day Evelyn's brother Dick, called, beseeching Evelyn's help to get work. Evelyn got him work with an uncle on Dick's promise never again to touch a card.

Dick grew in his employer's estimation until he was entrusted with considerable funds, one day, to take to the bank. He yielded to temptation and lost all. That night, Worthington returned and a great ball was given. In desperation Dick wrote a note to Evelyn asking help and she went to the veranda. Dick kissed her just as Worthington stepped out. Evelyn gave her necklace to pawn. After the ball, Worthington so upbraided his wife that she refused to explain, and taking her baby she left.

Months passed and the husband grew desperate. One day Dick came and returned the necklace. Worthington, learning the fact, frantically set out and finally found his wandering wife, now eking out a precarious livelihood as a seamstress. The child Helen, proved the magnet that drew the wife once more to her husband.

CALAMITY ANNE TAKES A TRIP (June 26).—"Calamity," having fallen into money, receives a letter purporting to be from two long lost cousins, who were really Los Angeles confidence men. With her burro she goes to Los Angeles. After many adventures, she succeeds in getting her burro into the Pullman, and is met at the great amusement park, Venice, by the confidence men. What followed is a scream for "Calamity" who made all the rides on the chutes, loop the loop, merry-go-round, etc., took her dinner in the ship cafe and almost got drunk. Among other things, "Calamity" took in picture shows and grew so enraged at the villain that she hauled forth her gun and shot several bullets through the screen. It was a fearful day for the bunco men and when they tried to escape, Calamity let them see her gun and the jig was up. Finally, after a riotous day, "Calamity" boarded the train for the return journey, leaving two very much disheartened bunco men behind her.

DEAD MAN'S SHOES (June 28).—Tom and Mabel were sweethearts, but Tom did not seem to get on in a business way, so Mabel started him for the West. Tom blew in his little stake before leaving, and arrived out West broke and discouraged. There he fell in with two crooks and with them laid plans to hold up the pay wagon of the construction camp.

Meanwhile, a hobo got off a freight and strolled to the camp in search of work. He needed only a chance to reform. He watched the men place a stick of dynamite and leave, and too late, saw Tom, crouched down in the danger zone, gun in hand, waiting for the pay wagon. There was a terrific explosion and Tom died. Hurrying to the scene, the hobo donned Tom's clothes and papers, secured work, took Tom's name and prospered.

Worrying over the absence of her intended, Mabel and her father visited the construction camp. They asked for Tom and his namesake, now clean shaven, handsome and prosperous-looking, responded. There were explanations and a visit to the grave. "With him I buried my failures," said the other. In the days that followed, Mabel found she still wanted the name of Tom, and eventually married him.

THE TONGUE MARK (June 15).—Surelock Homes is called to detect a burglar. He looks for finger prints and discovers a "tongue mark" made by a dog, although he does not know this. He rushes through the street, examining tongues with various amusing results and finally arrests the dog. Proudly he brings his captive before the fair victim of the burglary, but in the meantime the real culprit has been arrested by a policeman and the valuables discovered.

So Surelock Homes gets nothing for all his trouble, not even a kind word.

BEAUTIFUL BISMARK (June 17).—The business man was thoroughly disgusted with his son, for the boy was a failure at college and did not show any signs of ever amounting to anything. The last straw was when he announced his engagement to a fair co-ed. The father was a kindly man, however, and determined to give the youth a last chance. He presented him with a row of houses in a subdivision of a Western city, telling him that upon his success in disposing of the property would depend whether or not he was disinherited.

It must be admitted that the father was handing his son a lemon, for "Beautiful Bismark," as the suburb was named, had been a drug on the market. For a while the son was in despair, but one day his chance came. A caller refused to get excited over the cottages, but gave it as his opinion that "Beautiful Bismark" was an excellent oil property.

A good business man would have recognized that there was something wrong with the enthusiast, and arranged for his prompt return to the asylum from which he had escaped. The young college man, however, took the ravings of the other seriously, and improved the property with the last of his money.

That is why in Beautiful Bismark today there are rows of cottages with oil wells in the front yards. The young man made good, much to everyone's surprise, was not disinherited, and married the woman he loved. And the father never knew that the son was simply lucky and went through life believing he was a remarkable business man.

THE BANKER'S SONS (June 20).—One of the most prominent people in the little city was the president of the bank. He was a man of high personal character and the prosperity of the banking institution was due to a large degree to his personal popularity.

The banker was anxious that his two sons should both develop into successful business men, and in order to satisfy himself as to their capabilities he gave each of them a large sum of money. The older son promptly justified his father's faith by investing his money in real estate, but his younger brother purchased a high priced racing automobile. The father was deeply disappointed at his son's failure to demonstrate his business capacity, and the elder brother became his favorite.

But the time soon came when the younger son's racing car proved to be a far more valuable investment than real estate, for it was the means of saving the banker's fortune. A false report that the bank was insolvent caused the depositors to clamor for their money. There was not enough money in the bank to pay them all off, so the younger son, getting into his automobile with his fiancée, raced off to a nearby city to secure funds to save the day. His elder brother, who was very jealous, telephoned to the police and tried to have him stopped before he could accomplish his errand. But the younger son triumphed over all obstacles and returned to the bank with the needed money. The older son's treachery was exposed, and his brother won the girl he loved.

THE DREAM HOME (June 18).—Mrs. Marshall, a widow of some means, has one child, a boy about six years. Mrs. Marshall is one of those women, who, in keeping the house clean, overdoes the thing to such an extent that it is a mania with her. Little Joe cannot play with his toys for fear he will litter up the room. Some one gives Joe a dog, but there is no room in the house for it. Joe and his puppy go into the barn to comfort each other. Joe falls asleep and dreams of a home where little boys are allowed to have pets and play with toys to their hearts' content. All children are having a great time and he soon awakens to find that it was only a dream. He writes a note to his mother and tells her that he is going to find his "dream home." He finds his "dream home" in the shape of a little cottage near his home. The children invite him in to play and their mother shows great tenderness to the little chap who feels at home at once. The father of the family comes home and finds Joe having a good time. Joe refuses to disclose himself, but tells them this is to be his home and they his parents. Mrs. Marshall in the meantime finds her son's note and becomes alarmed. The father of the children 'phones to the police station that a stray boy is at his home. Soon after the message is received, Mrs. Marshall enters and the police tell her that she may be able to find her son at the address they have given her. Mrs. Marshall son arrives at Joe's home, but he refuses to have anything to do with his mother. Finally after some persuasion Joe is won over and says he will go home, but only on the condition that he be allowed to play as the other children. This is agreed to. Mrs. Marshall realizes that she has been thoughtless about the pleasures of the little fellow, but from now on she will act differently. Joe tells his mother that his home is now a "dream home" and he will never want to leave it any more.

WALLINGFORD'S WALLET (3 parts—June 21).—Mr. Wallingford, a millionaire, drops his wallet in the park. It is picked up by Nifty, a crook. Wallingford turns in time to see the crook picking it up and with a policeman, chases Nifty, who, to throw off suspicion, casts the wallet into the grass and smokes a cigarette as the policeman comes up. He is searched and then ordered away. A little girl, Rosa, penniless and hungry finds the wallet. As she is looking through it, Breezy, a crook, who had that day decided to turn honest, grabs it from her. That night, at their meeting place, Breezy announces to the crooks that he is going West to be an honest man and displays the wallet. Nifty coming in sees it and claims it as his own. Breezy laughs and goes out taking the wallet with him. Nifty writes a note to the police giving them Breezy's address. Breezy returns home, shows his wife the wallet and they start to pack. Before long the officers are at the door. In desperation, Nell flings the wallet in a covered dish of chicken that reposes upon the fire escape. The dish is watched by the little girl upstairs, Rosa's sister, who has had nothing to eat all day. Seeing the shutters closed, she grabs the dish and climbs up again into her room. The police search Breezy's place and finally open the shutter to look on the fire escape. To Nell's joy the dish is gone. The police leave satisfied and the pair lose no time in getting out of the town.

Rosa returns disheartened to find Anna devouring cold chicken and the wallet on the floor beside her. Rosa asks where she got it and the child tells her. Rosa, taking the wallet, goes downstairs to return it and finds the apartment empty. Wallingford who has received word from the police, meets the two girls with his wallet in the hall. A few questions convinces him of their poverty and he makes arrangements to send them to the country where they have plenty to eat and decent clothes to wear.

THANHOUSER.

THE HEAD OF THE RIBBON COUNTER (June 15).—The head of the ribbon counter was the most popular clerk in the store. Customers liked him, employes admired him and even "the boss" regarded him highly. Rival merchants vainly tried to win him away, but he refused all their offers, being thoroughly happy where he was. There came a day, however, when he found the need of friendship. Much against his will he became involved in an argument with one of the store's best customers, a peevish, wealthy woman. She finally indignantly descended upon the proprietor of the store, telling him that unless the clerk was discharged she would withdraw her custom.

What could the poor proprietor do? He tried to make everybody happy by publicly discharging the clerk and privately re-engaging him. To dodge the customer's wrath, however, he supplied the clerk with a disguise enjoining him to wear it whenever danger approached.

A new crisis came along soon when the disguised clerk ran afoul of the same disagreeable woman. She did not recognize him, but wanted him discharged just the same. Fortunately for him another patron took his part and the helpless proprietor had a worse problem to tackle than any that ever came before King Solomon. If he discharged the clerk, he would lose the patronage of one of his best customers. If he retained him he would lose the patronage of another equally good customer.

He couldn't afford to do either, but he so managed things that he did not lose any trade. It took some skillful work to accomplish this, but the proprietor was resourceful and his novel plan was ably seconded by the versatile head of the ribbon counter.

THE SNARE OF FATE (2 parts—June 17).—When her widowed mother became afflicted with a severe illness, the young stenographer's scanty savings were quickly eaten up by medicine and doctor bills. She then borrowed money from a loan shark, and the interest on this loan became a heavy drain on her small salary. Additional funds were needed, but the creditor refused to advance any more except that she become his wife. She repulsed him, but later, to save her mother, she consented.

Her husband was a brute; his only thought being for gold. One day the wife met a poor woman in the park weeping bitterly. She learned that the woman was about to lose all her belongings to pay the extortionate claims of a loan shark, who was her husband. The wife took the woman to her husband's office, but she only met with his usual harshness and he told the woman to either pay or take the consequences. The next day the wife left her husband, taking her little boy with her. The husband was glad of this because it would save him money.

The loan shark owned property, and when the agent came and told him that he could not collect a tenant's rent, he ordered the family put out. Later, while walking near his tenement houses, he was stricken with paralysis, and fell dumb and helpless in the doorway. The tenant whom he had ordered out, but who did not know the landlord, took him into his squalid home and ministered to him. The landlord, unable to speak, could not make his identity known and the next morning as the tenant's belongings were being removed, the landlord was placed upon a mattress and carried into the street, where he lay until he was taken to the hospital. His destitute benefactors soon found friends in a seamstress and her little boy, who took them into their home, and when told of the poor stranger, the seamstress went to the hospital to see if she could aid him. She was surprised to learn that the stricken person was her heartless husband. After he died the money reverted to his wife, who was good to her tenants as her husband was merciless.

A CHILD OF THE HILLS (June 19).—Barton Grey, a young composer, is ill from overwork and worry through the failure of his efforts to meet with the approval of the publishers. His physician orders him away for rest cure, and he goes to the Blue Ridge Mountains. There his recuperation is fast and he decides to work on his "Song of the Soul." Barton takes his violin and goes to the mountain top, where in the solitude he endeavors to woo the muse. Attracted by a voice plaintively singing, he seeks its source and comes upon Pam, a wild rose of the hills. Their friendship ripens into love, and she becomes the inspiration for his work. They are married at the little mountain church and Barton takes her back with him to the city.

THE SEAL OF SILENCE (2 parts—June 27).—A railroad plant is set afire by striking workmen, and the firemen are prevented from extinguishing the flames by the infuriated strikers. The troops are called out and martial law prevails. John Owens, who was counseling the men to take peaceful methods, is charged with inciting the riot and is given a ten year sentence. Mrs. Owens lives in poverty and her two children, Cyril and Mildred, go into the railroad yards, where they gather coal. Seeing the watchman coming, Cyril jumps into a freight car, while Mildred manages to escape to her home. The mother reports the loss of her child to the police, and the newspapers give much space to the case The car in which Cyril is hiding is bound for the West and nobody notices the little fellow inside when the door is locked and sealed. The car, being laden with groceries, the little fellow does not starve, and when it reaches its destination two tramps break open the seal and Cyril jumps out and runs away. He is found by an Indian chief, who keeps him.

At the expiration of Owen's term he and his wife go West. Their wagon train is overtaken by Indians and in the skirmish Cyril recognizes his mother. He saves his parents and sister from the Indians and leads them to a hiding-place. Cyril is wounded and is brought back to health at the post by his Indian sweetheart, Wampa. His parents plead with him to leave the Indians and his sweetheart and after battling with conflicting emotions his white nature asserts itself and he yields to his mother's entreaties.

WILLY WANTS TO RIDE A HORSE (June 19).—Willy is a persistent little rascal. While visiting a store with his nurse, the youngster saw a fine wooden hobby horse. He wanted it whether or not the price was too much and the nurse insisted that he come along home and not think of it.

But Willy did think of that "hobby" and when he found a fine lot of clothes, beautiful wraps and hats, in his home, left in a room by the guests at a reception his mother was giving, Willy hurried away to the pawnbroker with the entire lot. He replaced the fine things with some old ones secured from the pawnbroker and then started to buy his "hobby" with the money he had secured. But justice was moving swiftly and before the little mischief maker reached the store he was captured and his father administered one of those good old-fashioned "spankings," which are said to be the best of medicine.

FUNNICUS TRIES HIS LUCK AT LOVE (June 26).—Funnicus was left by his parents with his tutor, who was not only a scholar, but also what is generally known as a "jolly good fellow." When the young man discovered that his tutor had the photograph of a beautiful young woman and had just received a note from her, asking for an appointement that evening, he insisted that he be taken along. The tutor agreed, but not with much enthusiasm.

It was a case of love at first sight when Funnicus saw his tutor's friend and he could hardly keep his eyes from her, although he was quite busy at the same time with the sumptuous meal purchased by his host, the tutor.

When the teacher strolled away for a little walk and Miss Irma retired to her room to prepare her luggage, our friend decided to have a smoke. But the cigar he chose was a little too strong and the result was that he became deathly sick. Miss Irma discovered this and dragged the young man to her room so that his tutor would not see him in such a condition. But the tutor returned at just that moment and so the young man took refuge in a trunk which was being packed.

The express man removed the trunks and Funnicus had a nice little trip inside one of them until he frightened two guards half to death by raising the lid while they were seated on it playing cards. He then escaped and continued the journey with Irma.

THE HONOR OF LUCRECE (June 10).—Collatinus, a Roman nobleman, leaves his wife, Lucrece, to join his Emperor, Tarquin the Superb, at the siege of Ardea. During a lull in the siege, Sextus, son of Tarquin, suggests to several companions that they should ride to Rome and surprise their wives. They find their wives in the midst of revelry, wining and dining and disporting themselves most hilariously. They are evidently not thinking of the perils of their honorable husbands at the scenes of war. Lucrece of all the wives is absent. They find her amongst her maids, busy at her spinning-wheel. Her calm and serene beauty deeply impresses Sextus. Her image so preys upon his mind, that, after the men have returned to their camp, Sextus rides back to the house of Lucrece. He pretends to bring news of her husband. It is necessary that Lucrece show hospitality to her royal guest. He wines more than he dines and becomes riotous and insulting in his familiarities, whereupon, Lucrece leaves him and goes to her honorable couch.

In the night Sextus arises from his bed. His mind inflamed with wine, he steals to the door of Lucrece's room. Before daybreak Sextus flees from the house. Later in the morning, Lucrece, having sent to her father's house for Brutus, one of her husband's kinsmen, tells him of the visit of Sextus. With life then no longer holding sweetness for her, her honor taken from her, she takes her dagger and plunges it into her ravished breast. Snatching the dagger from the wound, which still flowed red from the cold bosom of the dead and outraged wife, Brutus calls upon the crowd to follow him. They raise a revolt to restore the republic and do away with the monarchy.

MEN WERE DECEIVERS EVER (June 12).—Gaydogg, though an incorrigibile flirt, adores his wife. She, nor anyone else would have suspected it, however. On an afternoon at the river side, as she gazes over the tranquil waters, she sees in a rowboat her husband, with a blossoming blonde. They are doing more kissing than rowing. Mad with jealousy, the wife leaves the house. She leaves a note for her husband, accusing him of his deception and saying that he will never again see her. Although she doesn't know where she is going, she is on her way.

Her husband learns that his wife has flown. The note explains the reason. He follows. Her automobile breaks down on a road by the seaside and she is forced to take refuge for the night in a fisherman's cottage. Here her husband comes. He tries vainly to conciliate her. A storm comes on and Gaydogg and his wife are invited to spend the night there. To this they agree, but insist upon having a separation between their sleeping quarters. A screen is utilized for this purpose. Gaydogg stretches himself out in a Morris chair. His wife, becoming lonely in the night, realizes that husbands are handy things to have around the house. She comes out and forgives him.

THE CALL OF THE ROAD (June 18).—One day when Old Bill was away drinking at the village saloon, an official from the Children's Aid Society entered Bill's wretched home with an order from the Court to take his two motherless children to the poor-house. The kiddies escaped from the official and wandered away.

Towards night, when they had traveled far, they grew tired and hungry and cried. Three knights of the road heard their sobs and brought them back to their camp. They set out to look for a place for them to sleep. They discovered an old barn, where they placed the tired children. In the morning Farmer Brown and his wife discovered the children and adopted them. A few months later Farmer Brown moved, and Old Bill, unable to find his children, joined the tramps. One night, unknowingly, they entered Farmer Brown's new home. Pauline heard them and dropped from the bedroom window to the ground right into the arms of one tramp. She recognized him and appealed to him for help. He called the others off. Old Bill escaped before the children saw him and finding them happy, harkened to the call of the road and passed out of their lives forever.

THE HELPING HAND (June 11).—Jack Burns, an ex-convict, finds it difficult to secure work and seeks aid from a wealthy minister, who believes Jack's story and engages him as a chauffeur. Bert, the minister's son, becomes infatuated with a designing woman, who, with several notorious gamblers, inveigles him into gambling. He loses in a card game and is forced to give an "I. O. U." for $800. Jack Burns sees his benefactor's son with one of the gamblers, whom he recognizes, and warns Bert: but Bert resents his interference. Not having money to pay his gambling debt, Bert is cast aside by the woman and threatened by the gamblers.

In order to pay the $800, Bert attempts to take the church donations left in his father's care. He is surprised in his act by the ex-convict, who forces the money from him. The minister discovers the loss of the money before Jack is able to return it. Jack is accused of the theft and is dismissed. The minister later learns that his son is the real culprit and through the ex-convict's persuasion, he forgives him.

THE WORTH OF MAN (June 25).—Jack Moore, through a misunderstanding, believes his rival, Bob Clarke, is going to marry Mary Blair. Both men being employed in the same office, they are on friendly terms. Jack discovers a shortage in Bob's accounts and he loans him enough money to cover it.

Realizing that Jack is protecting him for Mary's sake, Bob allows him to believe that he is going to marry her. Jack leaves for the West after writing Mary a letter, stating that he could not remain and see her marry another. Mary, who loves Jack, is heartbroken when she learns of his departure. She waits anxiously for his return, but in vain. She is easily persuaded by her father to marry Richard Barker, a rich broker, who turns out to be a reprobate and brutal husband.

In the meantime, Bob has been following the wrong road and becomes associated with evil companions.

Jack returns east after he has struck it rich. He meets Mary and learns of the fatal mistake that separated them. Realizing that her married life has been unhappy, Jack sympathizes with her. Barker misconstrues Jack's attitude toward his wife. He makes a base insinuation, which Jack and Mary resent. This brings on a heated argument. Mary's husband, being maddened with rage and drink, draws a revolver. Jack defends himself in the struggle, the revolver is accidentally discharged and Barker is killed.

Bob has fallen from bad to worse. Being surprised by officers while burglarizing a house, he is pursued and is forced to enter the Barker home to escape the police. He overhears the quarrel and sees the shooting. Coming on the scene, he tells Mary and Jack that appearances are against them, and in order to protect them, he will throw suspicion on himself. He leaves the house in view of the officers, who, having heard the shot, are coming toward the house. Bob is captured and the officer draws the conclusion that Barker was shot by the burglar, thus exonerating Jack and Mary from all suspicion.

SOLAX.

THE DYNAMITED DOG (June 25).—Mrs. Hawkin's husband is much worried by their neighbor's dog, Grip, and his wife decides to put an end to his worry and at the same time an end to the dog. She buys a stick of dynamite and ties it to the dog's neck, hoping in this way to send Grip to Heaven., Grip, however, suddenly becomes very much attached to Mrs. Hawkins and when she goes to leave him, he cannot bear the separation and is quite annoying to Mrs. Hawkins, who, in her efforts to place a reasonable amount of space between herself and Grip and also the dynamite, goes through many exciting adventures—she almost drowns swimming across a river and only arrives safely on the other side by the help of Grip himself, minus the dynamite which he has lost in the chase.

THE MERRY WIDOW (June 25).—A young and charming widow is courted by two young men, neither of whom can she decide she loves best. She is, however, a great lover of athletics and decides to take the strongest and the most strenuous and devises a test of their forces. She invites them both to accompany her to a friend's house in the country and both accept with alacrity. Before the journey she fills her grip with all the old iron, keys, door knobs, hammers, and such like tools that she can find, and when ready with her two friends to leave goes to take her grip, but both young men immediately rush forward and fight for the honor. The one who succeeds, however, finds that he has more honor than joy in the undertaking, but they are compelled both to take turns so that neither has cause for jealousy. Arrived at the railroad station, the bottom falls out of the grip and its contents fall on the ground before two policemen on the lookout for a gang of burglars. They think surely they have captured the bunch and arrest them. The sergeant takes up the grip and placing it on his shoulders, lightly carries it off, showing that he is a "strong man." The young widow immediately feels great sympathy for the sergeant, and on the road to the station, the sergeant and the widow become great friends. Arrived at the station, the captain is also found to be very athletic, and handles the grip even more lightly than the sergeant, succeeding thereby in winning, to the discomfiture of the three other admirers.

THE MESSAGE TO HEAVEN (June 27).—Mr. King treats his wife and baby very poorly, but Mrs. King makes the best of things until the handsome Mr. Johnson arrives and falls in love with her. She then finds that she cannot resist the temptation of all the fine things he offers her, and she goes away with him. This act makes Mr. King realize what he has done and he reforms. He cannot, however, overcome his hard feelings toward his wife.

As his child grows older, she constantly asks for her mother and the father always tells her that she is in Heaven. One day a neighbor dies and little Emily puts a note in the dead person's hand, asking God to please send her mother back. On her way home she is run over by an automobile and is taken to the hospital. It so happens that her mother was in the automobile that ran over Emily and in this way a reconciliation is brought about between the mother and father. But little Emily insists that God answered her note and sent her mother back home.

LUX.

CAST THY BREAD UPON THE WATERS (June 20).—Jean Pierre is a woodman who lives with his mother in a forest far away from the beaten tracks of mankind. He not unnaturally fails to see the sacrednes of rabbits and other small game, and, in spite of the advice of his mother, occasionally poaches. In escaping from some gamekeepers, he is severely wounded, and, unable to follow his calling, is threatened with object penury.

A short time before, in his absence from home, a tramp has broken in and threatened his mother. The women's pity, however, softened the tramp's heart, and, after having been provided with a meal by the kindly woman, he left with a heart full of gratitude. Now that the woodman is ill, the tramp repays the debt by carrying out the injured man's task, and by thus, saving from destitution the woman who had befriended him, shows he still possesses a tender spot in his heart.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE SUFFRAGETTES (May 31).—Miss Hampton is the president and guiding spirit of a society of women, which has for its object, aside from the right to vote, the denunciation of men and other luxuries. Miss Hampton is of the sort that affects mannish attire and carries her crusade into the homes of many a timid man. At a meeting of the society it is announced unexpectedly that Miss Nancy Lauder, one of the prominent members, has become engaged to William Hawtree, a prominent young architect. Consternation prevails for a time, but Miss Hampton assures her fellow members that she will cause Nancy to see the error of her ways. The marriage takes place in due time, however, and the bride and groom are enjoying their full measure of happiness until Miss Hampton appears upon the scene during the absence of the husband.

She literally takes possession of the newly furnished home of the Hawtrees, and proceeds to make decided changes in the interior. The furnishings are not to her liking, and for the most part, they are classed as "luxuries." Dainty portieres are pulled from their fastenings, richly upholstered chairs are carried into the basement, and Persian rugs are bundled away in dark corners. In their place Miss Hampton causes ordinary cane-bottom chairs to be placed in position and matting is placed upon the floors instead of rugs. The interior of the house is transformed into a most cheerless and uninviting place of abode, but Mrs. Hawtree lacks the courage to interfere with the president of the society.

When Hawtree returns from his office, he is dumbfounded to note the change that has taken place in his home, and he is by no means pleased. But instead of raving and making a fuss over the situation, he hits upon a plan to bring his wife around to his way of thinking. A few days later he sends for Miss Hampton and in his office, shows her a plan for a home to be built according to the regulations of the society. She is delighted, and while in this mood Hawtree makes love to her, after smearing one side of his face with drawing ink. He embraces her and gets the imprint of the smudge. Mrs. Hawtree arrives at this moment and is horrified at the sight she beholds. When Hawtree reaches home that night, he divulges the plot to his wife, and when Miss Hampton calls, the love-making is resumed, only to be interrupted by the appearance of the young wife. The agitator is ordered out and the original furnishings of the home are restored to the former places.

AN UNWELCOME WEDDING GIFT (June 14).—Mr. Stribolt is a stout old party who has accumulated a fortune in the motion picture business and likewise he is the proud father of a beautiful daughter, for whom he has great hopes in the matrimonial market. Again, the young woman in question, is in love with Jack Wormold, a young actor who has made a distinct hit as a film actor and who returns the affection of Stribolt's daughter. All goes well until Count von Swindlestone appears upon the scene, and, learning that Stribolt has accumulated a fortune, decides to win the hand of the daughter. The Count is impecunious, like many other of his fellow noblemen, but he puts up a bold front and proposes for the hand of Agathe. The latter detests him, but the will of her father prevails and she unwillingly consents to become the wife of the adventurer. Jack is furious, but that avails little with Stribolt, who has his mind set upon having his daughter shine in society as a full-fledged Countess. The Count is all attention and when he places an engagement ring upon the finger of the bride-to be, his happiness seems to be supreme. But the Count is not all that he appears to be on the surface and Jack decides to play the part of an amateur detective. He urges Agathe to play her part and in the course of time, Jack finds an opportunity to catch the nobleman in a trap. The latter boards a train with a music hall actress, and Jack disguised with whiskers and carrying a motion picture camera, is on hand to make a picture of the departure. He even accompanies them on the train to their destination and makes a series of excellent pictures. On one eventful evening, some time later, the Count, Stribolt and Agathe are seated in the old gentleman's picture theater, when to the surprise of the little group the screen is adorned by the picture of the Count and the strange lady. The finale may easily be imagined.

ECLECTIC.

THE MYSTERIES OF PARIS (5 parts).—Prince Otto, heir to the throne of Kronholm, and his wife, Lady Margaret, are leaving on a visit to their child Rose, who is being taken care of by an innkeeper and his wife. Prince Otto and Lady Margaret were married against the wishes of Otto's father, Prince Rupert, the reigning prince of Kronholm. The marriage of Prince Otto and Lady Margaret is not recognized by Prince Rupert, and he is not aware of the existence of the child Rose. Prince Rupert has taken steps to anul the marriage and has received word from the Pope that a decree to that effect is impending. Lady Margaret becomes aroused and determines to thwart Prince Rupert. There seems to be but one way to do this, and that is to bring about the death of the old Prince. She accordingly sends a note by messenger to her brother Albert that he must find a way to bring about Rupert's death in order to secure the title of her child.

The messenger falls into the hands of Prince Rupert's soldiers who search him and find the incriminating letter. The messenger escapes wounded and reports the seizure of the letter to Lady Margaret. She at once prepares for flight to Paris, stopping at the Inn to get her child whom she takes with her. Meanwhile Lady Margaret's note is delivered to Prince Rupert who reads it and sends for his son at once. Prince Otto is first shown the message from the Pope in which the marriage is pronounced illegal. Prince Otto resents his father's interference and professes undying loyalty for his wife. The pleadings of the old man not only leave Prince Otto obdurate, but he becomes infuriated to the point of breaking his sword over his knee as a token that friendship is at an end between them. Prince Rupert, horror-struck by his son's obstinacy, finally decides to show up the unworthiness of Lady Margaret, and thus cure his son of his ill-placed love. Prince Otto in beholding the incriminating letter of his wife, begins to realize the truth. With ill forebodings, he hastens to the inn and finds that his child has been taken by her mother to Paris accompanied by her man-servant. A farewell note is handed him by the inkeeper. Arriving in Paris, Lady Margaret makes arrangements for the care of little Rose with a poor family in the suburbs, and then leaves the country.

The scene changes to the slums of Paris showing the Black Cat Inn, which is a resort fr vicious and lawless characters. The dominating personage of the unsavory characters who loiter here, is an old thief who is know as the "Wolf." His wife, a repulsive old creature, is known as the "Buzzard," and his son, a crafty sneak, is known as the "Hopper." Between them they have all the others very well cowed. There comes to the Black Cat Inn one day a countryman known as Fritz. While he is enjoying himself, he is robbed by the "Wolf," and Fritz makes a futile search for his pocket-book. The money stolen from him was not his own, and he writes a note to his sister begging the loan of 200 francs. Fritz keeps on drinking in the evil company of "Wolf" and "Buzzard" who point out to him the foolishness of his borrowing money when it is just as easy to steal it. All three proceed to rob the sister of Fritz.

It happens that the sisted of Fritz is the very woman with whom little Rose has been placed by Lady Margaret. The robbers appear to do their dirty work. They ransack the place and set it on fire. The old "Wolf" is on the point of strangling little Rose when his wife, the "Buzzard," realizing that the child will be useful for begging purposes, puts a stop to it. The house is burned to the ground and Rose is carried away.

Meanwhile Prince Otto has been searching Paris for his wife and child. Twelve years pass away and we next see Rose a young woman, selling flowers. She is clad in rags and has become a creature of the slums. She is known as "La Belle Rose." She is constantly ill-treated by the "Wolf" and the "Buzzard," as well as by their son, the "Hopper," but she shows no resentment of their treatment, except upon one occasion when she tries to take away from the "Buzzard" a necklace that was dear to her as a child. About this time Lady Margaret returns to ask her husband's forgiveness. Prince Otto reads her a report from the police, intimating that Rose perished in the fire twelve years ago that destroyed the inn in which she was kept. Meanwhile Fritz, the countryman, has gone from bad to worse; he is drinking heavily and associates with the characters at the Black Cat Inn. He is there when Prince Otto, still searching for Rose, enters the place in disguise. Just as the Prince enters, Fritz is engaged in forcing his unwelcome attentions upon Rose, who is trying to sell flowers. Observing this annoyance, the Prince interferes for the girl, and has a terrific fight with her insulter. The Prince gives Fritz a sound thrashing, and compels him to beg the girl's pardon. To show then that he is a good fellow, the Prince buys Fritz a drink. He learns from Fritz that Rose belongs to the old "Wolf," and on hearing the story of her ill-treatment at his hands, he makes a bargain with the "Wolf" and buys Rose from him. In the goodness of his heart, he tells Fritz to come along with them and he will give him work.

With his usual cunning, the old "Wolf" sends his son to follow the Prince and his companions. The "Hopper" follows them and finds out that the stranger is a man of wealth and position. Prince Otto at once hands Fritz a letter to the police asking him to trace the antecedents of "La Belle Rose." Fritz does not get very far before the letter is stolen from him by the "Hopper." Lady Margaret and her brother Albert again become active in the case. They first locate Prince Otto, and Albert follows him to a farm where he is taking Rose to place her in good care. Albert decides that the girl is someone with whom Otto has fallen in love, and he writes his sister Margaret to that effect. This has the effect of arousing an intense animosity for the girl in the heart of Lady Margaret.

The old "Wolf" has laid a trap for Prince Otto. He sends the "Hopper" with a note that he can get information of the parents of La Belle Rose if he will come to the Sewergate Inn, located in the suburbs. Otto finds the place and is thoroughly on his guard against this family of cutthroats. With two pistols he confines their attention strictly to the business in hand, but he is no match for their cunning. Directly behind Prince Otto, the "Hopper" opens a trap-door in the floor, and with a slight push, sends Otto tumbling headlong to the sewer beneath. The evil three descend quickly and rob the senseless man. This done, they throw open the duct from the reservoir, and the sewer begins to fill with water. Prince Otto is in immediate danger of drowning. However, his faithful servants at home have missed him. They find the letter directing him to the Sewergate Inn, and Fritz, suspecting danger, hastens there at once, arriving in the nick of time to save the life of the Prince.

Lady Margaret's brother Albert runs across the "Hopper" and through him becomes acquainted with the old "Wolf" and the "Buzzard." He engages them to get rid of La Belle Rose, and all four return to the farm to carry out their design. They secure first a boat with a panel bottom made for sinking purposes by the pulling of a string. They next send a decoy note to Rose that she is wanted across the river to attend a friend in sickness. The girl innocently goes to the shore and starts across in the treacherous boat. When she is in mid-stream, the old "Wolf" pulls the string that operates the sliding panel, and in the next moment Rose is struggling for her life in the water. Prince Otto and Fritz, having called at the farm and suspecting foul play, follow the girl, and arrive at the river bank just as Rose is about to drown. Both plunge into the water and pull her to safety, while Albert and his evil companions are snarling in rage at their defeat. The rescuers take Alice to the farm, where all are happy at the outcome. Just then a State messenger arrives and informs Prince Otto of the death of his father, and salutes him as the reigning Prince. In this way, Rose for the first time learns the true rank of her benefactor. Some days later, the "Wolf" decides to rob the Prince and sneaks into the mansion. The intruder is promptly discovered and made a prisoner by Prince Otto and his servants. Brought before the Prince, the "Wolf" is charged with his many crimes. Considering the enormity of the man's evil acts, the Prince decides to put an end to his malicious activities by depriving him of his eyesight. This is done at the command of Prince Otto, and the miserable miscreant is then set out into the world to get along as best he can without his sight.

While the old "Wolf" is being disposed of by the Prince, the "Buzzard" and the "Hopper" have gone to Lady Margaret to tell her that Rose has been killed, and to get the reward for this misdeed. Lady Margaret, trying to find some money, produces her bag of jewelry, and they promptly assault her, leaving her lying helpless while they make away with the valuables. The "Buzzard" and the "Hopper' return to the Sewergate Inn. The old "Wolf," his eyesight gone forever, is led by Fritz to his familiar haunt, the Sewergate Inn, where he gropes his way into the presence of the "Buzzard" and the "Hopper." When they discover that his eyesight is destroyed, they promptly rob him of everything he has and tumble him through the trap-door into the sewer. They follow him there and tie him like a dog. In the struggle, the old "Wolf" gets a grip on his wife's throat and strangles her. This pleases the "Hopper" immensely. He robs his mother of Lady Margaret's valuables and then turns in the water from the reservoir and drowns his wretched parents.

The "Hopper" is immediately afterwards arrested and Lady Margaret's jewels are found upon him and other jewelry possessed by the "Buzzard," including the locket that Rose had worn when a child. Rose is brought into the presence of Prince Otto, who has received a letter from Lady Margaret, who has been severely wounded and is dying. The Prince takes Rose with him to the bedside of the dying woman. While they are there the "Hopper" is brought in by the police. Among the jewels found on the "Hopper," Prince Otto recognizes Rose's necklace. Rose also recognizes it at the same moment and by this means her identity is established as the daughter of Prince Otto and Lady Margaret, who very soon expires in her daughter's arms.

AN AWKWARD MIX-UP.—The Hammonds get a letter from their son that his wife will arrive on the 1:10 train. "Meet her, the blonde lady in a red coat." Mrs. Mason gets a telegram from an employment agency to meet their new cook at the 1:10 train. "A blonde lady in a red coat."

Now the mixup begins, and the fun follows fast and furious. The cook goes to Hammonds' and is treated as the son's wife, the wife is sent into Mason's kitchen. Complication follows complication until the climax is reached when the son returns and wants his wife. He rushes upstairs only to find the cook. In the meantime, matters have been cleared up at the Mason's and they rush the wife over to Hammonds'. Explanations follow fast and all the complications are straightened out.

LOCAL COLOR.—At a metropolitan theater there is billed, as the opening attraction, a new play entitled "The Ebb Tide." The young actress who is engaged for the leading role, goes to the seashore to live in a little fishing village in order that she may absorb the "local color." She dwells among the fisher folk and dresses like them, so as to "live the part."

WHYTE-WHITMAN-CO., 36 East 23rd Street, New York City recreation, comes the author of the play; and when one day he rescues a pretty but plainly dressed girl from a rock where she has been marooned by the rising tide, he mistakes her for a simple fisher-maiden. Shortly afterward he himself is mistaken for a revenue officer, and but for the cleverness of the "fishermaid," who helps him to escape by a ruse, he would have been mobbed.

An impending romance is interrupted by the call to rehearsals, and at the theater the author is annoyed by the manager's announcement that the leading lady insists on his play being changed in certain particulars, which, she insists, are not true to nature. The author is defiant, until he meets and recognizes his "Fisher-maiden," when a truce is declared, and the romance of the summer is resumed, with every prospect of that "happy ending" so much desired in plays, footlight and photo.

PICTURE THEATERS PROJECTED.

Philadelphia, Pa.—E. F. Gorman has the contract for a one-story moving picture theater, 48 by 167 feet, to be built on the south side of Haverford avenue, east of Sixty-third street, for the Overbrook Amusement Company, at a cost of $20,000.

Grand Island, Neb.—Woolstenhouse & Sterne have awarded the contract to H. H. Falldorf for the erection of a two-story moving picture theater and apartment building, 44 by 132 feet and to cost $20,000.

Detroit, Mich.—J. Pazlaski has let the masonry contracts to Rogowski Brothers & Weede, 934 St. Aubin avenue, in the erection of the theater, store and flat building. The theater will have a seating capacity for 400. The building will contain two stores and one apartment.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Margolin & Block have bought a lot on the east side of Broad, below Reed street, from Simon Weiss, for an undisclosed consideration. The property has a frontage of 56 feet on Broad street, and a depth of 178 feet, and will be improved by the purchasers by the erection of a moving picture theater to seat one thousand persons, the cost of which is estimated at $50,000.

Chicago, Ill.—Oscar Florin, 800 North Clark street, has received estimates for the erection of a one-story theater, 25 by 115 feet, with a seating capacity for 300.

Why You Should Adopt Our Plan for Your Theatre

BECAUSE

when many of the seats in your Theatre are empty your expense is no less than when all of them are filled.

our Plan will fill your Theatre, and your expense will be no more.

you will sell twice as many tickets through our method as you do by the old way.

OUR SYSTEM will get the people to come to YOUR Theatre.

with most people, attending a picture show is a habit.

our Plan gets the people in a habit of coming to YOUR Theatre.

competition is keen, and the one that is most progressive gets the money.

you are in business for PROFIT.

by the use of our Plan you will increase your profit.

the publicity alone which you will derive by the use of our Plan will more than re-pay you for the efforts put forth.

you will gain more publicity through our SYSTEM than by advertising in the newspapers.

this is not a premium selling proposition.

you have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

all we ask of you is to GIVE IT A TRIAL.

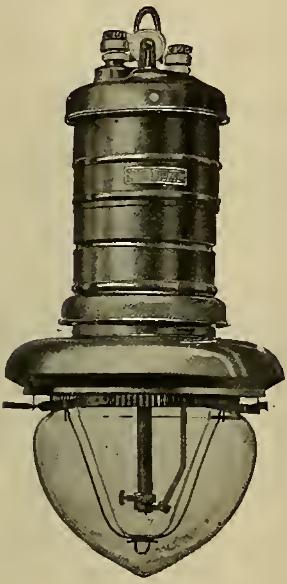
The Trade Mark of the Largest Electrical Manufacturer in The World.

The Attraction of Good Light



Good brilliant illumination has an immense "pulling" power. To have two or three flaming arcs outside your theatre attracts the crowd.

Good light also shows up the signs and gives your place a cheery, inviting appearance.

A well lighted exterior is one of your most telling advertisements.

The Long Life Flame Arc Lamp Type W is one of the most powerful lighting units known. It is especially adapted to illuminating the exteriors of theatres. This efficient lamp is economical to install and maintain—one set of carbons burns for 100-120 hours without attention: and only one of these carbons needs renewing at each trim.

The lamp is thoroughly reliable and substantially constructed.

THE RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN

Better today than ever; very naturally we should have imitators. It's the law of human nature to follow where other shoes have trod. If you will profit by the experience of others, don't permit yourself to be deceived with "something just as good."

We sell you not only a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, but give you a service that will make you thank yourself for all time that you enlisted under us. It's that feeling of friendship and our aim to treat our purchasers as we ourselves would want to be treated, that counts a great deal. But it is only one of the many reasons why you should do business with us. WE HAVE THE GOODS.

Dear Sir:—The Mirroroide Screen arrived and I put it up Friday, May 30, I have been in the game six years and have used many different screens but the Mirroroide has them all skinned. "What fools these mortals be," to fool with a so-called screen and put their patrons' eyes out with a flickery picture, when their patrons would boost business after seeing the projection on the daylight. You give me thirty days to pay for this screen. Three days is enough for me. To say that I am pleased is not enough, I am "joyful" over my investment, and you will find check for entire amount.

You are the squarest, fairest bunch I ever did business with and I thank you.

Very respectfully,
DR. F. N. CHILDS.

Broncho Headliners

ALL RIVERS MEET AT SEA

1 Reel, July 2

A moving picture girl loves and marries an actor in the same company. The director, a rival, manages to cause the young husband to be knocked out of a boat, and he is picked up far away with a lost memory. A long time after the moving picture company visits a fishing village and the husband has his mind restored by seeing his wife, who joyfully flies to his arms.

THE TRANSGRESSOR

2 Reels, June 25

A story of Puritan village life. The son of a minister wins a girl away from her devoted fisherman. Orphaned, she is adopted by the minister, and when her child is born refuses to reveal the father's name. She is cast out by the minister and scorned by the people. When her child is dying the fisherman comes back to her with unfaltering love, and the minister's son meets a tragic death at the hands of the Indians.

A BANDIT

On a Split Reel, June 23

Willy is a rather effeminate young man, and is abused by the town bully. He suspects that the bully is a coward at heart, so disguises himself as a bandit and shoots up the town. Everybody, including the sheriff, flees in terror, and their consternation is ludicrous when they discover that the terrible bandit is none other than harmless Willy.

PEEPING PETE

On the Same Reel

Jack and Pete are the terrors of the town. Jack peeps through a knothole in the fence as Mrs. Pete is combing her hair, and Pete resents this. After many threats and much shooting, the men finally come together, and to the surprise of the people, sit down and have a drink together.

HIS CROOKED CAREER

Split Reel, June 26

Pressed by poverty, Schmalz decides to adopt a career of crime. He gets the worst of everything he tackles. This is a laughable burlesque.

THE LARGEST BOAT EVER LAUNCHED SIDEWAYS

On the Same Reel

During the launching of a large boat a dude flirts with a girl and makes her believe the ship belongs to him. He is proven to be a "four-flusher" and driven away in derision. Splendid scenes of a large boat being launched are shown.

A Living, Breathing, Photographic Review of the Greatest Battle of the Spanish-American War

If you had stood with Admiral Dewey in the turret of his flagship you could not have been more awe-inspired by the heroic work of Uncle Sam's brave sailors and the havoc wrought during that famous cannonading.

Staged and directed by a man who was there.

Cheer after cheer will re-echo throughout your house as this wonderful war spectacle is projected.

Big array of monstrous battleships in action—hundreds of marines, soldiers and sailors and Philipinos engaged in a terrific encounter with the Spanish Army.

Posters and heralds that will fire your patrons with patriotism and simply drag them in.

Scene from "The Tiger Lily"

Released on Wednesday, July 2

"THE TIGER LILY"

An animal picture with a real, gripping story behind it—the story of a woman torn by jealousy who sends a tiger to destroy the girl she hates, little knowing that the girl is her own daughter. A storm, a flash of lightning, a villa set afire and in it the fast-coming events that bring the destruction of the Tiger Lily herself.

It's all that you hoped they would do some day with a wild animal theme. The Vitagraph actors present it in three reels.

Scene from "The Trapper's Mistake"

Four Multiples Reel Excellence of

These are the features that indicate the uniform superiority of our service. But their extreme merit must not make you forget that more than forty single reel films are released by us every week—made from stories just as vivid and strong and gripping, but restricted to a single reel because when a story can be quickly told, we tell it quickly.

Released, Saturday, June 28

"THE TRAPPER'S MISTAKE"

The trapper's wife forgot to tear up the note that said she was going away. So when the Redskins caught her and carried her off, the trapper naturally thought she had run away with his best friend. How the three meet in the thick of a fight with the Indians, how the two men confront each other and the woman explains—that's the skeleton of this crackerjack frontier photoplay by Pathe Freres. It's in two reels.

"THE PENALTY OF CRIME"

All the appeal of the crook play, now at the crest of popularity, is in this ingeniously conceived story. The girl who is sent to fascinate the rich young jeweler is so successful that he falls in love with her. She falls in love too and wants to break off with the underworld—but her pals won't let her. A baggage car robbery, a motor car chased and plunged over an embankment—these are some of the quick events that follow. The Lubin Company players appear in this gripping story in two reels.

"SHENANDOAH"

Uncle Sam's birthday is a mighty appropriate release date for the best battle play ever written about the Civil War.

You can't beat the patriotic appeal of those scenes where the Federals are wavering, where Gen. Phil Sheridan gallops in from "twenty miles away," rallies the scattering forces and snatches a victory out of the fire. It's a Kalem in three reels.

Improvements over all previous models are as follows:

All metal baseboards.

Extra heavy mitre gears on Revolving Shutter, Cam and Automatic Shutter Shafts.

Heavier Balance Wheel.

Hardened Steel Runners, instead of tension springs, actuated by pivotally mounted springs, giving tension equally on both sides of the film.

Aperture Plate (Picture Gauge) provided with steel runners, which can be replaced. No wear on the plate itself.

Swivel tension roller bracket on the Take-up Sprocket, preventing the film from jumping off the sprocket.

Oiling system consisting of a series of tubes for the Outside Shutter Gears.

Extra Large Lamp House and Heavy Arc Lamp permitting the use of a 12" upper and a 6" lower carbon, ¾" in diameter.

60 Ampere Switch. New large switch box.

Five adjustable extension legs, the lower half of which are solid steel rods, giving greater rigidity. Floor sockets are also supplied.

Facts and Comments

IT used to be the proper thing for the big newspapers to deplore the existence of the "cheap moving picture show" in their respective cities, as though their presence was something to be ashamed of. Now we find those same newspapers boasting of the number of picture shows they have in their towns. The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, in an editorial half a column long, tells those who contemplate visiting that city that "we have picture shows, too." It insists that no matter what the people of Toledo and Syracuse may be used to at home in that line, they are assured that Rochester has picture shows, and many of them.

Possibly there is a reason for this change of front by the big newspapers. Picture theaters are not what they used to be. Instead of the dark and not infrequently ill-smelling store show, there is to be found in every city beautiful theaters devoted to the exhibition of motion pictures. Rochester is no exception in this respect, in fact, one must go to cities like Rochester to find the highest average improvement in the picture theater. There are a few examples of the best in picture theater architecture in New York, but the average is low and there are many so-called theaters in the few largest cities that might better be eliminated. The "store show" is like a red rag to the reformer, affording him material for many a crusade that hurts picture exhibition in general. We all want picture theaters and many of them, but they should be of the best type.

DURING the past week the staff of the Moving Picture World has been greatly entertained by a number of "boosters" for the National Convention and Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which is to be held in July. We have had this event dinned into our ears from all sides until we find it difficult to think except in terms of "convention and exposition." Of course, we are trying to pass the all pervading idea along with the purpose that all members of the trade will be prevailed upon to attend these important events. There is nothing like getting together and exchanging ideas, for out of trade conferences comes a better understanding of the relations between the different branches of that trade. Already the Exhibitors' League has accomplished much in the way of betterment for the business of exhibiting motion pictures, and there is good reason to believe that greater benefits will yet accrue through its efforts. Our advice to exhibitors, manufacturers and exchange men is to attend the big convention in New York in July and get acquainted; it will oil the wheels of commerce.

THERE is a temporary lull in the agitation in New York City for an ordinance that will provide suitable regulation for the motion picture theater. When the matter was last brought to the attention of Mayor Gaynor he denounced certain members of the Board of Aldermen for attempting to prevent the adoption of proper regulations for picture theaters because they were interested in other forms of amusement that might be affected by the pictures. Some one has suggested that the question might be a suitable one to present to the grand jury, as that course was successfully adopted when the taxicab ordinance was being urged. Another ordinance has been proposed and it is to be hoped that it will pass. Picture theaters in New York might become something better than store shows under proper conditions.

WHILE the greater part of the visible product of the motion picture manufacturer is included in releases of the various trade organizations under the general designations "licensed" and "independent," there seems to be a steadily increasing output of pictures made by concerns not included in the combinations mentioned. This product consists of pictures of local events in scores of cities; pictures made at the instance of boards of trade or chambers of commence of cities here and there throughout the country. How great the volume of this business is cannot be estimated, but it is sure to form a considerable percentage of the total film product eventually. Just what use this product can be put to besides its immediate purpose of "boosting" the several towns thus exploited is not clear, but if it is made with careful attention to the details of manufacture it should be valuable to teach the people in every part of the country what those in the parts pictured are doing. Something in the line of education, you know.

Following the example of the Kaiser and King Alphonso, King George has given orders for a picture theater to be fitted up in Buckingham Palace. It is not generally known that the King is particularly fond of seeing moving pictures, but the latter move is being taken in the interests of the royal children, who have not yet visited a kinema.

We Are Discovered

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

ENTER Tank Drama, the pirate who organized a band of extortionate villains for the purpose of controlling all the first-class theaters in the country. He has found out that there is money to be made in moving pictures, a highly creditable discovery on his part in view of previous underestimation, and one which was reached after long investigation of the subject. The marvelous sagacity, the high artistic sensibility, the refinement of taste, the practical knowledge of stagecraft which produced all that was cheap and vulgar in theatrical presentation and so disgusted American people that they flocked by tens of millions to the moving picture shows—note the beneficent influence of greed—is to invade the New Art as a good business proposition.

The entire enlightened world is now interested in the development of what was once thought to be a divine gift and a rare one at that, which may still be a divine gift though common to all classes, this or that superior aptitude which has been repressed by crushing forces of inappropriate environment, what is generally understood to be native genius. The whole drift of public interest is towards the fascinating idea which has replaced that of animal breeding, the cultivation of men and women for great fields of achievement, that they may advance the material, mental and moral progress of the world.

Tank Drama could not see anything in it for him. The actor of ability meant merely an actor of utility for pecuniary returns; the native playwright, no matter how competent, was not to be encouraged when foreign works already tested could be had for a low price; the thoughts, tastes and emotions of a progressive public at home were given consideration secondary to the character of more conservative civilizations abroad. There was no question of what our people wanted, but what Tank Drama would let them have, and much that was presented merely reflected his own limited capacity or doubtful taste.

Tank Drama, Goliath of theatrical philistines, secured absolute control of American theaters and reserved the favorite houses and routes for what never rose above sordid standards. No matter how capable the actor, how competent the dramatist, if he dared assert the liberty of opinion so highly valued by our forefathers, his good name was blackened and his works discredited by insidious processes that lowered the profession and brought on a decay of public interest in the noble art itself. Bold men of the press used slings of sarcasm, irony and ridicule in vain. It remained for little David Movie to hit the voracious giant bang in the eye. Very naturally he would like to lay hands on David. Will he succeed? and?

Listen to what was said of moving pictures a short time ago by men who ought to have known better but did not. "The moving picture, as an amusement, lacks the human element. It can never be art. Nickleodeon audiences are casual groups: they are not held together by any effective bond of common interest or large idea. The moving picture business needs intelligent guiding; that is its one hope. Otherwise, it becomes a menace, socially, morally and ethically." Morally and ethically! ! "The nickleodeon without an idea behind it is a menace to the neighborhood. Should you visit several of them you would find a certain monotony, which is one of the insurmountable facts about moving pictures—the monotony of mechanical interpretation."

The man who wrote that was no fool—he was misguided. It may not have occured to him that the character of entertainment offered by Tank Drama was directly responsible for the worst ever shown on the screen. Far wiser was Jane Addams. She says, while speaking of the moving picture theater: "It affords thousands the only chance they have of entering the realms of mystery and romance, the only place where they can satisfy that craving for a conception of life higher than that which the actual world offers them. Hundreds of young people attend these five-cent theaters every evening in the week, and what is seen and heard there becomes the sole topic of conversation, forming the ground pattern of their social life. That mutual understanding which in another circle is provided by books, travel and all the arts, is here compressed into topics suggested by the play."

Can the production of moving pictures be called an art? One definition of the word is "a branch of learning regarded as an instrument of thought." Jane Addams so acknowledges them to be. Another definition, applied more particularly to fine art, is "the exhibition of the power of perceiving the beautiful and of expressing it in artistic forms; the actual production or construction of objects beautiful in form, color or sound." The making and showing of moving pictures seems to constitute what I have taken the liberty of terming the "New Art." It provides the information ordinarily given by books and travel, and the entire trend of superior productions is towards expressing what is beautiful in artistic forms.

Has not this New Art done more in its period of early evolution to satisfy human craving "for a conception of life higher than that which the actual world offers" than Tank Drama in all his years of theatrical despotism? Is he coming into the game for what there is in it, or for the purpose of improving on what has already been done? I am not asking these questions with apprehension about the strength of present forces at work. In spite of our tremendous growth in population and wealth, the patronage at large theaters has sunk to a discreditable level. Our people have outgrown the salacious standards of imported drama, and leading producers of moving pictures are so steadily rising to the insistent demand for quality of artistic performance that they are beyond the financial and mental reach of Tank Drama.

One can only feel a quiet sense of amusement over the recent change of attitude on the part of Philistines who affected to treat the New Art with contempt, who have so long belittled the best ideals of the old art, who have made progress in it next to impossible, who have driven capable actors and dramatists to other fields of activity, who have debauched and degraded their own business, seeking refuge in the camps of their most active and intelligent competitors. Such a confession of weakness, instead of indicating that a blight upon the New Art is to be expected, suggests dawning opportunity for the stage.

The stage must grow dull without great actors, and great acting can never exercise any material influence upon intelligent people unless great roles are created in plays by master minds. We are simply looking on at the downfall of Tank Drama's methods. Nobody will care a rap so long as the producers of moving pictures continue to follow the intellectual drift of the age with strong and truthful dramas of contemporaneous life.

Jottings From a Motion Picture Notebook

By W. Stephen Bush.

Rome, June 1st, 1913.

BEFORE leaving Rome I did as most Americans do when in the Eternal City, whether on a special errand or on general principles—I visited Monsignor Kennedy, the rector of the American College. He is an easy man to see and hedged about with no ceremony.

"Well," said he after the usual courtesies, "you want me to arrange an interview with the Pope?"

Utterly ignoring the Celtic twinkle in his eye I told the Monsignor that the readers of the Moving Picture World would indeed be greatly interested to know what the Pope thinks about Kinematography.

"Well," said the Monsignor with a sudden assumption of dignity and seriousness, "I cannot speak for His Holiness in this matter. I don't see how we could find out just at this moment. You know at the present moment the Holy Father receives nobody but Cardinals and foreign bishops. I will tell you this, however: Cardinal Merry del Val is the greatest moving picture enthusiast in Rome. He has a class of boys, in whom he is very much interested, and every Sunday they are treated to moving pictures. Now last Sunday they saw the Panama Canal and the Sunday before that they saw some other fine pictures in colors. We were all perfectly delighted. Yes, I saw the pictures, too, and I think I enjoyed them as much as any of the boys. Now I am not the spokesman of the Cardinal, but I will say he thinks very highly of moving pictures."

The Monsignor paused here for a moment and then went on in his lively way:

"Do you know I think the right sort of motion pictures will be the greatest educational force of the future? Now mind what I say! the right sort. I would not be allowed to see any of the moving picture shows in Rome; they say they are awful. Put me down as the earnest advocate of the good picture. Why, the young men in the college went to see "Quo Vadis?" the other day and they came back perfectly delighted."

It was my pleasant duty to tell the Monsignor that the American producers furnished the greater part of the world's film supply and that they aimed to produce clean films and to elevate the moral standard of the Kinematograph.

"Now," I continued, "if we could only have some official declaration from some unquestioned high authority it would be help to all who work for the advancement of the industry."

The Monsignor smiled.

"Well," said he, "you ought to know that we are too sophisticated in Rome for anything like that. It would be like crossing a bridge before getting anywhere near the river. You may, however, say for me in an informal way that the church surely approves of good pictures. As I said to you before, the motion picture, when rightly used, is a new educator of wonderful force. I am a friend of moving picture men. When they come to me for help in getting pictures of the Pope or of the Vatican, I always do my best for them. There is a cameraman here now who wants me to get the Holy Father's consent for a series of motion pictures but, in the Pope's present state of health, I can do nothing for him."

The good humor and the gracious manners of the Monsignor have made him one of the most popular men in Rome. He is a "friend at court" for the motion picture and I hope will be enrolled on the list of honorary subscribers to the Moving Picture World.

When the Monsignor said the shows in Rome were bad, he put it mildly. I have shot under the mark in saying that the Italian taste favored the cheap melodrama. Since then I have in obedience to stern duty visited a number of moving picture theaters in Rome and in Naples. At first I tried to keep track of the men and women murdered in the films, but as a rule I had to give up at the end of the first five hundred feet. Men stabbed each other and themselves; women poisoned men; the knife, the razor, the hatchet and the gun were never at rest. In one melodrama a man was tied to a wheel and drowned, in another a man and a woman were thrown over a precipice by the villain, who crossed himself after viewing the remains. That was the end of the story. Nor is this the worst. If at any time since the invention of Kinematography there has been a case of a happy marriage in Italy it has entirely escaped the attention of the Italian film producers. In the Italian films no man ever settles down and marries. On the contrary, he is bent on making trouble for trusting heroines. Happily the heroines as a rule are strong and stout ladies, who indeed "carry on terribly" when they find out how mean a hero can be, but who it may confidently be expected feel quite contented over a glass of Frascati and strawberries after the mimic agony before the camera is over.

This is indeed a strange world and we must keep on guessing to the end of the chapter. With the exception of the Vatican museum and library, there is probably no greater and more magnificent storehouse of ancient and medieval art than the Church of St. John of Lateran. Now within a stone's throw of this wonderful repository of man's best creations there are four small motion picture theaters in which the vilest trash imaginable is offered to the patrons. To an even greater extent than with us, the audiences here consist of women and children. More than a hundred seats are occupied by half grown boys, who break out into a perfect storm of yells and cat-calls whenever the film breaks or the picture is interrupted for any reason. The language used by these boys, ranging in ages from 10 to 15 years, beggars description. It may well be believed that under these circumstances there is mighty little demand for educational pictures. In three out of five theaters they would be howled and hissed down by the young "roughs" who practically own the theater while the performance is going on. A feeble attempt was made to have educational programs in certain theaters on certain days in Naples, but there was no response whatever from the public. This is all the more deplorable, because nowhere in Europe is education needed more than in Italy, especially in Rome and Naples and all through the south of the country. This state of affairs has attracted the attention of the Italian government, and the Parliament at Rome will be asked to deal with the matter. It is proposed among other things to impose a tax of 10 centesimi a meter on all films and to tax the tickets of admission. One might ask how this is going to remedy things. The tax alone would, of course, have no effect whatever on the morale of the films, but it is also proposed to exempt from this taxation all educational films and all theaters where pictures of an educational character are shown.

The many exhibitors on our side of the water who take a laudable pride in their picture and who study how to get the best results by giving the picture the proper size would surely be benefited by a view of the great paintings in the Vatican Library. I refer now especially to the mural paintings, but I wish to include the more modern pictures in frames also. It is quite possible to select a size fairly suitable for all kinds of pictures. Of course, the size of the theater and its architectural conditions vary greatly, but on the basis of careful observations made in the Vatican library I should say that 12 by 8 is an effective size. I think, however, that the character of the subject and the size of the picture are intimately related. Pictures showing large groups of people in action, scenes of battle, mobs, processions, etc., appear to much better advantage on a larger screen. Where the subject is purely dramatic and the action is carried on by but two or three people a smaller screen would seem to be indicated, while scenic pictures would probably occupy a middle ground between the purely dramatic and the spectacular. It is an interesting subject and I do not believe that the possibilities of varying the size of the picture with its character have ever been put into practice.

THE EVILS OF CENSORSHIP.

As an evidence of what trouble censorship can put motion picture men to, here is an illustration. A group of exhibitors and exchange men from various parts of British Columbia standing upon the steps of the capital building, whence they had come to protest against the present price of $1 per 1,000 feet, charged by the censor. They also wanted the censor to be responsible for the films while in his possession; and they also took up the matter of children not being admitted to theaters after 7 p. m. when the curfew allows them on the streets until 9. The Attorney-General of the Province slipped over a professional opinion that "personally" he would much prefer to see the children on the streets. The dignified officials condescended to "take the matter under consideration."

The following members of the Columbia Exhibitors' Association were present:

Vancouver—W. T. Dewees, Chas. Schuberg, A. Corriveau, W. Hansher, J. R. Muir, M. McIntyre. New Westminster—F. Kerr. Mission Junction—Mr. Bannister. Victoria—J. Christie, H. McIntyre.

The following exchange men were present to help in the good work: Mr. Taube, manager Canadian Film Exchange; Mr. Meagher, manager General Film Co.; Mr. Holdsworth, manager Mutual Film Service; W. E. Morphy, manager Pacific Film Exchange. For harrowing details see page 1365.

FLEW THE COOP.

Mr. O. Scheibener, of 2573 North Clark Street, Chicago, writes that H. H. Lenard, a lecturer employed by him, has disappeared with slides and printed copies of a lecture, entitled "The Bombardment in Mexico City," which Mr. Scheibener says he can prove is his property. Lenard is also accused of misappropriating funds of several theaters where he appeared. He is described as being stockily built, 5½ feet tall, iron gray hair and mustache, heavy eyebrows, squint eyes, persuasive manner, little finger of left hand missing, about 45 years old. Mr. Scheibener has reason to believe that this man is working his way toward New York, lecturing in small towns on the way. Exhibitors encountering him are requested to communicate with Mr. Scheibener.

Are You Ready for the Exposition?

Every Exhibitor Who Can Beg, Borrow or Steal the Money Should be in New York on July 7.

By Hugh Hoffman.

THE day is close at hand for the opening of the greatest demonstration that the motion picture industry has ever had. By every token of popular fancy, the first International Exposition of the Motion Picture Arts, to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, July 7 to 12, should prove to be the most popular trade exposition ever held. The motion picture business is a quasi-public enterprise by nature. There is more about it to interest the layman that could be found in any other trade that could be mentioned. Its appeal is universal, and the most disinterested, or even the most antagonistic, visitor to such an exposition will find something there to interest him.

The question now, Mr. Motion Picture Man, is: Are you ready for this great exposition? If you are a manufacturer of anything pertaining to the trade, have you made your arrangements to be represented at this comprehensive display? If you are an exhibitor, have you made your plans to be there? The time is short and whatever is done must be done without delay. Those who are inclined to put things off until the last moment are hereby notified that it is time to wake up and get a move on. No manufacturer can justly complain of a poor location if he waits until every other manufacturer has made his choice. No exhibitor should complain if hotel accommodations are not reserved for him, if he vacillates until the last moment before giving notice. (See page 1373 for Hotel Committee.)

A trip to New York is something that every American owes himself. From a business standpoint it gives a better perspective of our national importance. In a social way it is an advantage to have seen the most wonderful city in the world. The memories of such a visit are the kind that linger for years and provide topics of conversational interest, which are really worth all they cost. A trip to New York is an investment, when one considers the amount of education and the inexhaustible fund of interesting information that the visitor carries home with him. It is more beneficial than a year at school, and far more pleasant. Therefore, it behooves every Western exhibitor, especially at this time, to make himself and his frau a present of a trip to New York. For the motion picture man this is the psychological moment to buy the railroad ticket and tell the "old girl" that you are both going on your second honeymoon, so long postponed. You know, two weeks' notice isn't much for a woman. If you don't let her know, you are liable to have her tell you at the last minute, that she hasn't a thing to wear. Then you'll have to bring her in a barrel.

The moving picture man from out of town will find that his visit to this convention is not going to cost half as much as though it were made at any other time. A hundred or more big sight-seeing excursions have been prepared for him free of all cost. Theaters will be open to him; hotel rates have been made for him; free lunch and banquets will stare him in the face every day. The large manufacturers are going to show the exhibitor that they realize he is the backbone of the business. The New York exhibitors are going to show the visiting exhibitors that they are all friends and brothers in a great cause. The visiting exhibitor will meet old friends and find new ones. Moving pictures will be in the air, in the newspapers, on the billboards, and the moving picture man will own the town.

But this is not all. The exhibitor will have a chance to see at first hand what a really powerful institution the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is getting to be. He will find that the real exhibitors of America are a fine body of intelligent men who are determined to put their business on a sound commercial basis and ask no odds of anyone. Rome wasn't built in a day, and in like manner the Exhibitors' League has yet much building before it, but great strides have been made. So to you, Mr. Exhibitor, out on the firing line, we say: Come to New York and you will return home with a heart full of fresh hope and courage that will be worth more than the price of the journey.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO. ANNOUNCEMENT.

In future a two-reel feature of more than usual merit will be issued every other Monday. With these releases will be marketed one, three and six sheet posters. Also single-page heralds or dodgers.

"Shenandoah" (Kalem)

By George Blaisdell.

HERE is a real Fourth of July release. It is in three parts, although it well might have been four, as when this fine adaptation from Bronson Howard's famous war drama was assembled it made 4,400 feet. It was reduced, judiciously and not ruthlessly, to 3,000. Kenean Buell, who produced the picture, went to the Shenandoah Valley among other places for his settings and battle locations. The greatest pains have been taken to make the screen square with history—that is, of course, aside from the romance, of which there is here aplenty. In fact, there are several distinctly defined channels through which it runs. For it we have reason to be thankful. It is probably saying nothing new to suggest that directors of spectacular battle pictures are prone to depend for putting over their productions not on heart interest, but on spectacle; and the latter as a spectacle cannot firmly hold an assemblage of thoughtful persons for much more than 500 feet unless unusual skill is manifest in the direction. Here we have both essentials. For this, of course, we are indebted to the dramatist of power and quality who conceived the plot. If there is one criticism the writer cared to offer it would be the size of the cast, which will make difficulty for some in clearly following the story. However, this is a point where the stage and the screen are not on even terms; furthermore, a shorter cast would not be the well-known "Shenandoah."

As to the spectacular side of this picture it is necessary to begin with the first scene—a great Southern mansion; there is in progress a ball. At 3:30 in the morning begins the bombardment of Fort Sumter. Through the great windows you see in the darkness the distant flashes of big guns. A little later we see across the water a mile or more away historic Fort Sumter. It is sunrise. A faint puff of smoke shows. For the moment one feels it is the morning of the battle—the day that was fired "the shot that was heard around the world." Later it occurs to mind that it is the orthodox sunrise gun of an army post. The first part concludes with a night attack and defense between land forces, which is a marvel of effective photography. Tinted red, the flashes of the guns against a background of absolute blackness make a scene to be remembered. There is a sensational escape of prisoners by way of a tunnel under the walls, emerging through the turf. One of the prettiest pictures is of a Confederate wigwag station on a mountain, the city of tents being just discernible in the flat mist-veiled valley far below.

The battle preceding the beginning of Sheridan's ride is finely worked out. There is a variety to the scenes that gives a freshness to them and nullifies any possibility of monotony. In one view a battery of six Parrot guns is busily engaged. Hundreds of men are spread over the fields. When the route of the Federals begins we see them throwing away muskets in the effort to remove every impediment to rapid progress. The historic ride of Sheridan is shown at the start, at "fifteen miles away," at ten miles, at five miles and then in the center of the stragglers, rallying them and urging them to turn back. "Bob" Vignola is a splendid Sheridan and upholds the reputation as a horseman of the famous cavalry commander. The spirited animal under him spins, toplike, and maneuvers among the soldiers with speedy accuracy. The portrayal of "Little Phil" is one of the features of the picture.

The story itself, as previously intimated, has many ramifications. There are General Haverhill and his second wife, the latter of whom through an unfortunate chain of incidents beginning with an insult offered her by Edward Thornton, subsequently in the Confederate secret service, and her fear to tell her husband the truth, aroused in the breast of the latter the fear that there had been committed something more serious than an indiscretion; the ostracized son of the general, and a wife and baby; Kercbival West and his sister, Madeline, in love with Gertrude Illingham and her brother, Robert, and several others.

If there are thrills throughout the picture, for many there will be a tear at the end, when General Haverhill, officer in Sheridan's cavalry, comes to Washington, and meeting the wife of his outcast son, learns that the lieutenant he had sent on a fatal mission was none other than his own boy. The sorrow of the general is mitigated by the knowledge that the memory of a youthful peccadillo has been blotted out by blood bravely shed. In the room at the time stands his own wife, whom he had wronged when he believed he was right; on his knees he asks forgiveness. Henry Hallam as General Haverhill is as appealing in the last scenes in the home as he was soldierly in the field. Alice Hollister is good as the wife. Hal Clements in the unpopular role of Captain Thornton stands out. The remainder of the long and excellent cast is intrusted to the best players of the combined Kalem companies playing in the South.

Just a word as to two men who do not appear on the screen, but whose work shows in every scene—Mr. Buell, the director, and George Hollister, the photographer. Both are entitled to praise—the one for his skill in arranging and executing details, the other for his marvelous camera work.

"Beauty and the Beast" (Rex)

By George Blaisdell.

WHEN within a few feet of where you are sitting watching a screen presentation there is being enacted a stern drama of life—a battle for the possession of control of a great film company, flashes of which at times are visible through an open door—it is hardly fair to a director to attempt an estimate of his production. Such was the predicament of this reviewer when following the splendid adaptation of the old fairy story of "Beauty and the Beast," which H. C. Matthews has made for the Rex Company. The three reels had not yet been to the factory for the finishing touches—all were in black and white; but it is not difficult to imagine the added charm of viewing this picture when the titles are inserted and there is given to many of the scenes a judicious tinting. While the photography of the interiors is not at all times what it might be, this cannot be said of the exteriors. In the latter it is uniformly excellent—sharp, clear. The settings are chosen with care and discrimination; the artificial are noteworthy for attention to details so essential to a costume or period picture; the natural, the outdoor, are selected with an eye for artistic effect.

Scene from "Beauty and the Beast" (Rex).

There are many fine scenes. One of the best is the opening, showing a street. There is a lively sword fight. The denunciation later by the witch of the prince, where the latter is transformed into the beast and all the court followers scatter in panic through the pillared corridors, is strong dramatically. Another scene, as novel as it is interesting, is where Beauty, gone to the palace to take upon herself the penalty imposed by the Beast upon her father as a punishment for taking a rose from the palace gardens, looks in the placid, dark waters of the marble-rimmed pool and sees the vision of her father ill at home. It is a striking conception. The final picture, the arrival of Beauty transformed into a princess and the Beast reverted to the prince, is full of charm. The court is drawn up in front of the palace. In the background are stately rows of heavily foliaged trees and behind them a range of mountains.

Elsie Albert, who portrays Beauty, seems peculiarly adapted to these pretentious fairy productions. She does excellent work in this picture, especially in the scenes immediately following her detention by the Beast; for instance, where she sits disconsolate at the feast prepared by her captor—her countenance revealing as it tries to conceal her fear. That "The Beauty and the Beast" is an expensive production is apparent. Likewise is it apparent that the money has been expended.

"The Jealousy of Jane" (Imp)

By George Blaisdell.

IN this single-reel comedy, which was released June 16, Jane Gail gives a delightful portrayal of the wife away in the country, whose jealousy of her husband is aroused by a note from her very kind next-door neighbor. We see the circumstances under which the husband begins his first day of loneliness—his efforts to cook his breakfast. In strong contrast to his harrowing experiences is the picture of the wife and baby propped up in bed gayly partaking of good things. The baby literally tries to stand on his head; the father figuratively is doing so. The husband goes in search of a cook. The neighbor sees him escorting a veiled woman into his home. Of course she does not know the female is of color; she sends word that "while you are away your husband is entertaining a woman in your house." The wife is shortly back in town with fire in her eye. It is evening. She goes home and enters, quietly, leaving the baby in the machine in care of the driver. One of the first objects her eyes light on is a veil. She picks it up; also she picks up a knife. The husband hears a strange sound. He takes out his revolver. The cook, preparing to retire, is overheard by the wife. Instantly she goes to the door and demands admittance. No answer being returned, an assault on the door is made and soon the knife shows through. The cook climbs onto the fire-escape as the wife opens the door and locks it. The husband comes to the door and through the break inserts his pistol. He begins firing. The wife is behind the dresser. The chauffeur, hearing the firing, hides in the icebox. The baby is amusing himself with a toy pistol in the machine. A policeman hearing the disturbance sends in a call for the wagon. The husband, coming downstairs, sees the cover of the icebox move and reloads and blazes away again. The wife runs to the window and, coming in contact with a frightened black face, turns only to be grabbed by a determined policeman. Downstairs go the three, where the policeman adds to his "bag" the husband and driver. At the station house the man on the desk finally straightens things out, when the wife remembers there is also a baby. A wild rush is started back home, where the little one is found. By the way, Jane Gail has a method of carrying a youngster that is as unusual as it is convenient. There is an amusing scene before explanations are made to the satisfaction of all.

"The Trap"

Two-Reel Vitagraph.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WILLIAM HUMPHREY has put over another drama of contemporaneous life with delightful ensembles, strong cast and an effective sense of beauty. He is helping to make the production of moving pictures a veritable art. His own personality as an actor has contributed not a little. He is getting rid of his theatrical artificiality without losing the benefits of his experience on the stage. Edith Storey is achieving a spirituality that was lacking in her early performances. Lytton, Lincoln and Northrup provide a strong background in roles that lack individual opportunity. I am one who believes in the influence of the actor on the audience—he is the interpreter—but he must have something to interpret.

It may possibly be seen that all I have been saying these three years on characterization has in it something vital to the success of moving pictures in a very large way. A man who is a veritable playwright keeps the actor always in mind. What one conceives the other must make known to the public, but there must be enough in the conception, enough character, to stimulate the actor and supply some vent for his gifts of personality. When he is at his best the audience is most interested. Lincoln's role in this screen story is inane; that of Northrup does not show conscience until after intense greed is put forward as a dominant characteristic, and absolutely no marked trait is ascribed to that of Lytton. All three of these men are up against trying to look and act something that is not there.

Take, for instance, the part of Bank President, or that of any business leader who is supposed to have the power of judging what is best in commercial ends to be pursued, or in means for attaining those ends. He is in real life very much like those at the head of the Vitagraph Company in knowledge of men and affairs gained by experience. On the screen he is a dummy. He does his most important business in a room easily accessible to servants and callers, compromises himself and his associates on paper and exhibits one or another form of carelessness in handling that document that is out of all accord with his training and habits. Then, when suspicion is directed to the butler, it would be more like the Lytton type of banker to throttle the servant and force him to make an attempt to recover the stolen papers.

It is a fine idea to have the difficulty solved by a splendid young American girl, but situations are forced in order to make it easy for her, when higher interest would be aroused by a more difficult course. I expected one of her forearm to go to the villain's room and knock the stuffing out of him, even if she did not rip open his wall safe—she might have choked the combination out of him. I am not asking for mere action, but for action that indicates strong character. There is no need of brutal extravagance, but the personality of the banker and his spirited daughter, especially that of the types selected to portray these parts, indicates to those in front greater energy of conduct than that shown on the screen.

The screen is destined to reproduce in dramatic story larger and deeper phases of human nature than the stage has ever done. It can interestingly portray the influences of heredity and environment and those circumstances which formulate character. "The Trap" is along the right lines, and there is a vast amount of art shown in its production, but I look for improvement from Humphrey in treatment and choice of theme.

ESSANAY'S NEW STUDIO.

Charles R. Holmes, writing from San Francisco under date of June 11, says:

On Monday, June 16, the new $50,000 plant of the Essanay company at Niles, Cal., will be put into commission, a ball marking the completion of the project.

In the year since the Anderson section moved to Niles Canon, the Western home of Essanay has been a barn with an open air stage, Mr. Anderson's private office being a tent beside the entrance. Under these adverse conditions production has been speeded up until the average production has run between two and three thousand feet of negative a week.

The new structure is a steel shell, with brick facing, and has an indoor stage 50 x 50, ten dressing rooms, a carpenter shop, proof room, property room, paint bridge, and wardrobe room. There will also be a fireproof concrete developing room and a film vault. An outdoor stage 60 x 75 feet will enable two companies to work at once on interiors, with plenty of room for other settings.

Close at hand is a commodious stable for the riding stock and four additional bungalows have been built, bringing the Essanay village up to ten houses in addition to the film buildings. Tennis courts have been laid out, the baseball diamond has been leveled and improved and from a camp the Niles establishment has become a small city.

Niles, as a town, will celebrate the Fourth of July with broncho busting, bull riding and similar diversions under the management of Bill Cato, chief of the Essanay cowboy staff. It was found that none of the nearby larger towns had planned any celebration and the citizens broached the matter to G. M. Anderson, who threw himself into the breach with characteristic enthusiasm. As a wind up to the festivities there will be a realistic stage coach robbery that will be participated in by all the contestants with an old-time Concord coach as the object of attack. This will be filmed by the Essanay cameramen and will subsequently be shown in a release. In the evening the studio will be thrown open and two bands will provide dance music for the indoor and outdoor stages, which together will accommodate 500 persons without crowding.

A number of new people have been added to the Niles company and the production increased. It will be welcome news to his many admirers that Mr. Anderson will soon alternate between Western and the more ambitious productions made possible by the increased facilities.

Miss Bessie Sankey has left the company and Miss Evelyn Selbie is playing the leads not only for Mr. Anderson, but the other sections of the company. She is working tremendously hard, though the releases show no abatement in the force or finish of her work.

"Quicksands" (American)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"QUICKSANDS," a two-reel subject by the American, will be released June 30. The title is symbolical, and is used to convey an impression of the treacherous footing of young men who have betrayed the trust reposed in them. In this case, one of the young men at least suffers for his violation of the law, and learns to make atonement in a way that makes a strong appeal to the best that is in all of us. The other criminal, so far as the story reveals, escapes the outward consequences of his act; but sufficient is shown in the pictures to convince one that punishment will be meted out to him in a way that is hard to bear. The woman he loves, and whom he afterwards marries, is aware of his guilt. It requires a stretching of the imagination to conceive how the woman could have married him under the circumstances.

The American's No. 1 company has been employed in the production, and the members can be complimented on their skillful impersonations of the characters. Warren Kerrigan, Miss Charlotte Burton and Miss Vivian Rich appear in the leading parts, and Jack Richardson and George Periolat take the principal character roles. There is quite a number of fine exterior scenes, among them several marine views of striking attractiveness.

Frank Wilson (Warren Kerrigan) loves Helen Hubbard (Charlotte Burton), and lives beyond his means to buy her costly presents. He is a trusted clerk in the office of Helen's father (Geo. Periolat). His own father is in danger of disgrace, owing to financial troubles. In the hope of assisting him, Frank embezzles money from his employer and loses it on the stock market.

Unable to face the exposure of his crime, Frank flees the country. He secures work as a supernumerary on a schooner bound for the South Pacific. During the voyage, the sailors mutiny. Frank sides with the captain, and both men are cast adrift in mid-ocean, in a small boat, with scanty provisions. After many perils and hardships, their small craft is washed ashore on an island, in the southern seas. The captain dies as they reach land, but Frank is succored and nursed back to health by a good missionary and his daughter, Ruth (Vivian Rich). Ruth is a beautiful girl of tender heart and lofty ideals. She learns to love Frank and he returns her love with affectionate regard. His heart is still in the keeping of Helen Hubbard, away back home, and he longs for a sight of her and for redemption from his sin.

In the meantime, Helen, learning of Frank's disgrace, sells all the presents given her by him and pays back to her father the money stolen. A new clerk, Warren Seymour (Jack Richardson), takes the place of Frank, and Helen shows him marked favor. This in time ripens into love, and they are betrothed with the sanction of her father.

After a year on the island, Frank has an intense longing for home. He has accumulated a small fortune in pearls, and takes passage in a steamer that chances to call at the island. Ruth is distracted at his departure, but is resigned that he should return to his people.

On his arrival home, Frank learns of Helen's new attachment and, on confronting her, finds that he no longer holds a place in her heart. One night, while lingering near the old office, the scene of his crime, he sees a man entering it stealthily. Believing him to be a burglar, Frank follows and discovers Warren Seymour robbing the safe, in the hope of covering up a former defalcation. For Helen's sake, he determines to take the blame himself and save his rival. He thrusts sufficient money into the hands of Warren to cover the deficit in the strong box, and sends in a telephone call to police headquarters and another to Helen's father. When they arrive, Warren is covering Frank with a revolver, as if he were the guilty one. Helen looks at both men and immediately guesses the truth. Her father denounces Frank for this second offense, and is about to deliver him into the custody of the officers when Helen pleads for his pardon. This she obtains, and bids him farewell.

Frank is now seized with a strange longing for the island in the tropics. The figure of Ruth, as she bade him good-bye, is vividly outlined in his imagination, and he obeys the call of his heart and returns to her.

WHO SAYS THIRTEEN IS UNLUCKY?

"Not I," says T. J. West, the well-known head of "West's Pictures," who recently passed through New York on his way from London to Australia. The success of his enterprises would justify his belief to the contrary if the following list of "13" counts for anything. Their address in London is 58 Dean Street, and 5 and 8 added give 13. The phone number is 94 Gerrard, and again the total of 9 and 4 is 13. Their address in Sydney is 337 Pitt Street and the three figures here again give a total of 13. Mr. West first sailed for Australia on the thirteenth of the month and on one of his return trips also sailed from Australia on the thirteenth. The General Film Agency of London, another one of his enterprises, was registered on the thirteenth. We forgot to ask him if he was born on the 13th.

INDUSTRIAL FILM CO. MOVES TO NEW YORK.

The Chicago offices of the Industrial Film Co. will hereafter be a branch office, it having been decided to change the headquarters, heretofore in Chicago, to New York City. Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the company, will reside in New York and will continue in executive charge. The New York office will be located at 1600 Broadway. It is understood that branch offices will be opened in several of the larger cities.

Universal Situation Unsettled

Meeting of Stockholders on June 16 Short and Troublous—Stock Transfer Books in Custody of Police.

THE meeting of the stockholders of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company on Monday, June 16, ended almost as soon as it was begun. Robert H. Cochrane, the secretary elected the previous week, and William H. Swanson, who maintained that he had not been officially notified of his successor's election and that the proceeding by which the succession was accomplished was irregular, anyway, both tried to call the roll. One version of what followed is that while President Laemmle was trying to obtain silence, Mr. Swanson called the roll of the stock favorable to P. A. Powers' interests and that Mr. Powers was elected permanent chairman. About this time guards entered the room to take possession of the books of the company. The action was directed by President Laemmle. Trouble started right here. The books and the company seal weighing about ten pounds went through the third story window to the street below. It is said that George Magie, of the Pilot Company, was dangerously near the landing place of the seal. Policemen were called to the scene by bystanders. The books were taken to the Universal offices, where President Laemmle asked for the arrest of Mr. Swanson, Burton H. Garrett, who had been assistant secretary of the company, and Howard Thurston, also a Powers partisan. The charge was grand larceny of books of the company. When the three men were arraigned in court later in the afternoon the magistrate refused to entertain a complaint, advising that the Supreme Court was the proper place to settle the trouble. The books of the company were given into the custody of the police.

On the following day the officers of the Universal, represented by Mr. Morse, the company's attorney, associated with whom was George Gordon Battle, obtained from Justice Giegerich of the Supreme Court a temporary injunction restraining Messrs. Powers, Swanson and Garrett from interfering in any way with the proper conduct of the business of the company. Before Justice Goff on Friday, when the injunction order is returnable, the company will ask that it be made permanent. It is not unlikely that the merits of the case, i. e., as to who is in stock control of the Universal, will be fought out at this hearing.

The most recent of the Universal Company's troubles arose over the question as to which of the two factions, the Powers or the Laemmle, had secured control of the stock formerly owned by David Horsley. The World told last week of the purchase of this stock by Carl Laemmle, the price paid later appearing to be $97,000 in cash and five notes of $15,000 each, a total of $172,000. It is difficult to understand how any man or men would turn over this amount of money for something the seller could not deliver. Yet, according to a statement of J. A. McKinney, an associate of Mr. Powers who is not only in his confidence but in close touch with the film situation, this is exactly what has happened. Mr. McKinney goes further and says that the Bank of the Metropolis, which held in escrow subject to an option by Mr. Powers the stock in dispute, has turned over to Mr. Powers the certificates. This gives Mr. Powers, according to Mr. McKinney, the control of approximately two-thirds of the stock of the Universal Company. It is worthy of note in this connection that the cash paid by Mr. Laemmle was deposited to Mr. Horsley's account in a Bayonne bank and not in the Bank of the Metropolis.

At the offices of the Universal Company on Wednesday a World man attempting to enter as usual was stopped by two men on guard at the gate. The men were big and wore a very determined expression. Robert Cochrane, the secretary of the company, declined to believe that the Horsley stock had been turned over to Mr. Powers. Mr. Cochrane said that the option held by Mr. Powers on the stock was subject to a condition that he should not exercise it "unless and until Carl Laemmle shall refuse to sell his stock." "You may be sure," added Mr. Cochrane, "we knew that this was so before we paid over $97,000 in cash. We have a letter from the bank that it was holding this stock subject to the withdrawal of Mr. Laemmle's claim." Mr. Cochrane charged that on June 7, when between the hours of 4.30 and 8 o'clock p.m., Mr. Swanson removed the books of the company to his rooms in the Hotel-Rector, both Mr. Laemmle and himself were in their offices at 1600 Broadway.

An officer of the Bank of the Metropolis on Wednesday last, when informed that it was said at Mr. Powers' offices that the Horsley stock had been turned over to Mr. Powers and asked if he would confirm this, remarked: "I am very sorry I cannot answer your question, but I guess so far as the bank is concerned you will have to take their word for it. You can see it would not be proper for me to discuss in any way the business affairs of any customer of the bank."

A Statement by Mr. Swanson.

On Monday afternoon when Mr. Swanson returned to the Universal offices from the hearing in the magistrate's court he made the following statement:

"Some time last winter, Carl Laemmle and I formed the Regal Corporation, on a 50-50 basis. I have been at all times the largest individual stockholder in this corporation. I sold my Universal stock to the Regal for the purpose of holding intact the Universal Company. Mr. Laemmle and I had an agreement in writing that each was to equally divide any stock of the Universal that might be offered—that we should own the stock equally, so as to be in control at all times. Not long ago the question came up of the possibility of buying the option of Mr. Powers on the Horsley stock. I was given twenty-five minutes to raise one-half of $78,500, which the first payment required. This was all leading up to a plan for Mr. Laemmle to get all outside stock, which could not be bought by the Regal, as it did not have any stock or cash to buy it with. Therefore, Mr. Laemmle, to get around this situation, was going to buy up 25 per cent. of the stock and let his friends buy the remainder. He proposed to create a deadlock in the Regal and let the minority stock buy the Universal, so that Mr. Laemmle could himself control it. I got on to this on June 7. You see, there were six directors in the Regal, although two of us owned all the stock, and I one-half. I asked for a delay of two days in order that we might take up a mistake that had been made in the issue of stock. Mr. Laemmle stayed away all Friday and Saturday, June 6 and 7; Mr. Stern, the secretary of the Regal Company, also remained away from the Imp studio and office. Then on the 7th I withdrew my Universal stock from the Regal and cancelled all the Regal stock I held, taking back my 2,162 shares and giving Mr. Laemmle his.

"I had to go to Chicago on personal business on Sunday, June 8. When they learned I was out of town they called a snap meeting, to which I was not invited. At midnight on the 10th they issued a call for a meeting on the 11th, so that the notice didn't reach Mrs. Swanson until the time of the meeting next morning. I had sent Laemmle a letter telling why I was going to Chicago. At this snap meeting Laemmle and his attorney, Morse, and Kann, his secretary, deposed me as vice-president because I had taken the books, knowing they had intended to pull this meeting off.

"I returned from Chicago on Thursday afternoon, June 12, and immediately notified Mr. Laemmle by letter that I was here. At no time did they notify me officially that I was deposed. I attended the stockholders' meeting on Monday last as secretary of the company. It was held in a room filled with lawyers, and in the hall outside were strong-arm men. Mr. Laemmle presided. The entire stock was represented. A roll call being ordered, I began it and Robert Cochrane also did the same—two secretaries calling the roll. A motion was made to elect a permanent chairman. I called the roll of the majority of the stock. Mr. Powers was elected. The company's attorney here ordered the strong-arm men to come in and take the books away from me. In the scrimmage the books went out of the window, and the company seal also. The latter was smashed in the fall. Policemen on the street took the books in charge. When I attempted to take possession of my office the strong-arm men threw me out; they assaulted me. I sent out for a policeman to have these fellows arrested and Mr. Laemmle immediately preferred a charge against myself and Burton Garrett, the assistant secretary of the company, and Howard Thurston, a stockholder. We were all marched through the streets to the jail and locked up, and later in a patrol wagon taken to court.

"The presiding judge would not permit a complaint to be made. The judge decided that as the by-laws of the Universal provide that the secretary shall be the custodian of the books that I had a right to their possession and had committed no larceny. The charge, by the way, was grand larceny of books valued at a hundred thousand dollars.

"I went with Mr. Powers and John Kirby, his lawyer, and Mr. McKinney to the bank on the afternoon of last Friday, June 13, and saw him get the Horsley stock. Furthermore, the holdings of Powers and myself are now as follows: Powers, 4,342 shares; Swanson, 645; Thurston, 615; Joe Engel, 1; Harry Nolan, 1. Count 'em up. It's 5,604, isn't it? There have been issued 8,410 shares. You see who controls. Will there be another stockholders' meeting soon? Yes. And some lawsuits, also."

It is likely, in view of the conflicting claims of the two factions, that the present whereabouts and definite ownership of the Horsley stock will not be known to the public at large until the whole question is reviewed in court. The writer on Wednesday asked of two personal friends, who have more or less close relations with Mr. Powers' associates, if in their opinion the much-discussed stock was in the possession of Mr. Powers. One was not over sanguine that it was. The second firmly believed P. A. P. had it.

News came to this writer on Thursday which leads to his belief that, when the matter comes into the courts, it will be found that the article in the Moving Picture World of last week concerning the situation in the Universal Company was, so far as relates to the ultimate control of the company, absolutely correct—that Carl Laemmle will be the head of and will continue to dominate the Universal Company.

DID "CALAMITY ANNE" GO TO HEAVEN?

When "The Road to Ruin" was shown recently at the Palace Theater, Santa Barbara, Cal., Miss Louise Lester had but an ordinary part, but in some of the allegorical scenes she had a make-up of the "witchy" sort. She did not suppose anyone would notice her from among all the others at the Old Mission ruins, but a little girl in the audience is credited with the following remark: "There's Calamity Anne, gone to Heaven."

"ELTINGE OF THE FILMS."

"The Eltinge of the Films" is what they call Harry Benham at the Thanhouser plant. Ever since Harry donned feminine attire for "Dotty the Dancer," last summer, the Thanhouser directors have picked him for female cut-up parts. Harry makes a dashing brunette. His last "Eltinge" effort may be viewed in "Eye of Krishla," released Sunday, June 22, which has a surprise finish similar to "Dotty the Dancer"—Miss Benham is revealed as a he-male. In fact, in this last film, a detective spots him smoking a big, black cigar in a way no regular lady could.

W. H. BELL BACK FROM AUSTRALIA.

Mr. W. H. Bell, formerly General Manager of the J. D. Williams Film Exchanges in Australia, arrived in San Francisco, May 15th, on the Union Liner "Tahiti." When asked to explain his plans Mr. Bell answered that he wished to look the field over carefully and meet all the big and little guns in the business before giving consideration to the future.

"Making comparisons between American and Australian picture theaters I find most interesting and big improvements have been made in the States in the past two years during my absence. Nevertheless, I think that Australia is in the lead as far as the exhibition end of the game is concerned. The theaters I speak of are large, represent heavy investments, and comfortably seat from 1500 to 4000 people. The regular equipment includes a motor generation set as well as two picture machines in each theater. There are no delays as the pictures follow closely upon each other which is made possible by having two operators, one for each machine and using same alternately. Musical acts and vaudeville in other forms are not used and illustrated songs are unknown. The pictures projected present a perfectly uniform strong black and white field free from all discolorations, which is accomplished by the general use of a powerful light. The operators are skilled and handle from 75 to 100 amperes, projecting a thirty foot picture at a distance of 100 to 200 feet from machine to screen. Continuous shows run about an hour and a half with less than five minutes intermission at the end of each performance. Five thousand feet of film twice weekly is supplied to the grind houses, which are open from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M., while a full program consists of just double that amount of film to the one-show-a-night class of theaters, where it is common to see part of the audience in full evening dress.

"The Australian exhibitor, like his American brother, is an independent proposition and the better class are observing with interest the developments by way of organization amongst the exhibitors in this country through the columns of the Moving Picture World, which publication is very much in demand by the trade in Australia. The warm support accorded our independent movement was largely responsible for the success enjoyed by International Pictures, which developed to the heaviest independent film buying concern in the world, with film exchanges in a dozen of the principal cities. We met Mr. Melies and his company of photoplayers. Exhibitors will make no mistake in booking and presenting the Melies productions taken in Australia. The most successful picture shown in Australia, I believe, was Selig's 'Christopher Columbus,' presented by our company in the Town Hall, Sydney. On the closing night, the attendance was over four thousand with probably that many turned away, not able to gain admittance. American pictures are mostly in demand and in them Uncle Sam has a better press agent than could be otherwise secured. The picture show is a fixed institution in the scores of islands throughout the South Seas and in those parts the American Western will always retain their popularity. 'Broncho Billy' would lead by a wide margin in a popularity contest."

AMALGAMATED PICTURES LIMITED.

From the Melbourne Age.

The directors of Amalgamated Pictures Limited, in announcing the payment of a 10 per cent. dividend on the preference shares for the period ending 28th February, state it is impossible at present to issue the annual balance sheet and statement of accounts, owing to the fact that the investigation and valuation of assets necessary in connection with the general amalgamation of pictures and film interests, and the further extension of the amalgamation recently arranged, is not yet completed. It is added:—"The accumulation of surplus profits has been necessary, in view of the operations referred to, and the very large amount of expenditure required in connection therewith." The directors of Amalgamated Pictures emphasize that the business transacted since the new arrangement has been entered into has been satisfactory, and substantial profits have been earned.

In connection with the general amalgamation of interests in the picture business in Australia, two companies have been formed, which will take over the whole of the goodwill of the amalgamated interests. There will be:—(a) an exhibiting company solely, with a capital of £300,000, in £1 shares, of which the General Film Company of Australasia takes 180,000 shares, and the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company 120,000 shares; (b) a film hiring company, with a capital of £300,000, in shares of £1 each, of which the General Film Company of Australasia takes 225,000; and the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company 75,000 shares.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

IT is a humiliating admission to make, but, nevertheless, it is true, that the condition of the exhibiting business in Chicago shows decided retrogression within the past year. I say "business," without reference to the quality of the programs. There seems to be a craze to increase the number of reels on a program to the point of bankruptcy for the exhibitor. Four, five, and even six reels are at present being offered for five cents admission.

The members of the league as a rule have done their utmost to establish the rule that three reels for five cents should be the maximum, but they have been unable as yet to do so. Nor can it be hoped that they will be able to do so, owing to the lack of co-operation of exchanges, licensed and independent alike, and to the mal-influence on programs of the bookings by feature film companies, outside of the exchanges mentioned. As an example of the demoralization at present existing, it may be cited that C. E. Plough, owner of the Anti Trust Film Company, is offering programs of four, five and six reels at the Casino, a theater leased by him and run in opposition to exhibitors.

The attention of exhibitors has often been directed in these columns to the fact that they are the losers in the end, because of such extravagance. The exchanges are reaping a harvest, while they are sowing with prodigal hand the seeds of their own downfall.

But the elimination from the business of such exhibitors, while it might be, in certain cases, a good thing for the general good, is not the worst feature of such insane competition. The moving picture is being cheapened to the point of common alley entertainment in the eyes of the public, and the small picture theater is being tabooed as being unfit for respectable amusement seekers.

And the evil is not confined to Chicago in this Middle West of ours. I have just learned that the Dome Theater, Youngstown, O., owned by Messrs. Renner & Dieble and seating 840 people, offers programs of four licensed reels, talking pictures and music by a five-piece orchestra for five cents! In the same city, the Park Theater, managed by Feiber & Shea and seating 1,800 people, offers six licensed reels, with a seven-piece orchestra, for five cents at matinees and ten cents evenings. What chance has the small house, with 300 seating capacity, against such odds?

In my review of the history of Illinois State Branch No. 2 for the past year, which will appear in the convention number of this paper, bearing the date of July 12, I have gone into the evil of these surplus programs more minutely.

Wm. J. Sweeney Again Aspires to National Presidency.

The second State convention of Illinois State Branch No. 2 was held in the Royal League Hall, Masonic Temple, this city, on June 12. The following members were chosen as delegates and alternates to the National Convention.

Delegates—Wm. J. Sweeney, Robert R. Levy, Julius A. Alcock, C. C. Whelan, A. Balaban, M. A. Choynski, Jno. Miller. H. A. Rubens (Joliet), F. W. Hartman, R. O. Proctor, S. Katz, I. Gelder, Geo. Henry, A. Zahler and I. Natkin. Aaron A. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, was chosen to represent the State at large.

Alternates—Max Hyman, Sam Levine, Frank Thielen (Aurora), Miss Ida Mertsky, A. Powell, Mrs. E. Fitch, R. Navigata, R. C. McMullen (Joliet), Louis Frank, Chas. Abrams, F. O. Nielsen, W. Cadoret (Kankakee), Jas. J. McNarney, C. H. Foster and H. A. Hill.

Wm. J. Sweeney is again to the front as a candidate for the national presidency. The delegates were instructed to give him their hearty and unanimous support.

The next regular meeting of the league was in room 412, Royal League Hall, Masonic Temple, Monday, June 16th, at 2 p.m.

Exhibitors or their friends desirous of joining the delegation going to the New York National Convention are requested to get in touch with the secretary as soon as possible, so that arrangements can be completed for the special train that will carry the party to New York.

American Product Indispensable to Britishers.

J. J. Bennell and wife, of Glasgow, Scotland, have spent the past week in making a thorough inspection of the moving picture industry in Chicago. The Selig, Essanay and American plants were visited and calls were made on exchanges and several theaters were visited.

Mr. Bennell is managing director of the B. B. Pictures (the "B. B." standing for bright and beautiful), Wellington Palace, Glasgow. His company controls 16 theaters in Scotland and three large film exchanges—one in Glasgow, one in Edinburgh and another in London.

The theaters are divided into two classes, one for the working people and the other for the better classes. The prices of admission for the working class theater are 4, 10 and 15 cents; in the higher class theater, 15 and 25 cents is charged. Five and six reels form a program and three changes per week are made.

"The American product is indispensable to exhibitors in the United Kingdom," Mr. Bennell said, during a short conversation. "Business among exhibitors is booming and future prospects are bright."

Mr. and Mrs. Bennell arrived in New York, May 25, and went thence to Montreal and Toronto. They went to New York from this city, and will sail for home June 28. During his stay in Chicago Mr. Bennell paid the World office a call.

Tom Mix as a Thriller.

Tom Mix, dare devil cowboy, bulldogger of steers and a holy terror on horseback generally, has been thrilling the natives of Prescott, Ariz., by some extraordinary stunts of late. Here is a description of one of them, which was performed for a Selig Western recently:

The few who witnessed Tom Mix throw a blood-thirsty steer yesterday afternoon at Joe Roberts' slaughter house will not soon be furnished with a braver or more thrilling exhibition of strength and nerve.

Operator Ostland got his camera placed shortly after 2.30 and the bull, a medium-sized, wiry animal, came snorting into the focus of the instrument, frothing and bellowing. Nip Van neatly lassoed him around the horns. Tom ran into the scene bareheaded and grabbed "el toro" by the horns in an effort to bulldog him.

After a lively scrimmage, during which Tom held on with a grip of iron, the bull ran him off his feet and started charging for the camera. Was Mix down-hearted? Never!

With the horns around Tom's waist, belt-fashion, the two came straight for the instrument, Ostland gamely tried to save the $1,000 camera, but Tom and the steer beat him to it and all three landed in a grand scramble in the dust of the corral the camera a total wreck. Tom wrenched the maddened animal so purposely as to tear one of his horns out. Then he threw up the sponge. Ostland vainly tried to climb the fence and the cause of all the trouble charged madly round the corral.

Just to show he had a few extra jolts of "nervine" left, Mix chased the steer into a corner, removed the surcingle and the rope from his neck and held him three minutes by the remaining horn, while the hushed onlookers held their breaths. A new camera has been requisitioned by telegraph.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Lester L. Busch, manager of the new Plasir Theater, 40th Avenue and Irving Park Boulevard, this city, visited the World office last week. The Plasir will be opened June 21st. It seats 600 people and has cost $30,000. The owners are Bronson and Young. Three reels of licensed service will be run for five cents, except on Saturdays and Sundays, when four reels will be offered at 10 cents.

The Lyceum Theater, 39th Street and Cottage Grove Avenue, has been purchased by Charles Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer. The programs will consist of four reels of pictures and three vaudeville acts. The capacity is 750. Fred Lines, formerly manager of the Kleine Optical Company branch at Indianapolis, has been appointed manager.

F. H. Franke, owner of the California Theater, 26th Street and Trumbell Avenue, and of the Clark Theater, Clark Street and Wilson Avenue, called at this office last week. The California seats 800 people. Exclusive moving pictures are shown at 5 and 10 cents. The Clark seats 1,200 people and offers moving pictures and vaudeville at 5 and 10 cents.

David Mundstuck, of the M. & F. Feature Film Service, states that he is under contract to purchase all State Rights features from Union Eclair, Itala and the New York Film Company for Illinois and Wisconsin. After the week of June 16th, the M. & F. Feature Film Company will be known as the M. & F. Corporation. Mr. Mundstuck left for New York, on business, June 15th.

J. E. Stocker, owner of the Michigan Avenue Theater, Detroit, visited the city last week. This theater seats 400 people and the admission is 5 cents, except on Fridays and Sundays, when special programs are offered at 10 cents. Licensed service is used.

George C. Martin, manager of the United Theater Service, Moline, Ill., has purchased exclusive State Rights in North and South Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska, for the Blanche Walsh Resurrection picture.

George N. Lyman, of New York City, who holds exclusive State Rights in Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois for "New York's Society Life and Underworld" (three reels), arrived in Chicago, Friday, June 13th, to arrange for booking the pictures. These films feature "Chuck" Connors, who died about a month ago, and who was known as the "White Mayor" of Chinatown, New York City. "The films have been already shown in Detroit and Saginaw, Mich., to big business," Mr. Lyman says. These films were passed by the Chicago Board of Censors with complimentary remarks regarding the good moral influence of the pictures. His office is room 410, Dapples Building, 167 West Washington Street.

The Vaudette, 5435 S. Ashland Avenue, this city, owned by W. W. Watts, of Springfield, Ill., was opened recently with "From the Manger to the Cross" as the feature to very fine business. The Vaudette seats 400 people and four reels, licensed service, are offered for 10 cents. The Tiffin Theater, 4445 W. North Avenue, showed "From the Manger to the Cross" on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 10th and 11th, to big crowds at 10 cents straight. The throng was so great in the vicinity that the police were called to clear the sidewalk, so that pedestrians could pass. The Tiffin seats 800 people.

Richard R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Manufacturing Company, is chairman of the Committee of Photographers and Photographic Supplies, of the Chicago Association of Commerce, for 1913. The committee's work includes the moving picture industry. John F. Prybil, personal representative of Wm. N. Selig, is vice-chairman of the committee.

CHARLES ZIEBARTH.

Mr. Charles Ziebarth, factory superintendent for the American Film Manufacturing Company, is one of those hustling younger men who are rapidly revolutionizing the important technical phases of the business. Mr. Ziebarth is 32 years old. He is a master mechanic and prior to his connection with the American, had charge of various technical departments of various large manufacturing concerns. Mr. Ziebarth has been with the American ever since its organization in charge of the mechanical and electrical departments. His marked ability and ingenuity have brought about his prompt promotion to the position of superintendent.

The Gaumont Chronochrome

Leon Gaumont Convinces a Critical Audience of the Success and Permanency of Pictures in Natural Color.

By Hugh Hoffman.

THE first American demonstration of the Gaumont pictures in natural color, by a process known as "chronochrome," was given on June 10, at the 39th Street Theater, New York City. The success of these pictures was established unquestionably in the minds of the audience, which was composed mostly of motion picture people who as a rule are more critical than a lay audience. The exhibition was private and many persons whose names are notable in film circles were among the throng that responded to the handsome invitations.

The spectators were plainly delighted all during the time the chronochrome was in operation. A program of pictures of rare beauty was indeed a revelation. Most of the scenes were taken in France and were exhibited as follows: Flower Studies; Farmyard Scenes; Views of the Riviera; "Mandolinette" (a drama done by artificial light); The Nice Carnival Fetes, 1913; Rustic Scenes in France; Funeral of King George of Greece at Athens; Paris Fashions; Studies of Nature (butterflies); Studies of Venetian Glassware; National Flags. The colors in these pictures are beautifully crisp and refreshing; each image standing out upon the canvas like an exquisite water color, fresh from the hand of the artist.

Mr. Leon Gaumont, the inventor of the process, came over from Paris to be present at the demonstration. He is a handsome, gentle-mannered man of the Latin type, on the sunny side of fifty. Evidently he is a man who does his work more for the enjoyment of it than for what money it will bring. There was a trace of almost boyish pleasure about him when he explained the workings of the chronochrome, and other devices, to the writer. One's attention is divided between the mechanism and Mr. Gaumont, when this interesting Frenchman explains things; because his fine grey eyes get so big and round, and shine so brightly with the light of non-belligerent conviction, that it does one good to look at him. He is a wonderful man, to which the invention of "chronochrome" stands as proof.

The basic principle of chronochrome differs from that of any natural color process now in use. It follows the line of the three color half-tone printing process in the use of three separate lenses and three separate filters, one for each color. For each image on the screen, three images are required in the film; one for the yellow filter, one for the red, and one for the blue. This necessitates double speed in the projection apparatus, or, thirty-two revolutions instead of the usual sixteen for black and white projection. The proportions of the image are changed from the usual size. The width of the film remains at standard size with standard perforations, but the up and down measure is reduced, giving a more oblong image. The reduction is made by putting three images into the up and down measurement of two standard size images. In one way, this horizontal image is an improvement, as it gives a fine panoramic scope which the standard size image does not allow.

On the projection machine one light and one lens are used. Before the lens are three color glasses; red, yellow and blue. All three images project simultaneously through their respective color filters and register on the screen with great accuracy, thus producing the lifelike color effect. There is but one shutter used on the machine; it is the ordinary two-wing outside metal shutter, common to many projection machines.

By the use of the three prime colors, the color range of chronochrome is unlimited. By this process it is possible to record every color of the spectrum; the delicate blues, mauves, purple greens, ochres, orange, etc. This is admirably demonstrated in the reproduction of multi-colored sea shells with half tints of every color changing constantly as the shell turns. Another important advance in color photography by this process is the possibility of taking pictures by artificial light. One complete story picture in costume was perfectly done, and another showing Venetian glassware by lamplight was immense, the lights being gradually diminished to almost total darkness. This opens a field of vast possibilities.

Perhaps the greatest stride by the chronochrome process is the elimination of wands of color following any fast motion. This effect is sometimes known as the barber-pole effect and has been a source of much annoyance and eye strain. This bad feature is entirely absent in the Gaumont process, for the very good reason that all of the colors are on the screen all the time, and as they never leave the screen there is no possibility of their getting mixed. The fastest motions are recorded equally as well as the slower ones.

Taking these improvements, eliminations, and advances into consideration, the Gaumont chronochrome is a great success and one that will no doubt have a tremendous vogue when it is put before the public.

The Talking Picture.

A Review of Some of the Synchronizing Systems Now on the Market. The Edison, Vivaphone, and Gaumont Systems.

By Hugh Hoffman.

THE talking picture, meaning particularly the combined and simultaneous action of the phonograph and motion picture, is having a revival. The idea is not new, but new methods have been introduced and advertised to an extent that warrants some attention to the subject. When the Cameraphone Company failed, some four years ago, the incident was considered to be the finish of the talking picture as a practical commercial proposition. There was no great objection to the synchronizing results of the Cameraphone; they were all that could be expected, but the big missing link was the inability to make a phonograph keep time with a patched reel. It cannot be unqualifiedly stated that this condition has been eliminated in any of the new devices now on the market, but it has been provided for in ways that render it a less momentous question than before.

So far as actual synchronized action is concerned, satisfactory results have been obtained by the manufacturers mentioned herein, each in his own way, which is radically different than that of the others. With this fact established, the exhibitor will no doubt wish to know just what can be expected in the way of screen results. We can truthfully say that there is much that can be expected, provided certain other simple faults are corrected. The first failure of the talking picture was not due to any failure to synchronize the phonograph and the motion picture. The main cause of the failure was the poor choice of subject. And that very cause will bring about the failure of these new devices if not observed by their promoters. The remedy lies in providing better stuff for an audience to look at and listen to. The public are willing to admit that the talking picture is a great invention, but they refuse to pay their money to witness it and then have their intelligence insulted by the reproduction of a lot of stereotyped, small-time vaudeville acts, and puerile subjects of various kinds.

Mechanically the talking picture is a success. Now it is up to the promoters to make it an artistic success. If the talking picture fails again we will know that it is because its sponsors have overlooked the ends in their attention to the means. Poor choice of subject is the one big drawback, and the remedy is so simple that it will be a great pity if the idea fails again.

Among the mechanisms treated of herein there are prices to suit all purses, according to the elaborateness or simplicity of the device, and according to the results that can be obtained therefrom. One of them is complicated, another is simple, and the other is half way between. Each does its work well, but the one that is provided with the right kind of pictures is the one that is going to win out in the long run.

The Edison Kinetophone.

The Edison people do not claim to be the inventors of the talking picture. They do claim, however, that Mr. Edison has taken the original idea as a foundation, and, after having made a study of synchronization in all its phases, has produced an apparatus, embodying original ideas of his own, that is commercially practical. The Edison outfit consists of a giant phonograph, an Edison projector, and a synchronizing mechanism. The phonograph is operated by a small motor, for reasons which will appear presently. A large wax cylinder record is used, measuring about four inches in diameter. Some of the phonographs are equipped for disk records. An ordinary phonograph horn is used. The phonograph is located just behind the curtain, and in vaudeville theaters is set below the level of the stage. For operation, the trap door is opened, the phonograph operator sets his horn, starts his motor, waits for his cue, which is in the picture itself, and then throws in a clutch or switch which starts the phonograph. The trap door arrangement is probably used to save the time that would be required to set the phonograph properly, thus avoiding a stage-wait.

The projector used is the regular Edison Kinetograph which is too well known to need description, except that on the take-up pulley there is bolted a gear wheel that is connected to the synchronizer by a chain belt. The main trick is in the synchronizer, one of the most beautiful little pieces of mechanism that ever was made. A mere glance at it is sufficient to convince one that it is an example of the highest type of the machinist's art. It bulks to about the size of a small cigar box, and the mechanism is encased in a metal envelope. The synchronizer is bolted to the off side of the machine table and is propelled by two different forces; on one side by the moving picture machine, which is turned by hand, and on the other by a belt from the phonograph motor. The synchronizer is all gears, and if these gears are not all traveling at the same rate they will bind and stop the projector. There is a warning brake that tells the operator to slow down or hurry up, as the case may be. It operates by centrifugal action, like a governor. In addition to this there is a traveling bevel gear, or differential, between the two sets of gears, which is operated by turning a knob. This arrangement enables the operator to catch up or drop behind if there is the slightest variation between the phonograph and the lips of the actor. The operator must keep his eyes on the picture all the time. He also has a telephone receiver on his head which is connected by wire to the phonograph, and this enables him to hear it at any distance.

The same motor that propels the phonograph also drives the phonograph side of the synchronizer. This is done by a belt that travels from it to the operating room and back again. The belt is a strong, black, waxed, silk cord about the size of a heavy fish line. In theaters it passes up through the ceiling, across the dome roof, or inner dome roof, over to and through the proscenium wall, and by various angles it reaches the phonograph from underneath the stage. At every corner, this belt passes around pulleys that are encased in metal, making them dust and water proof. Two belts are usually installed, so that in case one breaks the other is handy. In the case of small picture theaters, this belt would probably be rigged close to the ceiling. It is not necessary, with the Kinetophone, for an operator to be a mechanical or an electrical expert, but he must not be a "greenhorn" by any means. Its operation requires a reasonable amount of common sense and during the time of operation it requires that the operator shall concentrate all of his faculties upon the work.

In case of a patched reel, if the cut-out is not more than a few inches it is easy for the machine operator to drop back enough for the phonograph to catch up. In case of serious or long breaks, the Kinetophone Company provides an extra subject for substitution and the broken reel is taken out of commission until the broken scene is replaced with a new one. One of the principal claims of the Edison Company is that their field of reproduction is practically unlimited, because their records and films are made at the same time and by the same machinery.

The Vivaphone.

The Vivaphone is a device that has been in use for the past couple of years in Great Britain. Its mechanism is extremely simple. The synchronizing device is located in the operating room. It is a sheet metal box that stands on edge. It is about two inches thick, fifteen inches long and a foot high. There is an electric light inside this box that shows a red bulls eye, when lighted, to the phonograph operator, who is located on or near the stage. On the machine operator's side of this box is an upright slit through which the light shows in its ordinary color. Outside the box, on the machine operator's side, is an upright pointer about the width and length of a lead pencil, which in its normal upright position always covers the slit in the box and stops off the light. Attached to this pointer, are two miniature windows about the size of a postage stamp; one on each side of the pointer. These little flag windows or window flags are on a level with the light slit in the box. One window is colored red and the other green. These window flags indicate whether or not the machine and phonograph are in time with each other. When machine and phonograph are in time, the pointer covers up the slit and there is no light. If they get out of time the pointer moves to one side or the other, according to whether the machine is running too fast or too slow. When the pointer moves to the right it brings the little red window across the light slit and produces a red light, which means that the machine is running too slow. If the machine is going too fast the pointer goes the other way and brings the green window across the light slit, thus producing the green signal, meaning too fast.

There is a particular spot on the film that must be threaded in the machine directly over the aperture for a starting point. Likewise there is a marked starting point on the phonograph disk. The machine operator signals the phonograph man that he is ready, by turning on the light in his synchronizing box, and that shows the red bulls-eye to the stage. The moment the phonograph starts, the synchronizing box begins to tick slowly, like a clock. At the first tick the machine operator starts his picture. A special handle is required for turning the machine. This handle is electrically connected, by wire, to the synchronizing box, in a way that affects the pointer and its little colored windows. It is the operator's business to see that the pointer stays perpendicular, which means that he is in time with the phonograph.

The only connection between the phonograph and the synchronizer is an ordinary double bell wire. This wire is attached to a skeleton casting, bearing a magneto. One end of the casting rests upon the solid part of the phonograph, and the other end fits over the pin in the center of the disk record. The revolutions of the disk establish a make-and-break circuit that travels through the magneto back to the synchronizer and causes it to tick. The handle of the machine also establishes a make-and-break circuit with the synchronizer at the same time. The phonograph travels at the same speed always. If the machine goes too fast the extra magnetic force generated by the speed pulls the pointer to one side. If the machine goes too slow the phonograph magneto, by its greater excitement, pulls the pointer the other way. On reasonably short film patches the operator can slow down until the phonograph catches up. On bad breaks a new subject should be used.

This entire device is very compact. It can all be packed in half the space of a dress suit case, and weighs only eight pounds. It can be attached to any standard projector without previous preparation, and can be made ready for operation within twenty minutes, with temporary wiring. The electrical power is furnished by an ordinary bell battery and the wire is common bell wire or extension lamp cord. There are three pairs of binding posts on the synchronizer. One pair for the machine handle; one pair for the phonograph and one pair for the battery. Any ordinary Victrola talking machine, such as are sold for home use, can be used with this outfit. The machine operator who gave the demonstration learned to handle the apparatus in half a day. Anyone who can operate a Victrola at home can operate one with this device. Mr. Albert Blinkhorn, formerly of London, has the American and Canadian rights.

The Gaumont System.

The Gaumont system of talking pictures has been in vogue for several years. The present device is an amplification of the Gaumont Chronophone which made a brief American appearance in 1910. Since that time Mr. Leon Gaumont has been experimenting continuously with synchronizing machinery. The recent revival of talking pictures prompted him to bring his device to America, principally as a matter of pride and to remind the American public that for more than two years he has been giving such exhibitions in Paris. He recently leased the Paris Hippodrome for that purpose. The new Gaumont talking pictures were given their first American showing in New York, at the 39th Street Theater, on June 10. Mr. Gaumont is not certain at this time when or how he will market his apparatus, or whether he will market it at all.

The Gaumont system can properly be called a scientific instrument. In its working it has been brought right down to the ultimate of scientific perfection. It has been before the French Academy, and the learned scientists there have marveled at its infinite precision at all points. From this viewpoint it is entirely praiseworthy, but at the same time it is complicated and it is doubtful whether very many operators could be found who have the necessary mechanical knowledge to successfully manipulate it. Exception may be taken to the last statement because the Gaumont mechanism is almost entirely automatic. After the film and the phonograph disk have been placed in position there is nothing for the operator to do except turn on the electricity, and the machine does all the work itself. Still there must be some one around to keep it in working condition, and, unless the operator is a pretty thorough man, there is likelihood that he would do more harm than good.

The entire apparatus operates and is controlled by electricity. There is a wonderful electrical affinity between the phonograph and the projector. With this system the phonograph man is the engineer, instead of the man in the operating room. He sits on the stage behind a screen directly under the projection surface. Before him is a low aluminum machine foundation resembling a lathe. At each end of this base is a round solid metal plate for the support of a disk record. These are revolved by a motor which keeps exact time with the motor that operates the projector. Between the two disks is an upright electric switchboard, with many contacts. This apparatus controls itself and the synchronism automatically. It is delicate and complicated and contains presumably many relays, magnets, inductors, circuit breakers, etc. Connected to each one of these is a wire, and there are many wires; enough to make one large cable when all bound together.

When the exhibition begins the phonograph operator switches in his record. The instant the record starts there is a clutch thrown in at the projection machine propeller and the film starts at full speed, getting its momentum from its own motor, previously started. Then the wonderful switchboard begins to work. It resembles accordeon keys playing themselves. There is no chance for the film and the record to get out of time, except by a bare chance that the pin should jump ahead or behind on the record. In that case the mechanism will adjust itself. In the matter of patched film, whatever is cut out must be replaced by an equivalent length of film, whether it be blank film or a duplicate. The exact relation of the picture to its corresponding dialogue or music must be maintained. To insure absolute precision, the phonograph operator has a dial board beside him on which are two instruments resembling ammeters or voltmeters. These tell him to a hair's breadth how his film and phonograph are traveling. The machine operator uses a head telephone receiver connected to the phonograph. The double phonograph idea is for alternating purposes on long pictures. The change from one to the other is also made automatically.

In concluding the subject it cannot be said that any of these devices has succeeded in evading the hollow sound of the phonograph. Perhaps it is asking too much to expect absolute perfection in that direction. If no improvements are forthcoming it behooves everybody to make the best of what is available. Phonographs are enjoyed in the home; why not in the theater? It is quite probable that any audience would not object to a phonograph if the subject were interesting enough to hold their attention, but it is asking rather a good deal of them to sit and look at a musical act, or a synchronized song and dance, with the feet cut off, when they may have seen the same thing in real life on the same bill thirty minutes before. The fault of the talking picture lies in the lack of variety. To hold its own it must offer something that is not common to a vaudeville bill. Something worthy of it. We are not prepared to say what this should be, but it is quite probable that tabloid grand opera would be a good beginning. The grand opera records seem to be the most satisfactory of all so far, and the great majority of picture or vaudeville devotees have little opportunity to attend grand opera. Addresses by prominent men; solos or monologues by famous artists; scenes from classic dramas; all would be well received. The people are willing, even eager, to admit that synchronism is possible, but they want to see something worth looking at. Why not give it to them?

RELIANCE CHATTER.

Prize bull-dogs captured the studio by storm on Friday. Paul Scardon entered seven of his best breed of English Bulls in the show staged for the coming three real feature "The Tangled Web," in which Rosemary Theby will make her first appearance for the Reliance and even Louis the office boy has become a dog enthusiast.

The ball team is busy getting ready for a game with Lubin on Saturday, at Philadelphia. The Lubin game which was swamped by a cloudburst will be played in Philadelphia, on July 5th.

A new interpretation of "The Rosary," which has been occupying Oscar Apfel's attention, promises to be of more than passing interest, especially as Forrest Halsey is responsible for the scenario.

Larry McGill has just returned from a short trip to Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, which he calls "The Switzerland of America." Larry found some beautiful scenery and succeeded in getting a coal-mine explosion that was realistic enough, even to satisfy his leading man Alan Hale. Alan says that coal-mining never did appeal to him anyway, and blasting always made him very nervous.

Edgar Lewis brought his company home from their trip to Maine all enthusiasm about Rodman Law's plunge over the Stillwater Falls. Law made the dash over the falls in an open boat and is the only man who ever performed that feat. The spectacle is part of a coming Reliance drama, and was caught by three cameras placed at entirely different angles.

Manager J. V. Ritchey succeeded in obtaining the promise of Frederick S. Isham, the well-known novelist to write a story especially for Reliance production. His novel "Half a Chance," is the Reliance release of June 14th.

A Great Modern Photoplay Theatre

The New Grand Central Theater, St. Louis, Mo., a Model of Architectural, Hygienic and Technical Features.

THE New Grand Central Theater, St. Louis, Mo., is owned and operated by the Rex Amusement & Realty Co., of which Mr. Edmund Koeln is the president, and Mr. William Sievers secretary and treasurer. Mr. Sievers is also the manager of the New Grand Central.

This is, at present, with reasonable certainty, the highest type and most elaborate example of a theater entirely devoted to the "photo-play" in the United States, and possibly in the world. Constructed in accordance with the rigid requirements and ordinances governing the erection of new theaters in St. Louis, Mo., it is but fair to say that it embodies every principle known to the expert mind to insure the public against disaster by fire and panic. The management and the architects, Helfensteller, Hirsch & Watson, of St. Louis, Mo., are deserving of the public's warmest praise for the special consideration given this phase of the problem. The logical and practical disposition, and the number, of exists impresses every visitor at once.

The building is located at the northwest corner of Grand and Lucas Avenues; its frontage is 106 feet, its depth 150 feet. The northern 26 feet is occupied by a store with a depth of about 60 feet. In its rear is an open yard, and under this yard (entirely outside and separate from the theater) are the boiler and fan rooms.

The theater building proper has a frontage of 80 feet with a depth of 150 feet. The entrance, which is on the axis, is emphasized by a highly ornate canopy. The lobby is 37 feet wide by 21 feet 6 inches deep, the walls thereof being wainscoted with marble and mirrors to a height of 8 feet. The ceiling is groined or vaulted, and these wall and ceiling surfaces lend themselves admirably to embellishment by the decorator.

The theater auditorium has a width of 78 feet by a length of 100 feet. Only one balcony is provided, the extreme forward edge of which extends to within 48 feet of the curtain. The auditorium will seat 1200, while the balcony has a seating capacity of 800. All seats insure positive comfort. The balcony is reached by two broad, easy stairways, which are provided with two intermediate platforms.

Upon entering the auditorium one is involuntarily impressed with its delightfully simple, but dignified and artistic, treatment; then by the pleasing light effects, which are indirect, and with its perfect sightlines and unusually good acoustics. All these details have been worked out with remarkable success.

Another pleasant surprise is in store for the visitor—the perfect 15 by 20 feet picture on the screen. This perfection is due to the fact that the rays from the lens in the operating room are at right angles to the screen, which fact absolutely eliminates all distortion. Incidentally it should be noted that the screen is set within 5 feet of the back wall of the stage, or a total distance of 123 feet from the lens. This calls for a highly intensified light and unusually strong and special lenses; for, let it be borne in mind that, even during the photoplay, the entire auditorium is under "subdued" light.

A stage complete in all its details is provided. Its depth is 26 feet and its width 80 feet. The proscenium opening is 40 feet wide by 21 feet high. Every modern and requisite electric device enters into the theater equipment.

Special efforts have been made in solving the question of heating and ventilation. Two air washing fans, each with a capacity of 33,000 cubic feet per minute, force the air into the plenum chamber, which extends under the entire first story auditorium, and also under the balcony. Fresh "washed" (heated in winter or cooled in summer) air is forced from this plenum chamber through mushroom ventilators, placed under the seats. Furthermore, there is a truss loft above the auditorium which acts as a "minus chamber" and which is connected with two exhaust fans, each with a capacity of 33,000 cubic feet. This means that the air contained in the entire auditorium can be renewed every two and one-half minutes. This ventilating system alone cost $24,000.

The lower story of the Grand Avenue front is faced with polychrome, pure glazed terra cotta, of charming composition; and the roof over the lobby, with its far overhanging heavy timbered brackets and rafters, is covered with Spanish tile of a warm, red color.

All in all, it can well be said that this house sets a new mark in the building, architectural treatment, heating, ventilating, lighting, sight lines, etc., of a truly modern photoplay theater. The New Grand Central represents an investment of $180,000.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

ANOTHER good fellow has sailed across the ocean and by this time he is at work in his new home. His good-byes had a deeper meaning than have those of many recently departing Americans, because he set out on no short journey. For many years we have been accustomed to being entertained by English actors and have listened with respect to what English producers had to say about stage matters in general. The engagement of Harold Shaw as producing manager of the London Film Company, the studio of which will be in Margaretta, Middlesex, has greater significance than may appear on the surface. It will be construed by many of the wiser heads as tacit recognition by at least one British concern of the eminence of American picture men. Mr. Shaw's work will be followed as closely by his English brethren as it will by his American friends. The former Edison and Imp director has had the benefit of a good training. Added to this and amplifying it are the equally essential factors of native intelligence, tact and the ability to reach men—to transform acquaintances into friends. If Mr. Shaw has comparative youth he has also the enthusiasm that is its counterpart. Nor does this in any measure blind him to a realization of the difficulties that lie ahead of him. These he expects.

The best wishes of a host of friends will follow Harold Shaw.

Herbert Brenon, Imp dramatic director, is up to his ears in work in England. He has found time to send a card from Paris and a long and interesting letter from London. Mr. Brenon has as fellow passengers on his trip over Marc MacDermott and the Edison contingent. Florence Turner was one of the first Americans he greeted on his arrival. King Baggot's first day in London was a busy one, interviewing buyers, viewers and exhibitors and being interviewed by newspaper men. The latter Mr. Brenon has not escaped. The Cinema of May 21, has a page interview with the Imp director, as has the Kinematograph of May 22, and the Bioscope of the same date contains a sketch of his work in picturedom. Also in the latter organ there is a page advertisement announcing that Mr. Baggot will be supported by a British company in British stories produced upon British soil. Mr. Brenon at the time of writing was planning for the opening of the new London offices of the Imp at 100 Charing Cross Road.

The first Imp picture will be connected with the British Derby, run on June 4. The second will be a historical romance, having for a setting a castle and its surrounding forest. There will be in the production 30 principals and 200 supernumeraries. The story is one of England's literary masterpieces, known to every reading man and woman. Surely this should make a big picture.

"I was deeply impressed over here with the methods by which pictures are sold," Mr. Brenon writes. "They are sold actually upon merit, all the renting exchanges having viewers who go about and see the different pictures, making notes of those they like. The first and most important feature is the plot; second, the acting, and, third, the quality of photography. After they have seen the pictures they put in their orders. Any producer who can make a picture to sell even ten copies on the British market can make a picture good enough for anywhere in the world. Each viewer in one week sees 160,000 feet of film; you can imagine the competition. However, it is a great thing, and when one sees these men sitting down for eight hours a day, for four consecutive days—fine representative gentlemen—one realizes what one must do to keep up the standard of this great industry." Mr. Brenon praises the English theaters and refers to the most courteous uniformed attendants, the magnificent projection and beautiful music. Paris likewise has fine houses, but the pictures that are most popular are of a standard that would be frowned upon in the United States.

The Imps expect to remain in Great Britain and Ireland at least two months and then to visit the larger continental cities.

Larry Trimble, producer of the Turner Film Company, of which Miss Florence Turner is at the head, has had placed at his disposal for the making of interiors the studios of Cecil Hepworth. Mr. Trimble will arrange his outdoor settings in those sections of England best suited to the individual picture. The class of stories to be filmed will be those in which Miss Turner has been so successful—clean, healthy dramas and comedies and occasionally a picture in which Miss Turner and one other will constitute the cast. A likeness of Jean, the canine film favorite, will serve as the trademark of the Turner Film Company.

It is to laugh—or shall we cry?—when we read that Kinemacolor's "Scarlet Letter" was strangled in Providence. Here is a good specimen of the police censorship of motion pictures which some men would impose on the industry. The reason ascribed for the prohibition by the lieutenant of police is that the story and picture are "obnoxious and disrespectful to clergymen!" So in the view of this functionary it is not only a sin but a crime to portray on the screen an erring clergyman. He would bestow on this division of the community the privilege enjoyed by royalty in other days—"The King can do no wrong." But everybody knows that kings do go wrong and that clergymen do sometimes—perhaps even in Providence. If the citizens of Providence were debarred from seeing this fine portrayal of Hawthorne's great moral story, the loss is theirs. Oh, well! But to think that the puritans of old Boston town should find a worthy successor in the home of Roger Williams!

On the day of the unveiling of the Maine monument an uptown Broadway theater showed two reels which told the story of the raising and the sinking of the famous ship which had so long rested in the mud of Havana Harbor. The picture, of course, is not new; but it can never grow old. It is all tragedy—the greatest ever thrown on a screen. No master of stage-craft could have conceived a more impressive sequence of events than are contained in this film—the raising of the Maine, the escort to the pier of the caskets containing the bones of the men who had gone down with the ship, the setting out from the harbor of the flotilla conveying the old hulk, with its great flag flying at the stern. The strains of a fine orchestra could hardly add to the pathos of the scenes—even though it feelingly played "Should Old Acquaintance be Forgot," as the marine procession started; or "My Maryland," "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee," at later stages, the latter as the ship began to settle by the head; at the last phase—the stern upright, the national emblem blowing straight upward—one man said none too steadily: "I can feel my heart sinking with that ship!"

"What kind of pictures do my people like best?" said an operator the other day. "Well, from what I hear I think the most popular is the straight drama, that with real heart interest in which also there are not more than three or four characters materially figuring in the story. Short casts increase the interest by reason of easy identification of the players and determining their relation to the story."

Word comes from Los Angeles that Fred Mace has made another "O'Brien" picture—and furthermore that he will himself remember it for some time to come. In order to secure the proper amount of realism the hero of that hilarious "One-Round O'Brien" obtained the services of two prizefighters, one of them a coming champion. "Go as far as you like, boys," Mace told them. They did. Mace says he has evidence aplenty to prove it (and thinks they went even further)—and that such of it as is not visible on different parts of his anatomy he can himself locate interiorly. "But it's a fine picture," says Mace.

Talking the other day with a returned traveler, one who has been over the country quite a bit the last few months, he told of a picture house in a good-sized city making what he considered good money. The house seats 260 people and shows three reels. Behind the screen are two men and two women who in clever dialogue give their own interpretation of the scenes. There are sixteen or eighteen shows a day. The admission is 5 cents. The little theater is filled and more than filled nearly all the time. The profits last year were $19,000. When the proprietor was asked if he expected to make more money the present year he replied that he did not, as that would involve a reduction of expenses, a proposition he did not care to consider.

Met Frank Smith, Imp director, at the Screen Club, Monday. Mr. Smith is particularly strong on stage settings, on costumes, etc.—in fact, in preparing the picture for the camera, one might say. He said he believed the day would come when, in the making of pictures, there would be in the taking of every scene the equivalent of the dress rehearsal of the legitimate stage; that the photographed film would be taken from the camera, developed, and thrown on a screen. The director would then have full opportunity to indicate changes that would mean the betterment of the picture—changing about of properties, substitution of a costume, or alteration of other details.

Advertising for Exhibitors

SOME of the Cameraphone Bulletins are advertising for local contributions. It is both a good and a bad idea; good in that it rouses local interest, but bad in that more is apt to be sent in than can be used and the disappointed ones may feel that they are being slighted. The bulletins seem to have turned more to gossip of the players of late and run some paragraphs with "pep" to them. We can see them with a list of paid subscribers yet. If you want to try the local items here is the Cameraphone announcement:

> YOUR ASSISTANCE WANTED
> The editors invite your contribution to the Bulletin. Matter intended for publication should be left at the box office for the attention of the Bulletin editors. Remember that this is your Bulletin, issued for your use. Do not hesitate to make suggestions as to its makeup, or as to the matter which appears in it, as the days roll by.

The Angelus News, Spanish Forks, Utah, following in the lead of the Isis News (which seems to have gone out of print) runs an interview with G. M. Anderson on the front and back page. It uses a continuation line from the front to the back, but there is nothing on the back to show that it is a continuation of the first page. "Continued from Page 1" should have been used.

Here is a want ad the last issue carries:

> WANTED—For some Wednesday night—a WEDDING, to take place on the stage. Will give the couple $5.00 in cash, free clerical service, and a dandy brand new baby cart. Parties desiring to accept this offer should see the manager at least five days before the date desired.

Experience will help them to get more local items in, which is what is most needed at present. The advertising is growing, but to hold it, local stuff must be run that will insure every page being read. Boiler plate stuff will not do in a house program.

The Motion Picture Weekly is issued in Springfield, Ohio, apparently, though the only thing that discloses that fact is the union label on the last page. William A. Brand is the manager-editor and it is run in the interests of the Dreamland Hippodrome, Pastime, Fairyland and Princess theaters. There is a fine place for the town and state on the first page, but this is not shown. One house runs licensed and others independent, so that this program deals with all the players. It is well put together and although only in its second number it is well laid out and carries a good percentage of advertising, though not too much.

Tickets for Rat Tails.

Here is one item from the Weekly that will make copy for others:

> Press dispatches recently carried the story of a unique stunt. Several Kentucky towns have official rat-killing days, during which time all citizens get busy in a general crusade against the rodents, but the prize goes to the mining towns of Jenkins and Burdein, in the southeastern Kentucky coal fields, for a new and efficacious method of exterminating the pests. The Young Men's Christian Associations of these two towns have inaugurated moving picture shows. and for a few days the price of admission will be two rat tails. Proceeds from the first night's entertainment at Jenkins netted two thousand tails, with Burdein running a close second. At this rate those interested in the destruction of the rat hope to have ratless towns. Miners and citizens generally are taking a keen interest in the peculiar crusade.

A contest that differs from the others is the offer of five tickets to each of the five theaters to the first ten persons answering this list of questions:

> What company does Alice Joyce play with and what theater shows pictures she appears in?
> What theater shows the Keystone comedies?
> What theater runs all features?
> What is "Alkali Ike's" name?
> What theater is running the "What Happened to Mary" series?
> What company does Mary Fuller play with?
> Who is the Biograph Girl?

That's the sort of contest that really helps to advertise the houses.

From New Orleans.

Gaston J. Dureau, Jr., general manager of the Fichtenberg enterprises program, New Orleans, sends in half a dozen issues of the Spotlight, his house organ, and wants comment and comparisons.

The Spotlight is a sixteen-page booklet 6x9, printed on coated paper, printed in black or colored ink. Where a colored ink is used the color is used on all sixteen pages. There is an attractive design for the front cover. It is more a program than a booklet, though there is considerable reading matter. The great trouble seems to be that the matter is not properly arranged, and while it uses about 3 pages of gossipy stuff, it does not make the showing that other booklets gain with the same amount of material because it is not made up as a magazine, but as a program. One full half-page is taken up with a continued story, five or six inches of a magazine story being printed each week. This is a sheer waste of good space. It is not possible to keep interested in the very brief installment given and the first time we saw the story we thought it was a joke. It required several weeks to convince us that the thing was being published in all seriousness. A continued story should carry at least one thousand words to each issue and more would be better. This should be closed up quickly and the idea of running a continued story dropped completely. It does not carry interest from week to week and much better use may be made of the space for gossip of plays and players.

The Arrangement.

Under the present layout the second page carries an advertisement for the Picto Theater that gives no greater argument than that they show three first run licensed pictures. A fancy border and rule work seems to have engaged more of the compositor's attention than the display of the advertisement. The fact quoted should have been given half the page and the rest given over to a well written explanation in ten-point of why a theater offering three first run licensed pictures each day was well worth patronizing.

The second page is given to the heading of the sheet, to an announcement of the three houses and to a list of the staff. Three boxes, connected by ornaments, are used to make it look like three separate advertisements. This matter, with the exception of the heading, should have been thrown to the rear of the paper as is done with the Pearce Weekly. It is not of sufficient importance, except, perhaps, to those whose names are mentioned, to warrant the use of the second most important page in the issue to the facts.

The third page, the first inside the cover, is that to which the reader naturally turns. It should either be devoted to general matter or to the announcement, in reader form, of the most important matter of the week; the coming releases that are out of the ordinary. The top should carry a cross page title and a one column bastard head, the rest being in not larger than eight-point type two columns to the page. If desired, the announcements of staff and houses, or either, may appear on the second cover page, facing this, but not on it. An announcement should also be carried on this page stating on what page the results of their misspelled word contest appears. This may then appear on an even numbered page and yet bring attention to the house or other advertising matter appearing on the same page.

The house programs may appear, as they do at present, on page five, but to give the words "Programs this week" thirty-point (sixty in all) and the names of the theaters but eighteen points is to reverse their values. The programs speak for themselves and do not need to be labeled. Just in passing, the man who is responsible for all that fussy rule and border work that makes the sheet look like the output of a country job office with a drunken compositor should be killed or fired, or at least talked to severely.

One good idea is used in telling when a picture is not quite up to the mark instead of using the manufacturer's notice. It inspires confidence in the program and avoids disappointment. For that matter most of the reading matter is well done, but the layout is so poor that it does not get much of a chance. It would be better to run all text matter on the right hand pages and advertisements on the left except certain of the house advertisements.

The booklet does not compare very well with most, but the faults are mechanical rather than literary, barring that absurd continued story.

A Neat Souvenir.

George Kleine sends in one of the souvenirs of the hundredth performance of "Quo Vadis?" at the Astor Theater, New York City, June 9. It is marked by exceptionally good taste. A photo-reproduction of Anthony Novelli as Vinicius is enclosed in a folder of white card with the front embossed, no ink being used on the embossing. The result is something that is wholly in keeping with the dignity of this production instead of suggesting a three-sheet lithograph. It sounds the note of refinement that appeals to those to whom the subject appeals most strongly. It would be hard to better the cover or the general style.

"Stealing Our Stuff."

A correspondent sends in a page of the Vancouver World. which runs a frame of photoplay theater advertisements around an editorial story by Louis Reeves Harrison. In view of the fact that this paper pays Mr. Harrison for these articles, which the newspaper uses every week, it would be no more than decent if our Canadian cousin gave the paper credit. There is no law that requires the giving of credit, but it doesn't hurt to be courteous. There are eleven theater advertisements and one exchange ad. The exchange uses its space to advertise the route of "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde" for the week, which is something new in advertising.

The theater advertising is hardly interesting. The Globe, for example, merely announces that it is "The Theater Beautiful" and adds the catchline "Sit among the thousand." It doesn't say what the thousand will see for their ten-cent pieces. The Fairview merely says that "Balaoo" is "One of the most remarkable films ever produced," but does not tell why, though explanation would interest. The Province tells that "Tigris" was at the Bijou Theater, New York City, for four months. It adds that it is in four reels, but there is no argument.

The Princess gives an argument for "Dr. Jekyl," and the Maple Leaf plays up "The Vampire of the Desert," which it says is adapted from Kipling's poem. The Broadway and the Cedar Cottage theaters both tell a little something of their offering, but "Change of program daily" is the best the Majestic can do beyond the price and address in a two-inch advertisement. There is no use paying for advertising space unless you say something. The name of your house is not sufficient. Tell what you have to offer in part, if not in whole, but make a noise.

Twice a Thousand.

Bertram I. Williams, of Ponca City, Okla., has opened an airdome at the place he put on the photoplay map, and has twice played to a thousand persons one performance. That's going some, but he believes in advertising, as this extract from his letter shows:

> We have booked in the "Battle of Gettysburg" for the Fourth of July. I already have 600 sheets of paper on the boards and will get as much more as we can get hold of.

That sounds as though there was going to be strong opposition of some sort on the holiday, but even with that, six hundred sheets on the boards is a lot of paper for a town.

We rather like his description of his place. It sounds inviting:

THE SKY ABOVE, MOTHER EARTH BELOW AND NATURE'S COOLING SYSTEM BETWEEN.

The cut shews the airdome dolled up for the Decoration Day attractions, "A Southern Cinderella" and "In the Claws of a Leopard." Here's a line for "The Eleventh Commandment:"

> ITS JUST FIVE MONTHS AFTER CHRISTMAS
> But it's not too late yet for another gift, so we are giving away two thousand feet of chuckles with this bubbling mirth-provoker.

It doesn't pay to write strenuous stuff unless you can keep it up, but it never bothers Mr. Williams, and his readers are used to taking his statements with a 50% discount, so it is all right.

Wants Clean Kiddies.

We think that Ben Zerr, of the Schuylkill Avenue Picture House, Reading, Pa., must have had his troubles, for his cut price tickets now read:

> HELLO TICKET
> This ticket and 3 cents will admit any clean child any Saturday Afternoon up to August 9th.
>
> Schuylkill Ave. Picture House
> BENN ZERR, Proprietor and Manager

It is a wise provision, at that, for the cut price ticket will particularly appeal to the youngster who doesn't keep clean and too many of that sort in the house are bad for business.

Mr. Zerr uses a cut of a lantern on most of his stuff, the rays lighting the words "We light the way." It is sufficiently unusual to attract attention. He also shows a fondness for good black type, but he does not overdo it and his advertising does not look mussy.

One recent scheme is explained in this bill:

> CHIEF WHITE MOON, the Indian graduate of Carlisle Indian School, will explain life and habits among the Indians, such as you have never heard or read of before. He is a wonderful entertainer for both young and old. No one his equal, as an Indian, has ever entertained the Reading public. He will talk on different Indian Pictures every afternoon and evening. This will be a week of instruction, especially to the Teachers and Scholars.
> DIFFERENT PRIZES EVERY AFTERNOON TO THE CHILDREN.
> Two ladies guessing nearest his weight will receive prizes, also two men. Some prizes can be seen in Haines' Cigar Store window. The Decorations are worth the price of admission.
> Don't miss one day; make a big week of it. Please bring the children in the afternoon and see a bigger show and avoid the crowd in the evening. Extra Prizes to children in the afternoon if they sit in the lucky seat.
> Three different pictures every day besides the Indian with his lecture on a picture.

An Appeal to the Indifferent.

Another poster deals with the milk and adds an appeal to the person who does not usually patronize the picture theater. Here is the bill:

> FRIDAY, MAY 16
> THE OLD AND NEW WAY OF HANDLING MILK
> This picture was shown May 6th at Harrisburg in the Senate Chamber to the Governor and Senators. It made a decided hit. Every father and mother should see this picture; it may save the life of your child.
>
> For the Benefit of those who don't go to Moving Pictures—
> If you will come to see this picture you will come again to see other good pictures that we show from time to time in the educational line. It is my aim to elevate the morals and character of the Motion Pictures.
>
> Come and join the happy family gathering every evening at the > SCHUYLKILL AVENUE PICTURE HOUSE

Get After Them.

More than one exhibitor would do well to make a definite and carefully planned campaign for the business of those persons who do not at present patronize the picture theater. Many of these do not even realize the great improvement made in the past few years.

Find out who they are. Advertise for them. Run a slide asking your patrons to give you the names and addresses of those who are not regular photoplay attendants and circularize them when you have something particularly good. Don't tell them that you want them to come regularly, but ask them to come and see, just once, as your guest, what the pictures really are and what they are missing.

Make special arrangements to get the sort of specials that will particularly appeal to those hard to please, who will be most apt to desire to see; the visualization of some book or the reproduction of some historical or educational subject.

If you can get one of the pure milk stories, for example, make the rounds of the physicians or address a letter to them suggesting that their patients who have little children should see this film and that you will be glad to send tickets with his compliments if he will furnish you with their names and addresses and his cards to slip in with the passes if he wishes. You can do the same things with tuberculosis stories and with other films advocating preventive measures.

School teachers, in the school season, will work in with you when you have something that will fit in with their class work. Suppose, for example, that you got the "Panama Canal" pictures for some Saturday. Why not give a school children's performance in the morning, before the regular show, running the reel say at half-past ten. When your regular matinee starts you will find many of the kiddies back with their mothers or big sisters, with perhaps father and the boys coming to the evening performance, and all because a youngster saw the show free and went home so full of the picture that everyone simply had to listen to the chatter.

Keep in Touch.

And look here. Did you ever stop and study just what it is that gets people into your house? Did you ever make a serious study of it? Did you ever get your wife to tell you what she knows about getting people in? Did you ever talk things over with school teachers and policemen and letter carriers and grocery clerks and men who work in factories and girls who work in shops?

All of those people can tell you something you do not know about how people are influenced to go to photoplay theaters and why they like some houses and do not like others. You do not know all about running a theater and you never will, and the more firmly convinced you are that you do know, the less you are apt to know anything at all.

You may know that business has dropped down, but you won't know that it is because the girl who sells tickets is "snippy." She isn't that way when you are around, but you can't stand alongside of the box office all the afternoon or evening, and when you are not there she vents her headache or her corns on the patrons and it comes out of your pocket.

You may not know that people stay away from your house because the usher is too busy talking to young girls to show people to seats. The usher is on the job when you are around, but you cannot spend your waking hours with him.

You may spend five dollars on a circular scheme and lose every cent of the investment because you are using "man talk" on a bill intended for women. Why not ask some clever woman (and your wife may be clever and you not credit her with the fact) just what the trouble is with a bill, or what she thinks of it?

We know one house that turned a weekly loss of about ten dollars into an average profit of fifteen by merely changing the pianist. The old pianist was a skillful performer, but he played what he wanted to play and displayed his technique instead of giving the popular air songs the people liked. It sounded first rate to the man who ran the house, but three blocks up the street there was a quiet little woman who read the Clipper and Variety each week and got hold of the new songs as fast as they came out. She didn't always "play the pictures," but she played to the people and she had people to play to.

Get posted and keep posted. You are not running your theater to please yourself. You are running your theater to please the public and the larger the section of the public you can please, the larger your profit will be.

Good management is nothing more than love for your fellow men and a knowledge of what they want.

Keep Your Coat On.

It seems foolish, but keep your coat on these hot days. Get a light suit, but wear a coat even if you do have a small house in a cheap section. No matter if the men remove their coats when they come into the house. Keep your's on and not only set a good example, but retain the slight dignity of the manager. Be a mixer with your audience, but make them feel that the manager is a bit better than they are while all the time you appear to be wholly ignorant of the fact. That's part of showmanship.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Coming Along.

THE proofs of the new Technique of the Photoplay are coming along and it is probable that the end of July will see the book through the bindery. The new Technique is not a reprint of the old, but an entirely new manuscript in every line; about three times the size of the old. One new feature will be the printing in imitation typewriting of all examples and sample scripts, enabling the author to see just how this should be done. A limited edition will be bound in leather, the regular edition being bound in cloth, uniform with the other publications of this paper.

Warning.

It would seem that some manufacturing company is selling addresses to a concern in New York City, for an alleged literary bureau is sending broadcast a circular telling the recipient that it is giving out assignments to write stories with a skeleton of the story to be written. You send five dollars to the concern and get two assignments and a couple of text books. When your stories are written and sold you are paid their value less one-fifth to the selling concern. The advertising leads one to infer that the company guarantees you at least $40.

This listens well, but the magazines quoted by the company are not in need of stories from the untrained and are not ordering by skeleton assignments. It will probably be discovered in the course of time that five dollars have been wasted instead of forty made, so save your money.

Essanay Wants Them.

H. Tipton Steck, the Essanay manager of Negative Production, adds his word to Mrs. Parsons' to the effect that Essanay wants first class scripts of all sorts, particularly comedies and strongly dramatic stories in one or two reels.

Keystone.

Karl Coolidge is out of Keystone and Reed Heustis is editor now. Mr. Heustis writes that the company wants ideas, but he adds that they want ideas, not merely what the author may think is an idea. Keystone seems to be paying about fifteen dollars for the idea alone. This is what Mr. Heustis writes:

> Am dropping you these few lines to implore you again to come to the bat for the "Situation" idea. So many, many scenarios are received here that have been conceived in ignorance and strung together on the line of slim incident that when a REAL situation arrives I feel like cheering.
> We are still in the market for synopses only and the shorter they are the better, if only they contain a Main Spring Situation. Checks, and lots of them, are waiting to be shipped to the ones who devise a situation and write around it. You have done so many good things for the scenario writers that I feel assured you'll remind them again that the—here it comes again—situation is the crying need.

Kalem, Too.

Various correspondents have pointed out that the Kalem Company is among those requiring the director to adhere to the manuscript. Vitagraph and Edison also require a film in accordance with the script given the director. The point is that the McCloskey scheme carries the idea to the fullest point of development.

The Reason Why.

A man who has been getting out a photoplay journal from three different cities for reasons not wholly unconnected, it would appear, with an impertinent curiosity on the part of certain government officials connected with the Post Office Department, laments the fact that we object to all schools teaching photoplay. We object to the schools because they are universally rotten. There is no need to particularize.

He also laments that several books on photoplay writing do not contain chapters on dramatic construction. That was his "graft" for some time and so no book without a chapter on dramatic construction seems to him to be good. We are not teaching dramatic construction. We are teaching photoplay construction and we wrote our first book on technique as well as the coming second for the photoplay writer and not to please a man who cannot long keep the same address because of legal entanglements.

That's just one reason why we object to schools; it is because these alleged schoolmasters do not know what it is they teach. Some of these days the government will round up some of these frauds and put them in jail for getting money under false pretenses.

We saw a script the other day "personally reconstructed by Mr. Blank, of the Dash School," which he guaranteed to be technically correct. If that is his idea of technique, he has no right to pretend to teach it.

With a Spike.

We must hand it to Bill Wright for a new term. He speaks of a punch with a spike in it, meaning that the punch may carry with it a feature that will defeat its own usefulness. Too many punches have whole kegs of spikes in them.

It Worked.

In this department for May 24, we spoke of a man who determined to go to the local photoplay school instead of fooling with courses and criticisms. Because of an unusual memory he planned to write the scripts of all the pictures he saw instead of those he remembered most vividly. Now he writes again:

> You will remember me as the man who, a couple of months ago evolved the scheme of rewriting the best of the stories I saw on the screen for the purpose of studying those stories. Well, I have about as interesting a collection of other people's scripts as you will find outside of a studio. But these are the least of the things I have gained from this study. I fully understand now why you say that photoplay writing cannot be taught, for the best things I have obtained from this study are impossible to tell.
> I have only written two stories since I began this study. One of them is sold and to a company which is not in the market at that. The other has not been written long enough for a report but I am confident that someone will buy it. In brief, this scheme of picture study has brought success out of absolute failure. Now isn't that a pretty good argument for a method of study? You are well aware that I had been writing for nearly a year without success but just as soon as I took up this scheme of study I got the idea and landed. If I had the power of presenting this scheme so that all beginners would be impressed with its value it would do them a world of good. Perhaps you can do it.

There is a certain indefinable something about writing plays that cannot be taught. That each person must acquire direct and the place to find it is on the screen. It is this something that gives you the instinctive knowledge of just how a thing should be done, a sort of sixth sense. Our correspondent was trying for more than a year to catch the trick. He seems to have it now. You can get it, too, if you will watch the whys on the screen.

There Goes the Goat.

"This has just come back from the Biograph." is the way a recent letter starts. Immediately our goat flock was diminished by one. The story was no more a Biograph story than would be a section of the Congressional Record. No company has a style more strongly marked than the Biograph, yet a story wholly out of their line was sent in there for sale by a person who should have known better.

Study the style of stories a company uses and seek to offer only that style of script. Don't waste postage sending comedies to a company that makes three reel western dramas exclusively. That isn't salesmanship; it's foolishness.

Poor Advice.

We just saw a script accompanied by a letter that read in part:

> I am a pupil of the ——— ——— Schools. This script was arranged for sale by Mr. Blank himself. He advises me that it is an excellent story in perfect technical form, and that I should not take less than $25 for it.

The idea is old, one of the oldest in the modern comedy class, and the development is weak and ineffective, yet the head of a so-called school declares it to be in perfect technical form, and advises the deluded pupil to hold out for an impossible price. There ought to be some way of getting at these people.

Write Your Name.

We are in receipt of a letter from a woman residing in New York who wants to start writing photoplays. She sends a two cent stamp for a reply instead of an addressed envelope. She lives in an apartment house, and since the street address alone would not reach her, we have had to consign her letter to the waste basket. If she will repeat her request and sign her name so that at least two out of ten persons will agree on what the letters are, we will be glad to respond to her question. In the meantime we would point out that scores of writers remain unanswered because they do not take the trouble to write their names plainly. If you have a fancy signature, write or print your name and address plainly in addition. If you are a woman indicate whether you are Mrs. or Miss Blank, writing the title between parentheses thus: (Mrs.) Eva Ernestine Smith. And give your address with every letter you send out; not just the first.

A New One.

A correspondent asked a new question the other day. He wanted to know if it would be possible to attach a telescope to a camera and take a picture.

It would be, because it has been done, but it is not practical for most purposes, because it cuts down the light so much. It stands to reason that if you add to the lenses of the camera the lenses of the telescope, it will not be as easy for the light to go through all that glass as through the camera lens alone. It can be done, but most studios do not stock telescopes and so do not write the picture that must be taken through a telescope.

Let the studio experiment with this sort of stuff if it wants to, but let them do it from their own scripts. Make your effort direct itself to giving them the best possible ideas with the least amount of extra trouble.

What is a story?

What makes you think you have written a story?

Ask yourself that question before you put your script in the mails and be certain that you give yourself a convincing answer.

Just because it is all about a man and a woman—the same man and woman all through—does not make it a story. It must tell what that man and that woman did to accomplish some certain purpose. A story is not an incident, but the proper incidents make a story. More than a third; probably half of the scripts that are sent to editors are not stories at all in their true sense.

What makes you think that yours is really a story?

More About Coincidence.

Once upon a time, a long time ago, Charles R. Wilhelm, of Chicago, wrote a story about a tramp that broke into a house and found a mother with a sick child. He saved the child's life. He sent it around the country, but no one seemed to want it, so he retired it. Then Solax and Selig made the same story to all practical purposes. Neither of these companies were among those to whom the Wilhelm script had been sent, and with an academic interest not stirred by suspicion, Mr. Wilhelm enlisted the interest of the producers in locating the source of inspiration.

The Selig release, "The Burglar who Robbed Death," was written by Lannier Bartlett, of the Selig staff, from a cliping in the Los Angeles papers. Solax's "The Man in the Sick Room," was written by Miss Mildred Smith, who drew her inspiration from the Philadelphia Press.

If Mr. Wilhelm will turn to this department for March 22, of the current year and read the item headed "In the Spirit Pioneer," he will find that a Japanese photoplaywright wanted to know why the story could not be used and we told him because it had been done so often before. Mr. Wilhelm is a few years late with his inspiration.

The first use of this incident that we recall vividly was that of a burglar who broke into a house tenanted only by babies. It ran in a magazine some seven or eight years ago. The burglar found one baby ill (the parents and servants were all out), and saved its life. About the same time there was another, a comedy story, in which the babies were not sick but the burglar had to warm their bottles and soothe them to sleep before he could rob the house.

Since that time we have seen the theme repeatedly in print and picture. It was new to Mr. Wilhelm, so he thought it his own. It was new to the other writers, apparently, though Mr. Bartlett should have recognized so old a friend.

The point is that the apparent plagarism was nothing of the sort. Another point is that Mr. Wilhelm, instead of letting out an agonized yelp looked the matter up and found his suspicions unfounded.

Just because you never saw a theme it does not follow that several hundred thousand millions of people since literature began have also sidestepped that idea. Keep you head and find out before yelling "Thief!"

One Viewpoint.

William H. Ketchell put into fewer words than we have succeeded in doing our ideas regarding the magazine writer who tries to write plays. He says:

> Seems to me that photoplay and magazine work don't go together well unless you can switch the mood to suit both. My story in "Collier's" (Bungawan) gave me a literary perspective that handicaps me on photoplays and I can't see the dramatic values as I could before; at least not from a picturesque point of view.

That's just it. You cannot interchange style and action save through long practice. If you would write a fiction story use fiction form, but do not get the idea that you can write photoplay to that form or reverse the idea and write fiction from a photoplay point of view. Fiction is what you tell. Photoplay is what you see. They are not the same.

Carl Chapin's Conclusions,

Carl M. Chapin conducts a photoplay page in the Waterbury American that is one of the few out-of-town departments that is not wholly clip stuff. He takes up the question of why the magazine writer does not make good in photoplay—or does he? and adds his conclusions, which are these:

> But what rubs the photoplay fraternity on the raw is the hint that these disgruntled magazinists consider them of a lower order of workmen in the literary mill. As is usually the case, the truth lies about midway between the two extremes. There are undoubtedly successful magazine writers who can't write practical photoplay "scripts"—which is the technical term for the scenario or synopsis of action which serves as a guide for the production of a moving picture. But, on the other hand, there are probably as large a proportion of photoplaywrights who cannot write a sellable magazine story. The ones who can do both really belong to both sides in the fight and the queer thing is that they don't realize that the gibes of their erstwhile brethren of the magazine field are not directed at them but at that portion of the photoplaywright fraternity—whatever proportion it may be—which turns out punk photoplays and couldn't do better if it tried. The good photoplaywright is deserving of, and commands, respect whether he ever wrote a magazine story or not.

Mr. Chapin does not quite get our point. The point we make is that it doesn't matter whether a man can write a decent magazine story or not so long as he makes good. We are tired of the constant cry that the salvation of the photoplay lies with the magazine man. It doesn't. Magazine writers can and have made successes in photoplay but few of them can write action in action as well as the man who lacks style and therefore welcomes a new medium in which he can work.

The point we are trying to hammer home is that the lack of good stories on the screen is not so much due to the absence from the work of the magazine writers as it is to poor direction, careless cutting and editing.

A thousand magazine writers coming into the field will not help the photoplay half so much as more careful editing and much more careful production.

The magazine writer is not a cure all or even a palliative. There are as good stories being written now as there ever will be, not many perhaps, but enough, but the best story ever typed is helpless in the hands of an incompetent director who thinks he knows more about the story than the author does. We have no kick coming on our own behalf. We are very well content with the production we get, but some of the things that are done in some studios are little better than murder in the first degree. Not so long ago we asked a director, who has an interest in his company, what a seemingly meaningless scene was put in for.

"Nothing in particular," was the languid response, "but the story seemed to be running along too fast and I put it in to hold the action down." The story was sweeping to a strong climax and the director put in a scene that even he could not explain.

When the great big scripts are written, they'll be written by the men who are writing today—but they won't be put on by the same producers—not if they look right on the screen.

Indeterminate Length.

Many hopeful writers profess to see in some of the late Biograph releases the approach of a new order. Biograph has been releasing subjects as they run rather than in thousand foot lengths, and it goes without saying that authors would welcome the change should it become universal, for today the arbitrary reel length is responsible for more poor pictures on the screen than any other one cause.

We hate to wake the dreamers up, but the happy day is yet a long way off. These Biographs of indeterminate length are really the Biograph allowance of two-reel stories. Instead of padding out three hundred feet to make the full length, the Biograph prefers to be artistic rather than commercial and lets a subject run what it will. Biograph, because of its tremendous popularity, can do that, but it will be some time before the other companies will follow suit, for the entire film business in this country is based on reel-length and not on footage. The time will come when a few hundred feet one way or the other will not matter, but not even the dawn of that day has come. The habit of custom is too strong.

Inquiries

NOTE—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

J. M.—It is possible, but seldom advisable, to use moonlight scenes. The speed of the action does not figure in the calculation. Most of the companies can make sea pictures if they want to take the trouble. Try Vitagraph, Reliance, Ramo, Selig, or almost any company on the coast.

MRS. E. H.—Miss Mabel Normand left the Biograph Company long before the picture you mention was made.

E. M.—The reference was to a story appearing three or four years ago. The Biograph Girl was first Miss Lawrence, and later, Miss Pickford. We did not give an account of Miss Pickford's farewell ball, as our society editor has not yet been appointed.

J. K.—For the love of Mike what makes you think that Miss Ruth Roland is a Bulgarian? Miss Roland appears weekly in the Kalem comedy releases.

RUBEENA—It would take a lawyer to explain to you whether Owen Moore is with Victor or not. It will probably wind up with a decision by a Justice. Mr. Moore is not appearing in Victor releases, but he cannot, apparently, work for another company. Western Essanay casts are not given out. Crane Wilbur has not left Pathe, and has not the slightest intention of dong so, though it was reported that he would make the change. Keep the script going.

MRS. O'N.—The Reliance cast was not published.

D. F. F.—You have Edwin Carewe correctly placed in "On the Threshhold." Virginia Clark was the orphan in the Edison with that title. Miss Mae Hotely was the psuedo widow, and Robert Burns the uncle, in "His Widow."

H. C. L.—No formal announcement has been made, but the Biograph players were supposed to leave Los Angeles for New York about the middle of June. Miss Grace Lewis is still with that company, so far as we know.

MRS. T.—Better make inquiry for your script. Kinemacolor can be shown on Mutual programs if a manager desires to. We lack that Thanhouser cast. Miss Grace Lewis was Cinderella in "Cinderella and the Boob." The M. P. Album has gone up in the air.

M. J.—The first thing you need in order to become a picture player, is a pull strong enough to swing an elephant by his tail. It is also required that you be able to act, but this is secondary to the pull. There are about a million stage-struck girls trying to break into pictures. What has the experience of a player's relatives to do with the ability of the player? No editor will read a hand written script.

M. T. and MRS. R.—We do not know when the player will reappear. This is a question box, not a press agent's column. Please make note of the fact.

J. L. W.—Miss Sweet has not left the Biograph. Mr. August has gone from Vitagraph back to Powers.

R. A. D.—Mr. Mace is not buying much stuff, but you might try. You seem to be making progress. Keep it up. What is worth while is worth working for. The other questions next week, perhaps. Technique should be ready along in July sometime.

P. J. D.—Sorry that we cannot reply to your question, but Universal casts are apparently not reported to the main office.

M. H.—Zelma, in "The River Pirates," was Miss Irene Boyle. Solax will not reveal identities. Perhaps the Broncho next week. Your name is by no means unusual. We have used it once or twice in fiction stories.

M. O. L.—Mr. Oppermann played the parts mentioned. The company was in Los Angeles, but will soon return to New York.

W. M. J.—Please note that you need a name and address, not merely an initial.

I. M. Y.—We do not know the name of the editor. Simply address the manuscript department. It doesn't help any to address scripts to the editor by name. If you have what they want it will sell just as well.

F. M. Y.—Lubin has the only company working in Atlantic City that we know of.

Waterproofing film.

THE Editor was recently favored by a call from Mr. W. A. Daniels, President National Water Proofing Film Company, with whom he had a most pleasant and enlightening conversation with regard to the water proofing of film. This process has now been available for more than three years, but, so Mr. Daniels claims, has never yet had a fair trial. The coating consists of celluloid which is applied to the emulsion side of the film, thus covering the emulsion with a coating impervious to water. Mr. Daniels makes no claim for the process except that it enables the owner of the film to scrub it with soap and water, thus keeping it clean. This, Mr. Daniels claims, the exchanges will not do, and there lies the chief difficulty. Knowing that one large film producer had used the process for a time, only to discontinue it, I asked him the point blank question, why? He freely admitted that the water proofing done by this producer was a failure, but said that the whole reason lay in the fact that not enough of the coating was used; that instead of using three pints for a certain length of film, the producer only used one pint, and that instead of placing a really competent man in charge of the process at the factory, they discharged the eighteen-dollar-a-week man, whom the National Water Proofing people left in charge when they completed the installation, substituting a twelve-dollar-man, who, no matter how good a brick-wheeler and hod-carrier he might have been, was not at all suited to be placed in charge of so important a process. I cannot, of course, vouch as to the truth of Mr. Daniels' charges in this respect, but, if they are true, then certainly the process did not have a fair trial in that factory. However, regardless of how excellently the manufacturer might waterproof his films, it amounts to practically nothing, unless the exchange follows it up by giving the film a periodical washing. As we all know, the rain marks in film are caused by minute scratches, both in the celluloid and the emulsion, which fill up with dirt. We all know that if the dirt could be kept entirely out of these scratches, they would not show on the screen. The National Waterproof Company has devised a machine by which the exchange men can wash 1,000 feet of film in eight minutes. I asked Mr. Daniels this question: "What is your explanation of the reason why your process is not in general use? Why don't the manufacturers waterproof the film, and the exchanges wash them once a week in the general interest of the business?" His reply: "The only explanation I can offer is that they are making so much money, as it is, by careless, slip-shod methods, that they do not want to stop to bother with a process of this kind. They will, however, bother with it later on, and be only too glad to."

Viewing the matter up one side and down the other, I am inclined to believe that the waterproofing process would be a success if it were properly applied, which would, of course, include both a sufficiently heavy coating of the waterproofing and the washing of the film after a certain number of days' use. One of the objections has been that operators did not understand how to make a patch with this treated film. They would wet the stub end as usual, and find that, of course, moisture had no effect in softening the emulsion so that it could easily be scraped off. They then discovered that a patch could be made without scraping at all, since the coating is itself celluloid, and they proceeded to do it thus; but that made a very poor patch, and was not at all satisfactory. The whole secret in patching waterproof film lies in having a perfectly sharp knife, or tool of some kind, to scrape with and then scraping the coating and emulsion off without wetting. This takes a little more care and elbow grease, but it is very easy to do, provided you use a sharp instrument. You cannot scrape waterproof film with a dull knife. Mr. Daniels impresses me as a man who thoroughly believes in his process, and I am myself, as I before said, pretty thoroughly convinced that his belief is well founded. If exhibitors would demand, and demand strenuously, that the rain marks be eliminated from their films, explaining to the exchanges that a proper waterproofing and weekly scrubbing of the film would eliminate the objectionable rain, they could get it done; but until the exhibitor himself demands the elimination of rain marks, you can bet your everlasting suspenders we will have rain marks with us.

Oriental Film Rental Houses.

Pathe Freres inform us officially as follows:

> In Shanghai, the Compagnie Cine-Chine, is the representative of Pathe Freres and rents films, we believe. In Tokio, Pathe Freres rent films, and also in Singapore and Calcutta. In Hong Kong, we believe, there is a branch office of the Compagnie Cine-Chine.

For all of which information we respectfully extend our thanks to Pathe Freres.

An Error.

Mr. Gortz calls attention to a mis-print in the handbook, as follows:

> I note in your very valuable handbook that, in describing the Hallberg 200 volt economizer, page 160, a misprint appears. It reads: "and two terminals for 220 volts," instead of "200 volts," as it should be. I have no doubt this error would confuse or perplex some users of the book, therefore, I take the liberty of calling attention to it.

The brother is correct and we thank him for the trouble he has taken. The error occurs at the beginning of line 13 on page 160. Owners of the book should make a pencil correction, changing the 220 to 200.

Wrong.

From Colorado comes a copy of the Isis News, a four page, neatly gotten up paper, devoted to a certain theater in a certain city in that state. From it I clipped the following very interesting piece of mis-information:

> You have become so used to having us do things first and better than anybody else that you will not be much surprised to know that we have installed a motor to run the picture machine.
>
> At first thought you would think we did this to save the arm of the operator, who ordinarily in most picture houses has to stand and grind a crank steadily to throw the pictures on the screen. Of course he gets tired doing it, but he also gets used to the crank motion. But it was not any desire to be easy on the operator that caused us to install the motor to run our picture machine. The only idea we had was to get rid of the flicker that is inevitable when the operation of the pictures is left to human hands. No matter how experienced an operator may be it is a physical impossibility to prevent slight variation in the pictures. The machine doesn't get tired and all it knows is to turn at the same rate of speed all day long. Consequently the pictures thrown on the screen for you to see are steadier and clearer.
> Tonight when you come to the show note how steady and pretty and clear the pictures show.

For the benefit of the manager of this theater, allow me to say that running a film through at unvarying speed is one of the things which go to make up poor projection. I happen to know that the operator of this theater has a copy of the handbook. I would, therefore, advise the manager to read page 319; particularly the first paragraph of "Speed at Which the Film Is Run." I would also advise him that, while under certain conditions the somewhat jerky method of applying power by hand will develop travel ghost, still, the motor drive has nothing to do with "flicker."

In Error.

Lima, Ohio, writes:

> Noticed in May 17th issue that one of the Canadian brothers is in trouble. I think I can help him. He is using a compensarc on 110 volt, d.c. I would advise him to remove the compensarc and connect through a high amperage rheostat, as he does not need a compensarc on d.c. If his current is unsteady, let him try a converter and his compensarc. Answering Mr. Frank Malcolm, Pomeroy, Washington, who is having trouble with a ghost in his titles, I think it can be remedied by the following: (1) Try a two-blade shutter, of Edison make; being sure to set same as near the lens as possible. (2) Look carefully at title of film and see if it has darker spots than the picture. Some titles are made very cloudy, causing spots very much like a ghost to appear on the screen. (3) Make sure that the spot is centered on the aperture; also try changing the set of your carbons.

Plainly Lima is not familiar with the fact that there is a d.c. compensarc, which is, in fact, a motor generator set; therefore he is in error. As to the ghost, the instruction Lima set forth probably is designed to cover travel ghost. If he is instructing Pomeroy how to remedy a blue spot on his curtain, then he is wrong in this also. However, we thank him for submitting his solution, even though it is not the right one. It is often through mistakes that we learn.

Already Described.

Mr. Carol Whittaker, Willoughby, Ohio, writes, describing his method of arranging his rewinder table, which is to cut a hole about 3 x 3 inches through the table, over which he places a piece of plate-glass, with a tin box underneath, containing an electric lamp, all of which has been both described and illustrated in the department long ago, and is set forth in the handbook, page 373; therefore, we could not consume space in a detailed description at this time.

He Is Correct.

Mr. C. W. Ten Eyck, Auburn, New York, makes the following remarks:

> I am contemplating opening a picture house this fall, therefore am ordering the Handbook. In my estimation, the manager, owner, or whatever he may term himself, is not equipped for the job unless he thoroughly understands the business, including the projection of the picture which, after all, is the principal thing upon which the success or failure of a theater depends. Some managers know how to sell tickets, provided some one lays down the price, but that is about all they do know. I have no questions to ask at this time, but you may depend upon me to furnish my share when I get to be one of the bunch next fall.

Come on in, brother Ten Eyck, the water is fine. You are perfectly correct. The manager should understand the business from the front of the sidewalk to the middle of the alley at the rear. He does not necessarily have to be a practical operator, but he should, by all means, have sufficient knowledge to enable him to judge the work of his operator, and tell whether he is delivering the goods in the best possible way or not.

South Carolina requests the following information:

> We are remodeling our theater and would appreciate your answer to the following: We now have a 65 foot throw, but will move the operating room three feet farther back, making it 68. What, if any, difference will there be in the size of the picture? Would like to see a reply in following issue.

You will find how to figure all such matters as this fully explained in the Handbook, a copy of which you should by all means have; price $2.50 from The Moving Picture World. It is a 430-page book. Your picture will be a little larger, though not much. I could not tell you exactly how much without knowing its present width. Divide the width of your picture, in inches, by the throw, in inches, and the result will be the spread of the light in inches, or fractions of an inch to each foot of throw, and this, multiplied by three, the additional throw you will have, gives the added width of your picture in inches. Its added height may be figured in the same way, taking the height of the picture instead of the width. It is useless for correspondents to expect a reply in the "following issue." If an addressed, stamped envelope is enclosed, I will mail carbon copy of the reply which will appear, but publication takes from one to three weeks from the time I receive the letter.

Condenser Size.

Mr. Clarence Bloomfield, Winchester, Kentucky, asks what condenser lenses he should use for an 86 foot throw, with a 13 foot picture, using d. c. Says he is coming to New York this summer to see what kind of pictures we have up here. Wants to know how to measure condenser lenses. Two 7½ condensers ought to meet his requirements. As to measuring lenses, on pages 356 to 364 of the Handbook he will find rules for measuring lenses of all kinds. Also he will there be told something of the theoretical action of lenses and how to line the optical system of his machine, as well as many other things he ought to know. The price of the book is $2.50, from The Moving Picture World. Better try and be in New York during Convention week, July 7 to 12.

Practical Test.

Miss Zoelia Boyle and her sister, New York City, are, by inheritance from their father, owners of a metal device, designed to supersede the condensing lens. This was mentioned in the Department something like a year ago, at which time the writer was given a practical demonstration of the device. Unquestionably, so far as that particular demonstration was concerned, it delivered the goods optically. The light was as beautiful as I have ever seen thrown on the screen. The Misses Boyle have now asked me to witness another demonstration. This I have not refused to do, but have suggested that, inasmuch as I have already looked at the operation of the contrivance and have seen its optical possibilities, a better plan now would be to place this device in several theaters, and there let it remain for a period of say a month, by which time it will be determined whether or not (a) the ordinary operator can successfully handle it and secure practical results on the screen. (b) Whether the device will stand up to the work under actual working conditions. If these tests are favorable, I certainly would be inclined to consider the apparatus as a great improvement over condenser lenses and would predict for it a large future. But first, it must be tried out in actual practice, and that is the kind of demonstration that the Misses Boyle should provide.

From Vancouver.

Mr. L. M. Potter, Vancouver, British Columbia, contributes the following interesting letter:

> Not seeing any news from this corner of the earth, I have concluded to send in some. We have about twenty picture theaters here, one of them using Kinemacolor, and three or four vaudeville houses. Projection is, for the most part, very good. Ninety-five per cent. of the houses use motor-generator sets, since there is no d. c. service here. There is also one mercury arc rectifier and one rotary converter in the city. Our city law prohibits motor drive. I am using an Edison Model B on a 95 foot throw. Have a Canadian General Electric, 5 k. w. motor generator set, delivering 40 amperes at 125 volts. The motor is a 220 volt a. c. induction, of 8 h. p. Have been running about two years without trouble of any kind. I find the motor-generator to be the only system. Have not broken a single condenser since we started two years ago. If the brothers will pull their lamp back from the condensors and open their lamphouse door before striking an arc, and try to avoid any direct draughts, they will have less condenser breakage.

Pulling the lamp back and opening the lamphouse door before striking the arc simply means that you heat the condenser slowly. This, however, would not be allowed in most of our cities, since the usual requirement is that the lamphouse be kept tightly closed all the time the arc is burning. I am going to Seattle to the convention. I may, or may not, find time to visit Vancouver. I should certainly like to at any rate, but time is valuable, and I will not have much of it to spare.

Proposed Condenser Shield.

Mr. Harry Hill, Grand Theater, Lebanon, Ohio, encloses $2.50 for the new Handbook, saying:

> We have splendid projection here in Lebanon, as good as can be found anywhere in the country, I think. I am working on a shield for protecting the condenser when opening the lamphouse door. As soon as completed will send it to you for inspection.

A picture sent by Mr. Hill shows a very neat front and an interior of the usual storeroom theater type. We shall be pleased to have the opportunity of examining the device when completed, friend Hill. Glad to have good report as to projection.

Announcement Slide Coating, Etc.

Oklahoma encloses money for Handbook, and says:

> I also enclose a sample of scratch slide made with plain white Alabastine. I have tried several kinds of slide coating but have never found anything to compare with it. Am also sending a novel slide holder for announcement slides. They can be fastened in a row by the machine, and labeled on blank line so that an operator will not have to dig through a whole stack of slides to get the one he wants. I have been trying to get the operators in this town and two other adjacent small cities to organize. We can get seven or eight operators in the combined towns who have been working their present positions for over a year. Do you think we could get a charter?

Neither the slide nor the slide holder have arrived, Oklahoma. Send them along. You are a long ways from getting one of the first thousand Handbooks. If they sold that slow, I would not feel like ever bothering to get out another. I will request President Shay to communicate with you regarding the matter of organization. Later: The slide coating looks O. K. The holder is excellent.

Fine Operating Room.

Mr. Sprague Green, Manager the Jefferson Theater, Fort Wayne, Indiana, sends accompanying photograph of their operating room, and writes:

> Our operating room is 31 feet long, 10 feet wide and 8 feet high, with two ten-inch star ventilators in the ceiling. The equipment consists of two Power's Six A machines and a Fort Wayne spot light. Our throw is 127 feet 6 inches, with a 16 foot picture, and I want to say that my operators are putting on the clearest and brightest pictures in the U. S. A. The floor of the operating room is concrete, 14 inches thick, and the front wall is 12 inch brick with an 8 inch terra-cotta back wall.

Your operating room is certainly a credit to the house, neighbor Green, though I am afraid that those ventilators will not prove sufficient to carry off all the smoke and gas of a film fire, should you be so unfortunate as to have one. I would also suggest that you arrange your fire shutter as per the illustration on page 78 of the Handbook, and thus have a really fireproof operating room. Your claims as to your projection are pretty strong. Hope the facts bear them out.

Wants Another One.

Mr. E. G. Henson, who, according to his letterhead, is sole owner, manager, press agent, musical director, head cashier, bill poster and janitor of the new Opera House, Charlestown, West Virginia, converses thusly:

> Enclosed find check for another Handbook. My other one I let a friend have, and no one in the picture business should be without a copy of that book; therefore this second order. My house has a seating capacity of 600, playing to the very best class of people every night, except Sundays. I am using a real orchestra of eight pieces, featuring a musical program thirty minutes before my first show. "Pictures only" is my motto, vaudeville here having had its day. My operating room is the "real place," as it should be in every moving picture theater. If you are all O. K. there, then your projection is what it should be. Ten years running a picture theater in one town, and still going, means that my patrons are pleased nightly, and cry for more. Time and again I noticed that in the department you explained the different makes of machines now used in theaters. But you have never said a word about the machine first used, though you know all about it. I mean the old spool machine where you could run all day and never rewind. Tell them about it some time.

I presume you mean the old "spool-bank" machine. No, I could not take up space describing that projector, because it is no longer in use, unless, on some special occasion, for some reason or other, the description fitted in just right. You are perfectly correct in saying that the operating room is the main spring of the moving picture theater.

Perfectly Right.

In a personal letter from a man who was a delegate to the last I. A. T. S. E. Convention, the following sentence appears:

> Regarding your invitation to unions and individuals to discuss proposed convention action through the department, I hope there will be some men broad-minded enough to take advantage of this proposition now, when it can do some good, and not get into the same mess they did last year, when what a delegate wanted was for himself only, and the others did not know enough about it to vote intelligently on his proposition, nor was there time, there at the convention, to study the matter.

The brother has put the whole matter in a nutshell. That is precisely my idea. The discussion of these matters will, as I before pointed out, enable delegates to go to the convention with an intelligent idea of the things they are going to be called upon to deal with. I have myself been delegated to many labor conventions and I can tell you, positively, that the best action cannot and will not be had without exactly this kind of pre-convention discussion.

De Costa Vindicated.

Some time ago very grave charges were made in public print against El De Costa, President of Branch No. 2, Local Union No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., New York City. In view of the seriousness of these charges, and in view of the fact that they were made publicly, and in view of the further fact that they were made by avowed enemies of No. 35, the Editor of this Department introduced a resolution requesting the Joint Executive Board of Branches 1 and 2, Local Union No. 35, to thoroughly investigate these charges and report its findings to the Union. This has been done. De Costa produced witnesses in the persons of local and International officers of the organization whom he was supposed to have wronged, and who testified that the charges were groundless, and that De Costa was not in the bad graces of their organization. He further produced evidence that at the time he was accused of acting as strike breaker, no strike had been officially declared, and that as soon as it was declared he ceased work. The finding of the executive board, composed of an equal number of members of Branches No. 1 and No. 2 of Local Union No. 35, gives De Costa a full exoneration.

Officers Elected.

Branch No. 2, Local Union No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., New York City, held its annual election recently, with the following result: President, Joseph Basson; Vice-President, Simon Terr; Recording Secretary, J. R. Gibbs; Financial Secretary, Gus Durkin; Business Agent, Tom Costello; Delegate to the Convention, F. H. Richardson.

For Pre-Convention Discussion.

The Motion Picture Operators of Sherman and Denison, Texas, send in the following signed communication:

> We, the moving picture projecting machine operators of Sherman and Denison, Texas, holding working cards in the I. A. T. S. E., Stage Hands' Local 280, feel it our duty to ask that one or two propositions be laid before the operators for discussion, and that they be brought before the Seattle Convention. In the first place, in the smaller towns and cities where there are eight or more moving picture operators, we believe they should be granted either a provisional or a full and direct charter, and that moving picture operator locals ought to be given the same territorial jurisdiction accorded stage hand locals, so that operators may have a chance to join a M. P. O. local. You will find that, almost invariably, where operators are holding cards in stage hand locals, the operators and stage hands do considerable squabbling amongst themselves, and that the stage hands attempt to dictate to the operators what they shall do and what they shall not do—a thing the operators are by no means inclined to stand for, since, as a general proposition, stage hands know very little or nothing at all about the needs of the moving picture operator. Then, too, there is another serious objection to allowing stage hand locals to take in operators, viz.: in smaller cities and towns where there is a stage hand local they, as a rule, are inclined to take in every crank turner who comes along, with very little regard to the items of ability and experience, or much of anything else except ability to pay the initiation fee. By this policy, many incompetent operators get into the I. A. T. S. E., and then, in course of time, the operators have them on their hands; and what are they going to do with them? He gets his traveling card in due course and goes where there is a M. P. local expecting to be put to work, but he lacks ability to hold a position and merely succeeds in bringing discredit on the organization. We, the moving picture operators of Sherman and Denison, Texas, have had experience with this identical proposition, and lay it before you as we have found it. We trust that every M. P. local in the United States and Canada will send their delegate to Seattle, instructed to fight for something that will be of particular benefit to operators. The stage hands will look after their end—be sure of that, but anything we want we will have to fight for, which is, of course, after all, but natural. If our International President will but stop and consider for a moment the fact that there are between 15,000 and 20,000 operators, and that those now in the organization pay the same dues and the same per capita tax as the stage hands, he will see that the wise policy for the stage hands to pursue would be to allow the operators everything that is just and right. He will see that the operators have the right to demand protection and support, and that it must be granted to them, else the future holds trouble for the stage hands. Just merely holding cards in the organization isn't sufficient to satisfy the operators. In this, we refer not so much to operators in large cities, as to those in the small cities and towns. And now, another thing. We believe that some of the International officers, such as vice-presidents, ought to be filled by operators. We need a portion of operator-officers to look after the operators' interests. What does a vice-president, who has worked on a stage all his life, know about the practical needs and the desires of the moving picture operator? Some one may ask where are you going to find capable operator candidates for these offices? Well, we think that a very feeble searchlight would discover several of them. And now, if some brother thinks we are wrong, let him come forth with an axe, not a hammer, and blaze a trial leading to better conditions. We assure him, if his trail is better than ours, we will cheerfully follow it. We still believe, as California does, that if an operator emigrates to some other city to find work, he ought to and must serve his six months' apprenticeship. We believe this is the only thing that will keep the journeyman and crank turner from constantly chasing around the country. The $15 a week man, to whom brother Richardson very rightfully objects, will receive more money as soon as he demonstrates superior ability. The first signer to this communication has been working at the Jewel Theater, Sherman, Texas, for three years. He tries to give heed to all those points which go to make up good projection and that is what every operator should do. In closing, we repeat, every small town where there are eight or more moving picture operators should be granted either a provisional or a full and direct M. P. M. O. charter and should be granted well-defined territorial jurisdiction so that every operator in the country may have the opportunity of joining an M. P. M. O. local. We wish you all a most pleasant and prosperous time at the Convention and trust we shall all be benefited by your work. Signed, The M. P. M. O. of Sherman and Denison; J. B. Day, Operator Jewel Theater; James Shipton, Operator King Theater; Red. E. Ferguson, Operator Grand Theater; Billy H. Russell, Operator Sullivan Theater; W. R. Cook, Operator Majestic Theater; J. L. McHanson, Operator Arcade Theater; John Russell, Operator Idle Hour Theater; Roger Fleming, Operator Brookstone Theater.

Every one of the letters so far received has in one way or another, backed the editor up in his contention that the present provisions for taking in or organizing the operators are inadequate. Personally, I don't know exactly what to say, or what to advocate. There are objections to extending the jurisdiction of a union too widely. There are also objections, and very valid objections, to mixed locals of operators and stage hands. It is a fact that there is usually more or less (emphasis on the more) squabbling between the stage hands and operators in locals of this kind; also there is usually more or less scrapping when they are in separate locals. This brother says that the stage hands want to dominate. Well now, let's be honest in the matter, brother, and admit that both sides want to dominate. That's just about the bald-headed truth of it, and it is human nature that it should be thus. Just exactly what would constitute the best possible action in this matter it is, I think, exceedingly difficult to say. One thing, however, I am quite sure of, and that is that the present number required to hold a direct charter should be reduced, though how much, I am not prepared to say. I think that ten or twelve would certainly be low enough. I don't know of any large objection to the provisional charter. Of course there are added restrictions connected with this kind of charter, and this is very naturally objected to by men who pay the same dues as those fortunate enough to belong to a local having a direct charter. At any rate, however, this discussion is well calculated to set the boys thinking and to send delegates to Seattle better prepared to deal intelligently with the whole matter.

From Australia.

Mr. Ray G. Harper, Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, contributes the following:

> I have been reading The Moving Picture World for some months, off and on, but, up to the present, have been unable to get it regularly. I have just arranged to secure the magazine every week from now on. First of all, I wish to thank you for publishing so many useful hints in the Projection Department. I have been operating four years. Have handled the Urban 1912, the Pathe, the English Gaumont and the Power's Six. Am now working an open air show, the Tivoli Picture Theater, Hamilton, Brisbane, where I have a 1913 Pathe. I project a 30 foot picture and use 55 amperes of 110 volt, d. c. We generate our own power with a 22 B. H. P. (break horse power—Ed) Housley Gas Engine, and a British General Electric Generator of 85 ampere capacity. We show three nights per week, for which I receive one sovereign per night. If it happens to be wet there is no show; also no pay. We use international service, which includes all leading makes, both Association and Independent. Lately I have run several very dark Essanay pictures. Do not know what the cause is, but the fault certainly lies with the manufacturer. I am working on a circuit with five other theaters, and, in consequence of this, Essanays are very nearly being tabooed. Projection here is good. We are trying to form a union, but the boys are very slow. Will you kindly advise me, through the Department, of the price of your Handbook, posted to me here?

After I got your letter all dictated, friend Harper, I noticed your request that I use the non de plume "Kangaroo, Australia." I see no earthly reason for this. There is absolutely nothing in your letter which can injure you in any possible way; therefore, at the risk of offending you, I am using your name. The price of the Handbook is $2.50. It will be mailed to you on receipt of that sum. I suppose you are using a ¾ upper carbon, but even so, I would not imagine you would get a very brilliant illumination on a 30 foot picture, with 55 amperes, d. c.; in fact, you could not possibly get a brilliant illumination on a 30 foot picture—the thing simply could not be done, though you may secure a fairly good picture. I understand the Australian practice is to use a very large picture. Will you please explain to me the why and wherefore of this? The magnification of defects in the film is so enormous that I would not consider a 30 foot picture as being at all desirable. As to the dark films, that matter is respectfully referred to the Essanay people for their consideration. It has been mentioned once or twice by American operators.

"THE GYPSY'S BRAND" (Kalem), June 14.—This none too logical story hardly can be said to be interesting. It turns on the significance of a brand placed on the forehead of a gypsy girl by her band as a punishment for falling in love with a man outside the circle. This indicated that for the rest of her life she was to be the slave of her fellow-gypsies. She elopes with her lover, a doctor, who removes the laceration. There are other happenings, but there is not one real situation in the picture.

"DEATH'S MARATHON" (Biograph), June 14.—Two men and a woman—and the woman, as only too often happens, selects the wrong man. The story will interest all the way, and will do so solely on account of its treatment. This is skillful, artistic. Also there are charming backgrounds, well photographed. There is a strong climax—with an orthodox Griffithian suspense. A husband, tired of the "monotony of married life," has gambled and lost; he has embezzled and again lost. His old friend and office associate has replaced the stolen money and tried to find him to tell him all is not lost. The husband, however, has gone to the office, called his wife on the 'phone and told her of his intention to kill himself. The searching friend tells the wife to hold him at the other end until he can reach him. The baby is called to the receiver and lends a touch of comedy to a tense situation when it examines the transmitter. The husband kills himself just before the arrival of his friend. Blanche Sweet plays the wife. Her work, especially in the final scenes, is splendid. In following her none will be more interested than those who have to do with the making of pictures.

"THE WINE OF MADNESS" (Lubin), June 14.—Another gypsy story, an unpleasant one, melodramatic. A man buys ground for an orange grove, leaving his wife in the North until he gets settled. In dynamiting a stump he is injured. A gypsy girl nurses him. The two fall in love. When the man finally decides to return to his wife he is given a drink brewed from loco weeds. He is crazed. The wife looks him up and finds him in this condition. The gypsy girl is killed by her former lover. This is not entertainment.

"THE RANCH FEUD" (Essanay), June 14.—A Broncho Billy of the usual type, made interesting by reason of the presence of an old-time member of the same company—Arthur Mackley.

"FOR MAYOR—BESS SMITH" (Patheplay), June 14.—A comedy with several good situations. It is a suffragette tangle; the son of the male incumbent falls in love with the daughter of the widow contesting the mayoralty. The story is logically told. The best of the laughter comes at the finish. There is a good cast and the picture is well put on. The types of the minor politicians are especially well selected.

"DOES ADVERTISING PAY?" (Vitagraph), June 14.—Yes, it does; and it makes a bunch of fun for everybody as well. Wallie Van is the leader in the funmaking, the working basis for which was provided by James Oliver Curwood, who certainly has turned out a most amusing script. Larry Trimble produces the picture.

"APPLES OF SODOM" (Edison), June 14.—Charles Arthur, the former Lubin player, does good work in this drama, produced by George A. Lessey. The story will hold, especially during the last half of the film, where there are dramatic situations competently handled. Robert Brower is as usual, excellent in his characterization, in this picture that of a theatrical manager. Barry O'Moore and Mrs. Bechtel also contribute to the success of the drama.

"HER ROYAL HIGHNESS" (Edison), June 16.—Here is a pretty story. It is a simple tale of a very young princess who tired of the pomp surrounding her station and just "ran away" in search of companionship more congenial, even if less notable. She finds two peasant children and gets right down in the dirt with them and makes mud pies. More than that, she takes them to the palace and entertains them. Leonie Flugrath takes well the role of the princess, and she is supported by a competent cast.

"SILVER CIGARETTE CASE" (Vitagraph), June 16.—Van Dyke Brooke produces a good picture, one that will interest all the way. Much attention is paid to interiors. Leo Delaney and Rosemary Theby have the leads. Others in the cast are Robert Gaillord, Harry Northrup, Norma Talmadge and the director.

"THE SWITCH TOWER" (Biograph), June 16.—There is a human touch in the portrayal of this story of a switchman and his family—a wife and son. Claire McDowell has the role of a mother who has troubles with a young son as mischievous as the every-day youngster. Many of the scenes are laid in and about a real switch tower; they are effective. It will strike some as strange that a band of counterfeiters would ply their trade in a building that can be seen through a glass from a switch tower. Aside from this, however, the story is convincing; certainly it is interesting. The youngster deserves a word of praise; not only is his work good, also he furnishes a bit of comedy.

"BOB BUILDS A BOAT" (Lubin), June 16.—Another story of the men who built a boat in a cellar and who made the boat bigger than the door was wide. Of course, it was necessary to pull down some of the "masonry," which was done in this case. There was one bit of comedy in the picture, and that was in a title. Three men who went to sea in the new craft got a ducking. They are shown in a row soaking their feet. The title is "Six Feet Under Water."

"SILENCE FOR SILENCE" (Lubin), June 16.—On the same reel is this longer comedy. There are several good laughs in it. The deacon who is snap-shotted doing innocent things on a Sunday but which look unexplainable in a picture, furnishes the fun. He does good work.

"WHEN LILLIAN WAS LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD" (Selig), June 16.—Baby Lillian Wade has the honors in this picture; she earns them by her most interesting work. The baby insists on looking at the story of Little Red Riding Hood and does so in spite of her parent's prohibition. When she sleeps she dreams that she is the heroine of the story. There is a fine dissolving picture when the man portraying the wolf grabs baby. Lillian awakes with a scream and lands on the floor.

"SHOOTING THE RAPIDS OF THE PAGSANJAN RIVER IN THE PHILIPPINES" (Selig), June 16.—On the same reel is this well-photographed bit.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 25."—There are interesting pictures in this number, among them a balloon race in Germany, a bit of the great automobile race on the Indianapolis Speedway, the ceremonies attending the reinterment of the body of Barbara Frietchie, which were impressive; views of a baseball game with the titles in straight English and devoid of the abominable sporting page slang, and also views of Pathe's leading man, the Kaiser. It must be admitted he's a good actor.

"THE WHEEL OF DEATH" (Kalem), June 16.—A melodrama that will hold, especially in the latter part, where the mate of the vessel is bound to the paddle of the old stern-wheeler.

"GOVERNOR JOHNSON, OF CALIFORNIA" (Kalem), June 16.—On the same reel is this short picture of a man much in the public eye recently. Conversing with the Governor is Jane Wolfe, the popular Kalem player.

"ALONE IN THE JUNGLE" (Selig), June 14.—A picture that, in the planning of the story, in the kind of action and also in the kind of backgrounds, resembles a recent Selig offering "The Wamba." It is a bit better in construction; but far more sensational. The photography is of somewhat better quality in most of the scenes; there are a few that are not so well taken. Bessie Eyton plays the heroine and it is she who is alone in the jungle; the haunt, as we are shown, of lions and a leopard. She had been down the river's bend saying good-bye to her lover, played by Thomas Santschi and, coming back has left her horse. A lioness had been shot (we are shown the death of this rather tame animal), on the river bank near where she leaves her horse. A villainous half-breed is also in the neighborhood. He attacks her while she is fondling a lion's cub (fine scenes) and she thrashes him well for it. A lion now attacks her horse and we see him mauling its carcass. She is found just in time; is under the paws of a lion which has been shot through the bush before we see it. The backgrounds are interesting and suggest Africa.

"THE GOVERNOR'S DOUBLE" (Patheplay), June 13.—A picture with a big, fresh story that is very romantic. Paul Panzer plays a double role in which the illusion is absolutely perfect, due to astonishingly effective camera work. His role makes him appear as the Governor who, to investigate prison conditions, has himself "sent up" by a friend, a judge, who is to serve a habeas corpus writ at the end of two weeks. It also makes him appear as a prisoner whom he has just pardoned. The Governor is to be married in about six weeks and his pretty fiancee goes to the judge, as her friend, to beg him to help find the Governor. While writing the habeas corpus paper he falls dead and, now, no one knows where the Governor is; he's in jail, where they think him mad and the pardoned man takes his place. The scenes show care and have much realism; the characters, naturally set forth by gesture and facial expression, have been fortunately chosen. There is also a bigness to many of the backgrounds (big buildings, finely appointed rooms, etc.), that conveys a sense of limitless freedom which helps the story. The players do fairly well; but Paul Panzer, in all of his work, but especially in his comedy, does splendidly. The offering contains much of beauty as well as thrilling situations. It is well photographed.

"A REGIMENT OF TWO" (Vitagraph), June 11.—This two-reel farce made the biggest hit in many months; it is the kind of farce that fills the house with laughter and its quality lasts through all of both reels. The fun does not wholly depend on the acting; but the work of the players has enriched it and given some of the best things in it. The regiment of two is made up of Harry Morey and Sydney Drew, two husbands who have told their wives that they have joined the noble Thirteenth. It gives them one "drill" night every week. The Thirteenth is called to the front and they get a whole month's vacation; but, of course, they have to start off in uniforms, and such uniforms! The going out and the coming home of these two are screams. The home folks do not pass the time without adventures either, including a burst water pipe in the kitchen and its concomitant flood. There's an English lord, we don't know who plays the role, but he is a thoroughly competent comedian and, equally with Edith Storey, makes one long scene as funny as it is artistic. The picture is a very true feature, there is no doubt of that.

"BEHIND A MASK" (Eclipse), June 11.—An effective offering telling a clear and, what is more to the point, interesting story. We hardly need to add that it is fresh. The actors hold down what they have to do with ease, which is also refreshing. The camera work is not of the best, but it is clear enough to serve its purpose. A substantial offering.

"ALONG THE NILE" (Edison), June 13.—This is easily the best picture of Egyptian scenes from the viewpoint of general interest that this reviewer has seen. It is better than most topical travel pictures. The photography is not noteworthy, yet fairly clear; but the things that the camera man has chosen to picture show a sense of what was wanted and are fresh as well as full of instruction. We have views of the river's mirror-waters and of temples; but, with these, there are more that is usually interesting, agricultural scenes, household scenes with other views of the day's work, caught in passing. We enjoyed it.

"BROUGHT TO BAY" (Kalem), June 13.—We watched this picture closely, but are unable to tell the story clearly. It has some dandy views of out-doors in a wide land and a glorious picture of a big herd of horses seen over a rounded meadow toward hazy mountains.

"ATHLETICS IN FRANCE" (Patheplay), June 13.—Gymnastics are of interest just now and this offering should have a warm welcome. There are many fine things in it, including a picture, full of grace, of young girls of a class in Grecian calesthenics. Besides school children, we are shown the Danish gymnasts, firemen at drill and marines exercising. The photography is very clear.

"PLACES OF INTEREST IN COLORADO" (Patheplay), June 13.—The photography of this film is only so so. It gives views of statues in the State and some grand scenes taken in the Royal Gorge.

"AN INFERNAL TANGLE" (Vitagraph), June 13.—This offering has a very fair story, though it is not at all great, and it has been well worked up. The acting has its moments of weakness; but shows competance. On the whole, it is one of the two best dramatic regular releases today. There is jealousy between two Italian families in the flats. Some money left by a charitable woman, thieving, a gun man and a rescue by the husband upstairs, bring this jealousy to white heat and two free fights are on. It was written by Roy F. Hanaford and produced by William Humphrey, and the producer with Rose Tapley, plays one couple, while S. Rankin Drew with Dorothy Kelly, the other. Louise Deaudet plays the charitable woman.

"THE MYSTERIOUS STRANGER" (Essanay), June 13.—This picture, though not very skillfully planned, seems to us to be the second best story of today; it deals with hypnotism as means of bringing love for his wife back into the heart of a man whom too much business has worried into brutality. One hopes for scientific stories when hypnotism is used, and this is far from being such; but most people won't know it—perhaps. In fact, the offering stands on the good things in it; the acting, especially of E. H. Calvert, the business man. Bryant Washburn gives an interesting Mephistopheles-like touch to the hypnotist, "the mysterious stranger." Audiences will surely feel that it is not convincing, or else that love is not worth while. The sets and photography are commendable.

"PAPITA'S DESTINY" (Lubin), June 13.—A conventional story with enough freshness to bring it among the three best stories of today. It was produced by F. J. Grandon, in the West, in Mexican backgrounds, and was written by Wallace Clifton. Papita (Clara Williams) has married a wealthy Mexican (Franklyn Hall), who ill treats her. She has two old-time lovers whom she tells of this. One is a cripple (Edgar Jones) and, having no hope himself, kills the husband and escapes into the desert to die, leaving her for the other (William Brunton). Emma Bell plays the girl's mother. The work of all these players is up to their usual mark. The photography is fair.

"THE JEALOUSY OF MIGUEL AND ISABELLA" (Selig), June 13.—A very melodramatic story by Cornelius Shea, and produced by William Duncan. It is clear, has horses galloping and a burning hut, from which the hero and heroine are rescued. The photography is not so clear as it ought to be. Myrtle Stedman plays an American girl who unintentionally comes between two Mexican lovers, Lester Cunio and Florence Dye. Myrtle's lover is William Duncan. When jealousy has got things started, the senorita's father (Rex de Rosselli) captures both American lovers and ties them up in the cabin and "accidentally" sets it on fire. They are rescued and then the villains are captured.

"BEAU CRUMMEL AND HIS BRIDE" (Edison), June 11.—A little burlesque comedy that has merit (plenty of it), but it will make enthusiastic those who compare it with what Edison has often done. It was made for the people and the people will probably find it very amusing. Beau Crummel (Arthur Houseman) has eloped with Elsie MacLeod, and they are needlessly afraid that papa (William Wadsworth) is going to make trouble. It is set in a hotel to which papa is bringing Elsie's grip, left behind. The queer characters are well acted and some of the situations are distinctly good. It gives plenty of broad humor with only a touch of roughness; it has been carefully set and is convincing enough to make many a laugh. The script by Mark Swan, has been produced by C. Jay Williams. The photography is clear.

"HIS LORDSHIP'S ROMANCE" (Patheplay), June 11.—A comedy that will be pleasing to many, though there are scenes that are not very effective. "His Lordship" is a glove clerk and has been fined for neglecting one customer to gaze dreamily at another, a young girl. He chances to encounter in the park, an elderly man who happens to be the girl's fiance, and is employed by him to assume a title, come to a garden party, be introduced to an unknown girl with the object of telling her how good and manly his patron is. Of course, it is the girl of his dreams. It has been very well written, and the sets are good as well as clearly photographed. The acting is very good, in part, though that scene where the girl comes to the glove counter to punish the youth is spoiled by the impossible way he acts. There is an advertisement in the picture of a well-known make of gloves.

"HIS HOUSE IN ORDER" (Vitagraph), June 11.—One is not sure, at times, whether this comedy drama by H. G. Williams, author, and Wilfred North, director, is not intended for a farce, so closely does it cut to the comically exaggerated in its endeavor to bring out the meaning of its situations. A widower (Robert Gailord) wants to marry again and goes calling on different women whom he knows. They are all too queer to be acceptable. Meanwhile, the servants at home, led by Kate Price, are having a jamboree, dressed in the clothes of the dead former mistress. The man's little girl with her governess (Julia S. Gordon) is up-stairs and both come down to stop the disturbance. At this point the man walks in. He soon marries the governess. It is well put on and clearly photographed.

"THE PAWNBROKER'S DAUGHTER" (Kalem), June 11.—The story in this picture is very slight and, except at its end, not dramatic. It shows how a pretty Jewess (Alice Joyce) has half fallen in love with a Gentile (Tom Moore), although she has another friend (Stephen Purdee) of her own religion whom her father (Robert Broderick) is anxious to have her marry. The story is turned so that Alice and her father are brought in contact with Tom and his parents, not very worthy people of fashion. Alice finds that she has nothing in common with Tom after all, and elopes with Stephen. Her note makes her father think she has married Tom and he has a sorry half hour till they come home. Robert Broderick's make-up and demeanor as the old pawnbroker are commendable, and the whole cast acts fairly naturally. It is a clearly photographed picture and makes what seems to be a fair offering.

"A ROSE OF MAY" (Selig), June 11.—In the backgrounds of this picture, which was taken in Florida, is a very romantic-looking forest and the photographs of it, with high-lights and shadows, are most effective and interesting. The story, measured by the average of today, makes a fair offering. It deals with a novelist (Jack Nelson) dressed most romantically, who wins a girl, called "a dream maid" (Edna Bunyea), by becoming both rich and famous in one year. His book, "The Rose of May," has been published anonymously by the house of which her father (Harry Lonsdale) is head, and not till the year is up does the father know that the boy has made good.

"THE STAR" (Essanay), June 11.—This offering hardly did itself justice, for it was interrupted for a few feet by a portion of an old picture; but we can safely commend it, from what we have seen, as a good offering. It is both fresh and amusing. It opens with a pretty scene in which we find a famous dancer (Ruth Hennessy) giving her farewell performance. We look through the wings to the stage. Clarence Inbad (John Steppling) appears and tries to meet the famous actress. The scene shifts to a cheap restaurant where the actress, in search of local color, has taken a job and Clarence comes in for luncheon. The outcome skillfully shows the quality of Clarence's admiration for the actress; for the clever woman makes him the butt of a practical joke that shows him up.

"THE PROFESSOR'S PREDICAMENT" (Lubin), June 12.—A farce with broad humor that made a great deal of laughter among an East Side audience. The professor is a temperance advocate and, following "the cause," he comes in contact not only with drunkeness, but with that which makes it. In a scrimmage with a barkeeper he loses his glasses and now he can't see and, smelling of liquor, he must walk as though he were drunk. The poor professor has a hard time.

"NEARLY IN MOURNING" (Lubin), June 12.—On the same reel, this farce also deals with hard drinking; it shows how a wild, married man is cured of wanting to go out on sprees. He thinks he has come near being burned to death. It is not so lively or amusing as the former. The author is Lawrence McCloskey, and the producer, Joseph Smiley. Clarence Elmer plays the husband, and Frankie Man, the wife. Both farces are fairly photographed. They make a fair offering.

"CINDERELLA'S GLOVES" (Essanay), June 12.—The story won't impress many because of poor construction. It fails to convince and the high lights and contrasts are not manipulated to be effective. Ruth Hennessy plays a poor niece of a rich dressmaker. She runs away to a ball masqued in a discarded Cinderella dress and leaves her gloves with a young man with whom she dances. Eleanor Blanchard plays her aunt and Dolores Cassinelli, her cousin. The photography is fair.

"THE FATE OF ELIZABETH" (Selig), June 12.—A farce with a book, called "The Fate of Elizabeth," as its center. The father (Edwin Wallock) and mother (Rose Evans) catch Adrienne Kroell reading the book and take it away from her. They try to snatch a bit of reading out of it themselves; but are ashamed to be caught. The book is dramatized and the show comes to town. We are shown what happens in the theater. It is clearly photographed and made some laughter; but the best laughs don't come from this kind of matter.

"THE ARTIST'S DREAM" (Patheplay), June 12.—A clever cartoon-story, written by J. R. Bray, whose work is well known and full of fun. In our judgment, it is the best offering among today's releases and surely it made the best hit with the audience here. The artist has drawn his cartoon with a dog (such as one would find in cartoons) asleep beside a cupboard on which, high up, is sitting a dish with a big sausage. The artist sleeps and the dog comes to life and manages to make away with the sausage. The comedy in the dog's actions is rich in laughter. The picture has the quality of the best series cartoons; but, given in almost perfect animation. it is infinitely better. A desirable offering.

"THE WELL" (Biograph), June 12.—A story of a lonely farm. Lionel Barrymore plays the farmer who has had the team harnessed to go to town with money. Claire McDonald plays his wife. Harry Carey plays a scheming farm hand who, with a helper, is digging a well for the farmer. He knows about the money, gets the farmer out, knocks him on the head and throws him down the unfinished well. Then he ties up the wife and, with his accomplice, drives away. The wife manages to get free and helps her husband out and they follow the criminals on horseback, coming up with them at a lonely shack where there is a struggle ending in the safe recapture of the money. All this is clear, dramatically clean-cut and effective. It is a picture that will hold strongly and is a good offering. The photography is not artistic, but is sufficiently clear to bring out the picture's punch.

"THE STOLEN CLAIM" (Melies), June 12.—A story of mining in Australia; it makes an offering full of interest. The characters are new; this means a great deal, though it seems to be very little. One gets very tired seeing a score of actors play the same conventional American prospector. The backgrounds are fresh, which also counts for a little. The story, in itself, is conventional with fresh minor incidents; is clearly told and acceptable. The photography is clear enough. The audience watched it closely.

"VIEWS OF SAMARANG" (Melies), June 12.—On the same reel with the story, this clearly photographed scenic will be very valuable to merchants if they see it. Samarang is one of the big commercial cities of Siam and is astonishing in its extent, in the kind of buildings and in the apparant size of its business. The picture seems to give a good idea of the city. An instructive offering, one that is well worth while.

"HIS TIRED UNCLE" (Vitagraph), June 12.—A picture in comedy vein for smiling rather for laughter. It gets over as strongly as its matter will allow, it being somewhat worldly-wise and cold, rather than sympathetic and human. The sets and the players are dignified. Uncle (John Bunny) is rich and has forbidden his nephew (Leo Delaney) to marry the widow (Rose Tapley), so Leo's friend (S. Rankin Drew) gives a house-party, inviting all concerned. Now uncle is always sleepy and, during the evening party, wants to find a place where he can drop off, but they won't let him. He falls into a doze in a chair in the widow's room and is found there. They make him think he has compromised the widow. Author, Henry Kaige; producer, Wilfrid North.

"CAPERS OF CUPID" (Vitagraph), June 12.—On the same reel is this, by the Western Company which, being broader, made more laughter in spite of the heavy photography. It is set in a park and is played by two couples and a tramp. One of the couples is black, one is white—the men have high hats, both the women have the same kind of parasols. The white couple have had a spat. The woman turns her back; the man leaves the seat which is taken by the tramp. The woman tries to "make up" without turning around and this astonishes the tramp. The woman runs to a black hat she sees and throws herself into its arms—it's the black man. All the changes are rung until all land in the station house where things are straightened out.

"A TOUR THROUGH TOURAINE" (Patheplay), June 17.—There is a quiet, restful effect about this travel film which is pleasing to the observer. Starting in an automobile, under wide, spreading trees, we move along over sunlit roads, past old chateaux, dating back as far as the Seventeenth Century. Passing along in our picture tour, we view ancient causeways in the valley of the River Loire. In seeing this film we get some of the choicest emotions of a journey through France, and at the same time save a great deal of money in making the trip.

"RHODES, ASIATIC TURKEY" (Patheplay), June 17.—A few picturesque glimpses of this interesting old city in connection with the above, completing a good scenic reel.

"OUT OF THE BEAST A MAN WAS BORN" (Lubin), June 17.—A film story more interesting for its splendid out-door setting and good photography than for the strength of its plot, which is elemental in character. In the opening scene we find the boy with a group of tramps, eating supper on the Arizona desert. The affection which springs up between the boy and Joe gets hold of the observer's sympathy. The boy splits wood and takes care of Joe when he is sick, and when the boy falls ill Joe begs him to get well and promises to reform. He keeps this promise and returns a pocketbook he has stolen. Later, he gets a railroad job and goes to work. Romaine Fielding appears as Joe and makes the character a convincing one.

"THE TWIN BROTHERS" (Edison), June 17.—August Phillips plays the double role of the twin brothers in this film and toward its close we have a literal example of a man shaking hands with himself. The plot is that of a good brother and a bad one in love with the same girl. The action is slow and not very convincing at times, particularly where Robert believes he has killed a man by striking him with his fist. We do not like the introduction of new characters in the middle of a story, by subtitle, as was done in this picture, as it breaks the illusion. The double exposure effects were well shown and it is in the various novel points that the main interest of the film centers.

"ANONYMOUS LOVE" (Essanay), June 17.—A pleasing comedy. with a few quiet laughs in it, in which Binks sends flowers and jewelry to Miss Lillie Brown, a colored girl, thinking the name was that of her mistress. The colored girl thinks the presents come from her dusky lover, Sam, whose stock immediately rises in her estimation. But Lillie is not so pleased when she is arrested for stealing jewelry. Binks and her mistress come to the rescue and it is here that Binks learns his error for the first time. Quite amusing.

"TAMING A TENDERFOOT" (Selig), June 17.—A Western comedy offering which arouses expectations it does not quite fulfill. Reckless Willie is sent West by his father to learn something of ranch life. He thinks he knows it all, but the cowboys soon convince him he doesn't. They dress up a young burro as a bear and play other pranks of the sort on Willie. In the end Willie gives up and returns to the East, which leaves the picture with a rather weak ending. The photography is good and the ranch scenes attractive.

"COMRADES" (Dragon), June 2.—A story opening at West Point, from which the hero, Charles Arthur, is expelled for taking leave without permission to pay a visit in the town. It continues at an army post where he has enlisted as a private soldier. He meets and becomes the rival of one of his old classmates and, on a showing of heroism, wins the daughter of the colonel in spite of the officer, his rival. It is one of those melodramatic pictures made to appeal to the general spectator with whom, when well made, as in this case, they find a ready welcome. It shows the touch of a director who knows military things.

"LEO'S LAST RESORT" (Imp), May 17.—Broad farce of the French sort. It will go well in some houses.

"HY MAYER" (Imp), May 17.—Very interesting cartoons, the drawing of which are shown in front of the camera. The reproduction of the cartoon of the Secretary of State of the United States with a padlock through his lips may please one element of picture goers, but certainly it will seriously offend just as many others. Mr. Mayer has been accustomed for many years to drawing pictures for a newspaper with political opinions. A newspaper has a perfect right to them. A film has absolutely no right to anything that approaches political opinions—entirely apart from the question as to the ethics of casting ridicule on the second highest officer in the United States Government.

"AT SHILOH" (Bison), July 5.—The first reel of this two-reel offering makes the strongest appeal. It varies the ordinary war story with fresh situations and clever incidents. We follow the young lieutenant and his escape from capture, through the girl's assistance, with much interest. The second reel is devoted largely to warfare of a sweeping sort. The plot becomes lost for a time in the spirited fighting. The photography is very good and the release is quite an attractive one altogether.

"ELSIE'S AUNT" (Powers), July 9.—Elsie places a dummy under her aunt's bed, much to the amusement of herself and girl schoolmates. Later, her lover impersonates the maiden lady and he and Elsie are married after a long chase. The story lacks freshness and the situations are not very amusing.

"THE WITCH" (Eclair), July 2.—A three-reel offering, depicting the days of witchcraft with great fidelity. Alec Francis does some notable character work in the part of the miserly Marsh; Mildred Bright, a newcomer in moving pictures, plays the part of the heroine with feeling and intelligence; Robert Frazer, Julia Stuart and Fred Truesdale also appear to advantage. The story is consistent and strongly presented. The costuming and settings are satisfactory throughout and the atmosphere of superstition and bigotry is well suggested. The story could have been told in two reels, but the interest is sustained throughout. The offering as a whole is a notable one and certain to please the average audience.

"THE JEALOUSY OF JANE" (Imp), June 16.—A comedy, with Jane Gail and Matt Moore in the leading parts, which works up into some genuinely funny situations. The wife, suspecting her husband of consorting with another woman while she is away, returns home unexpectedly and enters the house. The subsequent happenings make very good comedy, indeed, in fact, one of the best we have seen for some time. A desirable release.

"THE HUMAN STATUE" (Imp), June 21.—A rather interesting half reel, made in France, with Leo posing as a human statue after he has broken the original. His adventures wind up in the usual chase and are moderately amusing.

"FILMOGRAPHIC CARTOONS" (Imp), June 21.—More of Hy Mayer's clever cartoon work, dealing mostly with international subjects. This deft pen work is sure to prove appealing.

"WILL POWER" (Crystal), June 22.—This half reel, burlesquing hypnotism. contains a string of laughs. It succeeds very well for a short comedy and is well worth while.

"THE SMUGGLED LACES" (Crystal), June 22.—This, on same reel with above, concerns some laces smuggled through the custom house, the attending mixup containing some amusement.

"A STORY OF THE MEXICAN BORDER" (Frontier), June 19.—This Western drama contains one striking and dramatic situation, but it is not successful as a whole. The fore part of the story is hardly worth the time it takes to show it, and other shortcomings appear later. The den of the cattle rustlers was very picturesque.

"HIS MOTHER'S LOVE" (Imp), June 23.—The average observer of this picture will question the kind of mother love which tempts a woman to commit murder in order to obtain money for her poor son. The story in this is a very dramatic one, but we have seen it pictured in another form, much more effectively than it is done here. As it is presented here it holds the interest, but as a conception it is one that will excite criticism.

"WHEN LENA STRUCK NEW MEXICO" (Frontier), June 21.—A girl playing the part of a Swedish servant on a Western ranch is the chief character in this and succeeds in creating considerable amusement. Her misadventures, however, are not enough by themselves to make a very strong reel, and her work should have been bolstered up with a good plot to make it really effective. The photography is good.

"FORTUNE'S PET" (Eclair). June 18.—A two-reel society story, which has just enough of the spirit of adventure about it to hold the interest well, in spite of the fact that some of the incidents, such as the boat race, were not well handled. The young man leaves his club determined to earn the sum of $10,000 within one year. He takes a job as a bell boy and has many astonishing experiences, which net him large sums of money. He saves the girl from villainy and later becomes her butler, with still more adventures awaiting him. The water scenes were pretty and the photography good. Not a top-notcher, but a breezy, entertaining production.

"THE PRINCESS OF THE VALLEY" (Nestor), August 11.—A typical Western Indian story, in which Mona Darkfeather has the lead. She is assisted by some white men after falling from her horse, falls in love with one of them and later marries him. Their child is afterward captured by the Indians, and she saves him from death by working on the superstition of the red men. The photography is good and the picture a good one of its type.

"OUT OF THE PAST" (Crystal), June 24.—Good photography makes a strong appeal in this full reel drama, but it lacks a certain convincing quality and cannot be classed as a complete success. The scenes are very hurried and jump large periods of time. The heroine changes from a beautiful model to a washerwoman and her husband is reunited with her after many tribulations. The situations are too improbable to strike the observer forcibly.

"MR. WALLINGSFORD'S WALLET" (Reliance), June 21.—A one-reel photoplay in which the plot complications are rather ingenious. Mr. Wallingsford, the tramp, the two orphan children and Breezy of the underworld, are all brought together very naturally. In the end. Mr. Wallingsford gets his wallet back and the children win a home in the country. This makes very good entertainment of its kind.

"THE TRANSGRESSOR" (Broncho), June 25.—This is an effective two-reel story of Colonial days with realistic Indian fighting at the close. The first scenes are laid along the seacoast. Jim falls in love with the fisherman's daughter, Constance. The minister's son begins paying attention to her and later betrays the girl. She will not reveal who is father of the child, but later the baby dies and the father is killed in warfare, after which she and Jim are married. The film story is a strong one and the photography good.

"A HUSBAND'S MISTAKE" (American), June 23.—The acting in this number is very good, but the plot lacks a certain appeal, or perhaps freshness of situations. The young wife gives her new necklace to her scapegrace brother. This brings about a separation from her husband. Later, the brother reforms and buys back the necklace, but the story ends rather weakly.

"CALAMITY ANNE TAKES A TRIP" (American), June 26.—Louise Lester again appears in this number as the burro woman. Kerrigan and Richardson invite her to visit the popular summer resort at Venice, Cal., and she and the burro go through some rather amusing experiences on the various attractions.

"THE BANKER'S SONS" (Majestic), June 20.—Here is quite a lively story, the chief idea in which has been used before in a very similar way. The banker gives his two sons $2,000 each. One buys an automobile and the other deposits his funds in the bank. There is a realistic run on the bank. The son with the auto brings money from a distance. A love story and various complications make the plot interesting throughout.

"DEAD MAN'S SHOES" (American), June 28.—This story lacks feeling and does not quite catch the sympathy of the observer. Tom goes West, where he is killed in a blast. Jim, desiring to reform, assumes Tom's name. Later, Tom's girl comes West and Jim marries her, after telling her the facts about his regeneration. This seemed to us a very old conception and not very strongly worked out.

"PEEPING PETE" (Keystone), June 23.—A half reel in which Ford Sterling and Mack Sennet appear as " bad men." One rouses the ire of the other by peeping through a knot-hole at a woman making her toilet. Fairly amusing.

"THE BANDIT" (Keystone), June 23.—This, on same reel with above, is of about equal merit. The fat man, with flirting proclivities, is pursued by a rival made up as a bandit. The plot is very slight indeed.

"THE HEART OF HERNANDA" (Powers), July 4.—This film story is located in Sonora, Mexico, and the atmosphere is nicely suggested. An American man falls in love with a Mexican girl and is about to marry her when his former sweetheart comes to him. He casts her off, but the Mexican girl forces him to marry her at the point of a pistol. The story is rather improbable, though not uninteresting.

"TO THE BRAVE BELONG THE FAIR" (Nestor), July 4.—This picture is too vulgar in its general effect to be presented to the ordinary audience. The sight of a fat man walking about in tight-fitting underwear is not edifying and certainly not amusing.

"HE AND HIMSELF" (Nestor), July 4.—This, on same reel with above, has a good idea in it, though a somewhat impossible one. The hero disguises and his girl falls in love with the supposed stranger. Then he is sorry and tries to make her tire of the stranger by stealing her pocketbook while in disguise. But he is arrested and of course trouble ensues.

"AN INDIAN NEMESIS" (Nestor), June 30.—The story of this picture is confused because the characters cannot always be distinguished, so dull is the photography at times. It is melodramatic and not at all convincing; but has some brisk shooting and some speedy riding.

"SUSPENSE" (Rex), July 6.—A picture by Lois Webber, suggested by a former offering of the Rex and not unlike many other pictures in which burglars or tramps are breaking into a house or lonely station kept by a woman who has managed to let her friends know of her predicament. The intruder gets nearer and nearer; but the rescuer is hurrying, too, and reaches the point of danger just in time. It is pretty well done and makes a fair offering.

"THE EYE OF KRISHLA" (Thanhouser), June 22.—The title of this film prepares the observer for a deep mystery of some Oriental kind, but it is only a polite little comedy, in which the hero misleads the girl's father, a would-be sleuth. The trail leads from the house and back again, where the amateur detective finds the hero arrayed in girl's clothes. The photography was somewhat dim in places.

"THE HOUSE OF PRETENSE" (Reliance), June 23.—A very slight plot is the thread on which this story hangs, and yet there is a delicate sentiment about it which brings it very close to success. A young man and wife who have not been blessed with children pretend to dislike them. But each secretly longs for a child and each adopts one on the same day. A story with a touch of true pathos in it.

"THE BATTLE OF MANILA" (Bison), July 1.—A two-part special offering of war, love and adventure; but mostly of war. Where a fight picture is wanted, this is the offering to get by all means. It has pictures of the city under bombardment, in fact, the story makes climaxes to have them properly ended by the fortunate coming of a shell, one of which, in one instance, knocks a hole in the prison where the heroine is incarcerated. It is of the stuff that excites many persons. Here, too, are fierce battles with the Stars and Stripes waving through the smoke in the midst of the fray. The picture is exciting, not historical. The story is entirely melodramatic. It was produced by Francis L. Ford.

"THE ANGEL OF DEATH" (Imp), June 26.—An impressive drama, well executed and photographed. It is one of the last pictures made by Herbert Brenon before going abroad. William Shay has the character of the son, grown to manhood, and Jane Fearnley, that of the mother. Both do excellent work, as in fact may be said of the entire cast. William Welch, who portrays the Saviour, is especially effective in the final scene. His characterization is reverential; the effect is heightened by his craftsmanlike makeup, in which, by the way, Mr. Welch is unusually efficient. The whole production shows teamwork.

"THAT BOY FROM THE EAST" (Eclair), June 22.—A short comedy played by the contingent that journeyed to Oklahoma last winter. The photography is unsatisfactory and reflects the weather conditions under which the company worked. There are some good scenes of a Western fair, broncho busting, etc. The comedy is not strong.

"THROUGH THE SOUTH OF INDIA" (Eclair), June 22.—On the same reel is this colored film, in which are shown many views of the people and their customs.

"HIS DAUGHTER" (Victor), June 20.—A drama that will hold interest throughout. One of the phases of the picture that will be noticed is the boarding house atmosphere, which is well maintained. Gertrude Robinson plays the daughter, and Charles Graham the father. James Kirkwood, who directs the picture, also plays the part of a minister in love with the daughter. There are good situations and a most pleasant ending.

"HER MOTHER'S PICTURE" (Solax), June 13.—The scene titles in this picture are taken from different poems. The story will not serve as entertainment for sophisticated adults. Very likely many scenes intended to be pathetic will produce results opposite from those aimed at.

"WHEN A GIRL LOVES" (Pilot), June 12.—Louise Vale and Lottie Pickford appear in this picture. There are excellent backgrounds, and they are well photographed, but the story is nil.

"MAN AND WOMAN" (Ramo), July 16.—Will Davis has produced a picture of two reels that will reflect credit both on himself and his company. His work is more than skillful; it is artistic. There are cohesiveness and continuity; fine costumes and settings. Above all, there is a story that will hold throughout. In the second reel there are many situations that will thrill—and they will do so by reason of the strength of the story itself, which is dramatic and in no wise spectacular. One of the scenes especially worthy of mention is of the courtroom. The trial is portrayed with unusual effectiveness. There are flashes to the judge, to the prisoner, to the jury, to the spectators, to the lawyer for the defense. Mary Alden does splendid work in her characterization of the wife who foolishly believes herself neglected. Messrs. Newton, Holmes and Hopkins also contribute to the effectiveness of the picture. The photography is good.

"A DOG-GONE BARON" (Ramo), July 23.—Here's a real, screaming comedy—and the expression is used in a full realization of the meaning of a much-abused term. The chief agent in the creation of this result is a dog—our old friend Rowdy. If he does not upset any house in which he appears, then this reviewer will miss what he thinks is a wise guess. There are laugh-provoking situations other than those in which this four-legged comedian appears. One of the best of these is where the pretending baron climbs into the window of the room in which the matron of the house has taken refuge in the bed and covered her head. The exhausted and scoundrelly baron sits on the bed. Things happen. Stewart Holmes as the baron, makes fun; and he is ably supported by a fine cast.

"THE MAN WHO FAILED" (Solax), May 23.—A fair offering entirely conventional, but perfectly photographed and commendably acted. There are some scenes, one of which includes a picture of a burning factory as seen from the window of the owner's house, that are astonishingly realistic. That one scene is a masterpiece. The chief trouble with the offering is that the story has been told too often. Darwin Karr and Marian Swayne play the romantic leads.

"GOLD AND TWO MEN" (Nestor), May 18.—A Western in which an Indian murders a white man, who then turns his gold over to two miners. The story resembles the Eclair released several months ago entitled "The Poisoned Pool." One of the miners plans to kill his partner by filling his canteen with poisoned water. Later, he repents and finds his design has miscarried. There is a good situation at the close.

"BLOOD AND WATER" (Solax), June 4.—A beautifully photographed picture of sentiment in which we find two grandparents (Mrs. Hurley and Darwin Karr) rather harshly treated by their daughter-in-law (Marian Swayne), and in a negative way by their son (Fronie Fronholtz). The little granddaughter furnishes the pivotal character and the heart interest in a very acceptable way. At several points the business showed lack of care that is willing to accept the second best which makes poor art; but as a whole, we think the offering will please. It includes a very interesting chase over old canal boats moored along the waterfront and looking like the slums of some water city.

"THE AMATEUR HIGHWAYMAN" (Solax), May 21.—Fronie Fronholtz plays with a good deal of comedy ability a queer character, a sort of jayhawk farmer who, thinking a stranger has robbed him of his watch compells him to hand over the watch he is carrying, his own. When he finds out that his watch has been left at home, he attempts to restore it without being seen. The business of doing this makes much fun; but in one or two places goes beyond what is really amusing.

"FANTOMAS, THE BELTHAM MYSTERY" (Gaumont), June (Spl.).—A multiple-reel drama in which there are good situations and well handled. M. Navarre plays a dual role and does splendid work. Opposite him is the Gaumont's famous leading woman, Mme. Rene Carll; she justifies every expectation. The story is of a bold thief, of the gentleman sort, who commits a robbery. He has also committed a murder. After his arrest and conviction, the wife of the murdered man, in love with the thief, bribes the keepers of the latter to bring him to her home, a short distance from the prison. It is the night preceding his execution. The same evening, a famous actor gives a representation of the condemned man in his cell. The impersonator is decoyed to the house of the woman after the murderer has arrived. He is still in his convincing make-up. After the woman has drugged him, the jailers take him back to his cell. As he is being prepared for the execution, a detective discovers that the man still under the influence of the drug is not the murderer. The final curtain is to the effect that "Henceforth it is Juve (the detective) versus Fantomas." So we may expect a continuance of the story at a later time. The picture will interest.

"THE DEATH KNELL" (Itala), June (Spl.).—Two reels of a strongly dramatic story, very interesting, filled with good situations, one of them novel. There are charming backgrounds and excellent photography. The film is reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

MISS MAIBELLE HEIKES JUSTICE WROTE "THE FINAL JUDGMENT."

The Essanay Company has asked us to correct a point in the recent review of "The Final Judgment," in which it was stated that the story was written and produced by Archer McMackin. The original story was entitled "McCormack's Club," and was written by Miss Justice. Mr. McMackin merely changed the title and adapted the story for two reels instead of one. The credit for the story belongs to Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, of Chicago.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

A CORRESPONDENT who does not wish his name given offers the following:

"So much has been printed in this valuable paper concerning suitable music for pictures that one might think all has been said, especially as many writers have gone into great detail, that could not but help the pianist, but I think there is still a great deal to be said that might be of interest to the manager as well as the pianist.

"It is true that the public, on the whole, is getting used to better things and good music is appreciated by the majority of picture patrons. Bearing this in mind, it is sad to state that very few managers know anything about music—many cannot tell the difference between a selection of grand or comic opera—and so long as this condition exists it is not strange that the average music seldom rises above a few waltzes, rags, and the popular airs of the prevalent type with suggestive words and wretched airs.

"And those managers who are seeking better things; what can they expect from a pianist who works longer than a bricklayer and gets less remuneration? Many a manager spends five dollars a week advertising a show with bad music who begrudges an extra dollar or two to get good in its place. It would be well to remember that poor music is not cheap at any price, and that good music is always worth the money. And this brings me to another point. The pianos supplied in many of the best picture houses are relics of the pioneer days, decrepit and worn out by years of toil—patched and repatched to prolong their miserable existence.

No pianist, however good, can do himself justice on such an instrument whose retail value would probably be between five and ten dollars. There is many a manager, whose ear for music can scarce distinguish between the dinner gong and the fire alarm, who seeks to cover up his deficiency by an insane interference with the pianist. If the pianist is good he or she will probably not put up with it, but if circumstances are otherwise they may do so in order to hold down the job. The manager should either decide for himself or seek the advice of his patrons on the merits of the performance; if unsatisfactory a change should be made. If satisfactory the pianist should be left to use his own judgment, free from useless criticism or perpetual harrassing. It should be remembered that a pianist is an artist with temperament and high strung nerves uppermost, whose work calls for both mental and physical energy all the time, and if in uncomfortable surroundings he loses that ambition so essential to produce good music or play pictures correctly.

"And just a word for those who think an orchestra, violinist or drummer an improvement. While a good orchestra is a pleasure to listen to, as an accompaniment to pictures it is a woeful failure. The leader can of course choose suitable music—that is, something that will fit the subject on the whole, but it ends there; if the music does not blend in perfect harmony with every scene and action portrayed on the screen, the greatest charm is lost and the interest of the audience is centered either upon the music or upon the play instead of an undivided attention on both. In some places where they have an orchestra or violinist they make frantic efforts to play the pictures with ludicrous result, for no matter how carefully the music is selected or how quickly they switch from one piece to another, the effect is always ragged, the picture is never properly played and the music is usually spoiled in the process of cutting to fit the scenes. A lesser evil is a drummer, inasmuch as he can follow the pianist, but even he can be well dispensed with. A drum is the only instrument that has absolutely no music in it and whose only place is with a brass band or large orchestra. With a lone piano it is nerve racking and irritating to a degree, especially if the house is small and the sound has no room to expand. The greatest fault of drummers is that they play too loud, drowning the pianist and all attempts at finesse he might put into his playing. It will be a great stride forward when managers realize that there is no music in this barbarous instrument, and drums are forever banished from picture theaters.

"It is when the pianist not only plays appropriate music, but enters into the spirit of the play shown on the screen; accentuating the action and emotions of the actors, working up the climaxes and making the music characteristic of the situation at all times that the picture is well played. And this alone is not sufficient, for the successful picture pianist must not only use his head and his hands, but he must throw his whole heart and soul into the subject. When he does this, then he can make the picture "talk" to such an extent that scraping feet and wagging tongues will cease and the audience with bated breath will watch the unfolding of the play. When the manager can hear the proverbial pin drop, he may be sure his picture is well played."

The writer of the foregoing letter has evidently thought intensely on all of his subject and bitterly upon a part of it. The indications are that his experience with managers has not been a happy one. One can imagine that a nagging employer who did not know what he was talking about could make things very unpleasant, but fortunately they are rare. At least, I never happened to run across any. Out here in our neck of the woods, most of the managers are too busy, managing, to waste time trying to educate piano players. If the musician is satisfactory, well and good; if not—and speaking on the other side of the case, some employers must be easily satisfied, as some of these piano-and-drum combinations ought to be interfered with; if the manager can't do it alone he should call in the police to help him.

F. Edgar Ray, musical director of the Grand Theater, Newark, Ohio, is here again with another welcome contribution. He says: "Am sending musical program of two films that impressed me as being worthy of attention, namely: 'In the Days of Witchcraft' (Selig); 'Longing for a Mother' (Lubin). I trust these suggestions may be of value to some one in the business."

"In the Days of Witchcraft" (Selig).

1. "Dorothy" (Old English dance; Seymour Smith), until title: "Lady Bersford, An Old Sweetheart, etc."
2. "Pull for the Shore, Boys" (old song) until title: "Yorke Introduces Anne, etc."
3. "La Danse De Souvenir" (Loren Bragden) until foster father dies.
4. "On Wings of Love" (Bendix) until title: "Lady Bersford Accuses Anne, etc."
5. "Melody in F" (Rubenstein) agitato until title: "The Trial."
6. "Sextette from Lucia" until Yorke and sailors come to rescue Anne.
7. Mysterious pp. until Yorke attacks guard.
8. Agitato until old man stands on beach watching receding boat.
9. Waltz—rather bright, until end of reel.

"Longing For a Mother" (Lubin).

1. "Bird of Paradise" (J. V. Mathews) until title: "At the Reception."
2. "Enchanted Nights Waltzes" (Moret)) until title: "Day Dreams."
3. "Dreams, Just Dreams" (Berlin—Snyder) segue: "Nothing Like a Mother's Love" until boy awakes by portrait.
4. Waltz pp. until ball room scene, then f. until Mary Evers joins boy at portrait.
5. "In a Red Rose Garden" (Billy Gaston) until fairy disappears.
6. "All Aboard for Blanket Bay" until dark scene.
7. Waltz f. until end of reel.

A correspondent wants the names of some pieces similar to "Tam O'Shanter." Something adapted for long scenes of an agitated nature. I cannot now recall anything just like the number mentioned. The allegro parts of some overtures are often useful. Eduord Holtz's "Dance of the Demon" is a fast, noisy galop. No doubt our constituents will come forward with suggestions in plenty.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

MINNESOTA STATE CONVENTION.

THE second annual convention of the Minnesota State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held at the Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis, June 10th and 11th. On Tuesday morning a large and enthusiastic number of ladies and gentlemen, representing the better element of motion picture people, gathered in the large assembly room at the appointed hour, and the convention was called to order by State President Otto N. Raths. After divine invocation by the Rev. G. L. Merrill, an address of welcome was made by Hon. Wallace G. Nye, Mayor of Minneapolis, to which a fitting response was made by President Raths. A short time was devoted to routine formalities, such as roll call, reports of officers, committees, etc. Adjournment was taken at 11.30 a.m. until afternoon. The Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis exhibited some of the latest Uunversal releases in one of the parlors between the morning and afternoon sessions.

At the afternoon session new and unfinished business was taken up for a short period, after which there was held a reception and entertainment for the lady guests in the Empire parlor. The Laemmle Film Service again entertained with their best releases at this function. The evening was spent by the out-of-town delegates in visiting the local photoplay theaters as guests of the local exhibitors.

The election of officers took place at the Wednesday afternoon session, with results as follows: President, Otto N. Raths, manager of the Gaiety Theater, St. Paul, elected by acclamation; vice-president, L. Robbins, Winona; secretary, G. T. Sharp, Minneapolis; treasurer, H. A. Sherman; national vice-president, Thomas Furniss, Brunswick Amusement Company, Duluth; sergeant-at-arms, F. W. Boll, Northfield.

Executive Committee: C. E. Van Duzee, chairman; John Christopherson, Benson; John Wentworth, Spring Valley, and H. A. McLean, Virginia.

Delegates to National Convention at New York: E. A. Nelson, Duluth; S. L. Rothapfel and D. W. Chamberlain, of Minneapolis.

At the conclusion of the Wednesday session a banquet took place at the hotel under the auspices of the league. Two hundred guests were present and a very successful and enjoyable function it was.

Prominent among the speakers of the evening were Rep. Nolan, representing Mayor Herbert B. Keller, of St. Paul, who stated that as long as he was in the Senate the exhibitors need not fear anything from his vote. Otto N. Raths, retiring and also the new president of the league, thanked all the members for their co-operation, as did Thos. Furniss, national vice-president of the league. Mr. Hall, of Minneapolis, represented Mayor Hyde and spoke of the numerous advantages afforded by moving pictures, and told the exhibitors they were undertaking a work of art. Last, but not least, was the Rev. G. L. Morrill.

Among the most important things discussed during the convention was the poster charges, introduced by Thos. Furniss, of Duluth, urging exhibitors to pay 30 cents for three-sheets and 60 cents for six-sheets, and that it was optional with the exchange to give whatever credit they deemed advisable. It was also urged to do away with State Right pictures entirely, as well as age limit of films. President Raths also urged uniform rental rates on films. Mr. Dempsey, manager of the Grand Theater, Minneapolis, spoke on house management and how to handle large audiences which are waiting in the lobby.

One of the interesting speakers during this convention was Mrs. Kinney, representing the Woman's Welfare League. Amongst other things, Mrs. Kinney remarked that the most pleasant hours she ever spent were in the motion picture theaters. She denied the rumor that the Woman's Welfare League were not in favor of moving pictures; on the contrary, they do want them. Mrs. Kinney urged the exhibitors not to cut prices, but that the Woman's Welfare League will work harmoniously with the Exhibitors' League at all times. All they ask is co-operation.

Amongst those present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Green, Minneapolis; Harry Blaising, Minneapolis; M. L. Cohen, Minneapolis; Marker & Banks, Diamond Theater, Minneapolis; R. E. Parker, Sunbeam Theater, Duluth; A. A. Thomas, Metropolitan, Owatonna; E. A. Nelson, Star Theater, Duluth; C. E. Van Duzee, T. C. Amusement Co., Minneapolis; H. A. Sherman, Minneapolis; Tonn & Gates, Minneapolis; H. E. Baumgartner, Osage, Ia.; B. F. Judell, Minneapolis; F. W. Boll, Gem Theater, Northfield; K. C. Beaton, Seattle, Wash.; W. D. Thomas, Minneapolis; Geo. Ring, Seattle, Wash.; Jake Barnett, Hippodrome, St. Paul; A. L. Webster, Fargo, N. D.; M. Kaufmann, Minneapolis; L. E. Turner, Linton, N. D.; Mrs. M. E. Brinkman, Bemidji, Minn.; John Christopherson, Benson, Minn.; Otto N. Raths, Gaiety, St. Paul; Mr. and Mrs. R. A. McLean, Grand and Royal, Virginia; Thos. Furniss, Brunswick Amusement Co., Duluth; Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Copolovitch and daughter, St. Paul; Rev. G. L. Morrill, Minneapolis; J. L. Beck, Faribault; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Miller and son, Clement, Hibbing; W. A. Glazier, Faribault; Walter Murphy, Two Harbors; Hiram Harris, Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Bryson, Minneapolis; R. E. Moore, People's Theater, Duluth; Mrs. C. E. Hawley, Minneapolis; A. Lundy, Grandview, Minneapolis; Chas. Nicholas, Rushford, Minn.; Julius Bernheim, Minneapolis; M. L. Smith, Park Theater, Minneapolis; I. Rosenbloom, Moon Theater, Minneapolis; R. L. Frank, Minneapolis; H. S. Levine, Solax Co., New York; O. C. Stelzene, Star Theater, Minneapolis; Ed. J. McErlane, Minneapolis; Dan O'Brien, Park Theater, St. Paul; Gordon Witty and fiancee, Minneapolis; Annie Musing, Minneapolis; Lou Larson, Minneapolis; Abe Goldman, Minneapolis; B. Struckman, Jersey City, N. J.; A. B. Robbins, Winona, Minn.; J. W. Engel, Plymouth Theater, Minneapolis; Mrs. S. Harris, Minneapolis; J. L. O'Brien, St. Paul; W. A. Scott, Red Wing; Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Meyer, Minneapolis; F. E. Noyes, Cornell, Wis.; C. T. Smithers, Idle Hour Circuit, Aberdeen, S. D.; Ching We Ling, Peking, China; A. Kimball, Minneapolis; E. A. Westcott, Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. Hurbster, Minneapolis; Mr. Gitts, Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Nevecker, Minneapolis; Al. Steffes and wife, Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Sharp, Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Sherman, Minneapolis, and many others.

The Universal releases exhibited by the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis were: "Beauty and the Beast," "Pelleas and Melisande," "Grand Old Flag," "When Light Came Back," "The King Can Do No Wrong," "The Call of the Angelus," "Why," "Higher Law," "Beetled," "Comedian's Mask," and Pictures Made in Minneapolis.

NEW JERSEY STATE CONVENTION NOTICE.

The second annual convention of the New Jersey State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held at Achtelstetter's Hall, 844 Broad Street, Newark, N. J., on Monday, June 30th, at 10 a.m. sharp.

Mr. M. A. Neff, national president; Mr. S. H. Trigger, president of the New York State League, and many prominent officials and representatives of the clergy and press will be present. State officers for the ensuing year will be elected, as will be delegates and alternates for the National Convention, which will be held at the Grand Central Palace, Lexington Avenue and 47th Street, New York City, from July 7th to 12th next. Other very important business will be enacted, including the campaign of action for the next session of the legislature, which will materially benefit your business.

The league will provide a splendid luncheon and everything will be done for the comfort and entertainment of visiting exhibitors. All New Jersey exhibitors are invited to attend whether members of the league or not, and they are requested to bring their neighboring exhibitors and help this convention to be a great success by their presence. Address all communications to Mr. Paul Kirschner, Bijou Theater, Union Hill, N. J.

LOUIS F. BLUMENTHAL, Nat'l Vice-Pres.,
30 Union Square, New York.

NATIONAL CONVENTION DATE.

President Neff desires to notify all delegates to the National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League that the first meeting of the convention will be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, on Tuesday, July 8, at 10 o'clock in the morning.

This date and time should not be confused with the opening of the exposition, which takes place on Monday, July 7.

EXPOSITION NOTES WORTH READING.

There have been six large sight-seeing cars engaged for the entire week of the Exposition. These cars have been hired for the especial benefit of visiting exhibitors and are donated for that purpose by such enterprising people as the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., Universal Film Co., Itala Film Co., Warner's Features, Hugo Reisinger and Charles F. Abrams.

Kinemacolor will be well to the front in the forthcoming exposition at Grand Central Palace, as it was at the recent London Exposition. On the principle that "Seeing is believing" and for the purpose of "showing" the numerous exhibitors "from Missouri" who will attend the Convention, there will be a special Kinemacolor Theater on the mezzanine floor, near the main entrance, where all the latest dramatic, comic, scenic, fashion and topical productions in the natural color process will be exhibited upon the screen. On the center aisle of the main floor, the Kinemacolor booth will display all the latest mechanical improvements, including the new 35 ampere projector, the color corrector and the light filters. At the recent Travel Show the Kinemacolor pictures were the popular feature, so before an audience of experts they should go even better.

Friday, afternoon, July 11th, has been set aside by the Vitagraph Company of America for the reception of guests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, who wish to visit the studios and inspect its plant, where a cordial welcome will be extended. The banquet and reception of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will probably be held at the Brighton Beach Hotel, Brighton Beach, in the evening. After visiting the Vitagraph studios, the visitors can take the Brighton Beach Railroad at the Elm Avenue station, at any time, reaching the Brighton Beach Hotel in ample time for the evening's festivities.

On Wednesday evening, July 9, the Vitagraph players will visit the Exposition Building, Grand Central Palace, where they will be pleased to meet all their friends and greet those who may wish to know them personally. That evening has been appointed for the Vitagraph players, so that those desiring a personal introduction may be assured of their presence, at the Exposition Building.

* * *

Mr. S. M. Spedon, Publicity and Advertising Manager of the Vitagraph Company of America, for a long time one of the oldest in point of service and best known publicity men in the moving picture business, has been appointed Honorary Chairman of the Publicity Committee of the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, which will be held in Grand Central Palace, New York City, July 7 to July 13. Mr. Spedon's post is intended to convey an appreciation of the work he has done for the moving picture business in general.

* * *

Motion picture players will be there in numbers to give the fans, who so loyally watch their endeavors on the screen, an opportunity of meeting them.

* * *

The exhibits on the main floor are to be divided in six main sections, which will be classified as follows:

1. Development of the Cinematograph industry from its inception to the present day.
2. Exhibition of American and foreign moving picture cameras and projection machines.
3. Representation of latest and notable film productions.
4. Theater equipment and electric lighting appliances, novelties, etc.
5. Mechanical orchestral organs, pianos, and other musical attractions in vogue for moving picture theaters.
6. Miscellaneous allied industries.

To make this exposition of more interest to the general public one large manufacturer has arranged to exhibit a duplicate of everything pertaining to Cinematography from the start of the picture to its projection on the screen. Among other interesting features will be a collection of old magic lanterns and early cinematograph apparatuses and accessories.

Associated in an advisory capacity to the general committee of directors is Mr. R. G. Holloman, president of the Eden Musee. Mr. Holloman has had 25 years' experience in exposition work, and his personal interest in this exposition has meant a great deal. He was among the first to see the remarkable possibilities of the motion picture both as an amusement and educational feature.

As an attraction for the public and of interest to directors there will be held what is to be termed a "Would-be Actors' Competition," the winners of which will be awarded a cash prize and an engagement with one of the best known film companies in the country. The idea of the competition is to discover unknown talent. Any man, woman, girl, or boy who wishes to may compete. Competent judges will be on hand every afternoon and evening. Those wishing to take part may register their names with Frank E. Samuels, the secretary of the Exposition Committee, whose offices are in the German Bank Building, 4th Avenue and 14th Street, New York City. The scenario to be used is as follows: A man or a woman enters a room in a state of deep despair, sits at a table, then hearing a knock at the door rises to receive a letter. The letter is opened and is found to announce the fact that he or she has inherited $50,000 from an unexpected source, which naturally causes the actor to show surprise, joy, and excitement. The envelope, which has been lying face downward on the table, is then turned over and found to be addressed to an entirely different person. Then the funny side is noted and the scene ends with a hearty laugh.

Another novelty to be presented for the first time in this country will be the "Life Target." This will probably prove to be the novelty sensation of the century.

NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION JULY 5.

Notice is hereby given of the annual convention of the New York Branch of the M. P. E. L. of A. at the Hotel Imperial, New York, Saturday, July 5, at 10 a.m. Please take notice that this item refers to the State convention and not the National, which opens on the 7th.

New York State exhibitors who intend to be at the exposition and national convention should make plans to be in New York the Saturday before the opening in order to be present at their State convention and participate in the election of officers, which will take place at that time.

GEORGIA EXHIBITORS TO ORGANIZE.

At the Kimball Hotel in Atlanta, Ga., June 30, 1913.

Alex Wall, a picture theater owner of Alabama and also National Vice-President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, acting under instructions from President M. A. Neff, of the National body, will organize the Georgia exhibitors at the Kimball House Hotel in Atlanta, Ga., on June 30, 1913. Mr. Wall is an enthusiastic believer in this organization and is leaving his business to go into Georgia to organize the exhibitors from all over that State, in time for them to be represented at the big New York Exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which takes place in New York, July 7-12 inclusive. Mr. Wall is a native Georgian and says that he believes in Alabama and loves her people, but he cannot see Georgia left behind in the big doings in New York. Recently Mr. Wall persuaded the Birmingham exhibitors to cut down to a two-reel basis, which every exhibitor in that city admits has increased his business twenty-five per cent. Mr. Wall is a real live hustler and the Georgia boys should be glad to welcome him home to get them together. The date is June 30th and at the Kimball Hotel, Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Wall's address until then is Room 234, Clark Building, Birmingham, Ala.

LORIMER JOHNSTON JOINS AMERICAN.

Lorimer Johnston, the new director of the first company, has arrived in California and will immediately assume charge of the department. Mr. Johnston was for six years in the American diplomatic service at various foreign ports. Later he engaged in regular theatrical work, and had direction of some very big productions. A year and a half ago he decided that the moving picture field was very promising. In order to acquaint himself with the best methods he went abroad and studied with the Pathe Freres in Paris, the Itala at Rome and later with the Great Northern in Copenhagen. He returned to this country and for nine months was with Selig in Chicago. He went West four weeks ago. Mr. Johnston enjoys an excellent reputation as producer and with the splendid opportunities that Santa Barbara affords, it is safe to say that the American productions will be placed on the top notch.

TROUBLE IN THE "INFANTRY."

Little Helen Armstrong came near going on a strike Saturday when she figured in a flood scene. Helen was pictured as a child in distress, but later rescued. When she got home that night the four-year-old informed Mrs. Armstrong: "I refuse to work any more if I've got to get wet."

BRITISH COLUMBIA CENSORSHIP.

Rules and Regulations Adopted by the Provincial Official Board of Censors.

Exhibitors of the Province of British Columbia, Canada, have been having their own time with the question of censorship of motion picture films. A censorship law was passed at a recent session of the Provincial Assembly and the censors are now on the job. An elaborate set of rules and regulations for the operation of picture theaters, and the conduct of the censorship, have been compiled and printed. As an example of the lengths to which official censors will go when clothed with a little temporary authority, the Moving Picture World publishes that part of the rules and regulations governing the censorship:

24. The Censor, as defined by and appointed under the provisions of said chapter 72, shall inspect all films and picture-slides which it is proposed to use and exhibit in British Columbia in connection with any kinematograph, moving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus, and shall examine and pass upon the fitness for public exhibition of all such films and slides. Every film exchange, as defined under these Regulations, shall submit to the Censor for inspection all films and slides passing through their hands in the ordinary prosecution of the business of such film exchange.

Every moving-picture film exhibited to the public shall bear upon it a stamp to be affixed by the Censor signifying that such film has been approved by him, and every picture-slide so exhibited shall be accompanied by a certificate signed by the Censor signifying that the same has been approved by him. Every moving-picture film and every slide which is so exhibited without having first received the approval of the Censor, signified as aforesaid, shall be liable to seizure by any officer required to enforce the Regulations passed under said chapter 72 as aforesaid; and every film and slide so seized shall be forfeited to the Crown, and shall be disposed of as directed by the Attorney-General.

The Censor shall not inspect any film submitted by any film exchange, or by any person, until the fees applying to such inspection, as provided by these Regulations, have been paid. All such fees shall be paid with currency or marked cheque.

25. Any exhibitor or lessor of moving-picture films, or any person nominated by such exhibitor or lessor, may be present during the inspection of films by the Censor on payment of a fee of 50 cents for each attendance of such exhibitor or lessor or person nominated by either.

26. The Censor shall have power to approve any moving-picture film from which all portions objectionable to him have been removed by the person submitting such film for inspection.

27. All black and white moving-picture films and stationary picture-slides shall be inspected by the Ceosor at the demonstration office maintained by the Government for the inspection thereof; and all such films and slides shall be taken to such office and removed therefrom by the person submitting the same for inspection. While such films or slides are at the office or demonstration-room of the Government they are at the risk of the person submitting them for inspection, such risk covering damage or loss by fire or any other cause.

28. All moving-picture films, whether black and white or other variety, which for any reason it is impossible for the Censor to inspect at the Government demonstration office, shall be inspected at the convenience of the Censor at such other place in the City of Vancouver as shall be provided, at the direction of the Censor, by the person submitting such films for inspection; and all costs incidental to such inspection shall be borne by the person submitting such films.

29. No moving-picture film which carries anywhere in its length any section which is designed to project on a screen a statement that such film has been inspected or approved by any board of censors outside the Province of British Columbia shall be exhibited to the public in said Province. All leaders purporting to signify censorship by authorities outside said Province must be removed from any film carrying same before such film may be used in British Columbia.

30. No kinematograph, moving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus shall, for the purpose of public entertainment, be used in any theater, hall, or other building concurrently or in connection with the use of phonographic or talking-machine records, or any similar contrivance for the reproduction of sound, unless with the approval of the Censor in writing first obtained.

31. All film exchanges shall, on demand of the Censor, and for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of said chapter 72 and these Regulations, furnish the Censor with the names and addresses of all persons, companies, or association in British Columbit to whom they lease or rent films.

32. A copy of all Regulations passed pursuant to said chapter 72 shall be posted up in a conspicuous position in the operating room or cabinet of every theater, hall, or building within British Columbia where kinematograph or moving pictures are displayed to the public.

33. The fees to be paid to the Censor upon inspection of moving-picture films and stationary picture-slides shall be as follows:

(a.) For each reel of film imported, purchased, or leased by any person, firm, or corporation, being the owner or lessee of a moving-picture theater or hall within the Province, and having been continuously engaged in the business of exhibiting moving pictures therein for the period of at least thirty days immediately preceding such inspection, for the sole use of and submitted for inspection by such person, firm, or corporation, the sum of $1 for the first 1,100 feet of such film, and the sum of 10 cents for each additional 100 feet or fraction thereof of film contained on such reel:

(a.) For each reel of film imported, purchased, or leased by any person, having within the Province an office or offices at all times regularly engaged in the renting or leasing of moving-picture films to exhibitors, the sum of $1 for the first 1,100 feet of such film, and the sum of 10 cents for each additional 100 feet or fraction thereof of film contained on such reel:

(c.) For each reel of film not herein otherwise provided for, the sum of $2 for the first 1,100 feet of such film, and the sum of 20 cents for each additional 100 feet or fraction thereof of film contained on such reel:

Provided that in case any such reel of film is designed to be used concurrently or in connection with the use of phonographic or talking-machine records, or any similar contrivance for the reproduction of sound, an additional fee of 50 per cent. of the amount of the regular fee for such film shall be payable:

(d.) For each set of slides relating to one subject or contained in one series the sum of $2.50 for the first fifty of such slides, and the sum of 2 cents for each additional slide contained in such set:

(e.) For each slide not herein otherwise provided for, the sum of 5 cents.

NEW STUDIO FOR AMERICAN FILM COMPANY.

The building and grounds of the new Mission Street studio have now taken such form that one can easily comprehend what the completed whole will be like. The last important piece of work to be started is the ornament wall on Mission Street. This is now well up and is of brick to be a height of eight feet. It will later be given a coating of cement, the same as the group of buildings. In the main the following buildings are completed: administration, development plant, garage, players dressing room and quarters, property building and carpenter shop. The foundation is laid for the glass studio. The Mission style has been carried forward nicely and the entire plant has a most substantial appearance, to which has been added much that is attractive.

There will be a handsome roadway leading through a very ornamental arch gate. As soon as possible the grounds will be landscaped. There will be gardens, walks and arbors, the scheme being to use these bits occasionally in moving picture stories. From some points it will be possible to take unusual close-up stuff, with Mission towers and similar effects and real mountains in the background.

"The Death Knell" (Itala)

By George Blaisdell.

THERE are a couple of surprises in this fine two-reel picture. It is probable that if the first one be a pleasant one the second will not be. Opinions will divide a great deal, perhaps, according to the youth or the age of the observer. It is natural for a youth to sympathize with the loves and aspirations of youth; from the elder the sympathy is likely to be extended to the more mature man, even though he have not the robustness and probable longevity of the "sturdy oak." The story is of an invalid informed by his doctor that his life will not be long. He has a nephew, Robert, who departs on a trip to the colonies. Before going away the young man says good-bye to his friends, among them Bice Moreno, whom he has met casually, but between whom there has been no declaration of love, although the mutual attraction is evident.

Through the failure of a bank the Moreno Castle is to be sold. Mr. Sarni, the invalid, buys it, telling the Morenos they may remain in the castle as long as they like. As father and daughter finally depart, Sarni tells the daughter his life is setting and that she may remain in the house if she wishes. Miss Moreno becomes Mrs. Sarni. Robert returns from the colonies. The meeting between the nephew and the wife is a painful one. It is overseen by Sarni, who is much affected. The doctor tells Sarni his end is near. The latter goes to his nephew and in the presence of his wife asks him to go away for a year; that on his return Bice will be free. He tells them that unwittingly he has come between them. Farewells are said.

A year later Sarni is in excellent health. He asks his wife if she regrets his not being dead, and she tells him that she thanks heaven for it every moment. Robert returns. His uncle tells him he is young, offers him a fortune. "Forget," he adds. The nephew writes a note to Mrs. Sarni asking her to meet him that night. The husband intercepts it long enough to read it and forwards it. Then he leaves ostensibly for an automobile trip, but goes only beyond the gates. He follows his nephew into the house. The wife tells the nephew: "I love you indeed, but I will never betray that man." The husband bursts into the room. The shock has been too great. He dies, blessing them both.

Here are great opportunities for acting. One of the first of these is where the uncle tells the young man to go away for a year. It is painfully dramatic. Later, when the husband is restored to health and the wife apparently is now in love with him, and him solely, somehow you feel that this is the right solution of the problem. The expected but yet unwelcome appearance of the nephew changes a situation that evidently was satisfactory to two. The uncle extends to the younger man a hearty greeting. It is not reciprocated. Robert's feelings are plainly reflected in his countenance. As much as he loved his uncle, mentally he had buried him and had come back to claim a bride, not felicitations which the circumstances so plainly made impossible. Sympathy goes to the young man, but it is overborne by the gratification of a good life preserved. The wife? That's another angle. Settle that for yourself.

A great castle forms the background for many of the scenes. The photography is excellent; so likewise is the judgment displayed in the tinting. "The Death Knell" is a picture worth seeing.

O. F. DOUD JOINS GEORGE KLEINE.

Omar F. Doud, for the past two years connected in various capacities with the American Film Manufacturing Company, severed connections with that company last week to assume new duties as publicity manager for George Kleine.

Mr. Doud is well known to the trade. While in the American's employ he had charge of publicity, was editor-in-chief of the scenario department and handled much other work. He is an ex-newspaper man and brings a splendid reputation and experience to George Kleine. Mr. Doud was a reporter on the Chicago Inter-Ocean, Kansas City Star and St. Louis Republic, and also edited several trade papers. In addition to representing Eastern papers in Chicago, in an advertising way, Mr. Doud opened and had charge of the Sherman & Bryan Advertising Agency, was a copywriter for that concern, and was a constant and well-known contributor to such advertising periodicals as Printer's Ink and Judicious Advertising.

FACTS ABOUT "QUO VADIS?"

George Kleine, proprietor and manager of the sensational photo-drama success, "Quo Vadis?", made by the famous Cines Company of Italy, positively refuses to sell State Rights or to lease his property to anyone. Mr. Kleine will have fully fifteen companies touring the United States and Canada by September 1st. "Quo Vadis?" as presented by Mr. Kleine is in eight reels, divided into three acts, and special music has been arranged and composed for the performance. The Cines production comprehends the entire Sienkiewicz story and is full of wonderful features. Imitator's have entered the field, but none has approached anything like the magnitude and detail of Mr. Kleine's production. The only opportunity to see the real "Quo Vadis?" will be in the big theaters of the country when announced by Mr. Kleine himself.

This superb photo-drama production still continues to be the vogue in New York City and Chicago and has broken all records for long runs in Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore. The latter cities are usually regarded as one week stands, but "Quo Vadis?" is now in its sixth week at Philadelphia, fifth at Baltimore and fourth week in Brooklyn, with a prospect of continuing for several weeks longer in each place. No ordinary attraction could accomplish this feat and it speaks volumes for the magnitude and quality of the entertainment. It is easy enough to crowd small picture houses, but when it comes to great big theaters it is a different matter. No dramatic attraction has ever been able to equal the record of "Quo Vadis?" thus far in these cities.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

Likes the Catalogue.

THE Rev. Edgar Fay Daugherty, pastor of the First Christian Church, Vincennes, Ind., has just sent us a long and interesting letter concerning his winter's work and his experiences during the flood. The readers of the Picture in the Pulpit department will remember Mr. Daugherty for the good work he did with religious and moral photoplays last summer and will be glad to hear from him again, and we are sorry that lack of space compels us to confine our extracts to what he has to say about the pictures, and quote only the first and last paragraphs. He begins:

> Bless your old heart, your cataloguing in The World has been so eminently satisfactory, that I have just clipped the lists and laid them aside, neglecting to extend felicitations. Here they "be." Keep on with your system, it is vitally helpful to fellows like me.

He adds that he thinks our "synopses" are a little vague, but as we have explained to him, the notes that we have appended to some of the titles are not intended to be synopses at all, but merely suggestions as to certain subjects that are illustrated by the pictures and that for the synopses he must look at the volume and page of the World where the printed one will be found.

Wants the Parables.

In the last paragraph of his letter he makes the same suggestion and request that is made by the Rev. George A. Miller, pastor of the First Methodist Church of San Jose, Cal., in a letter received by us the same day as Mr. Daugherty's. Mr. Miller says:

> I am greatly interested in the New Testament subjects and I have not been able to find any New Testament stuff at all, though the C. G. P. C. Old Testament stuff has been excellent. The trouble is that I can't pay five or six dollars for a single reel.

Mr. Daugherty says:

> Dramatize the parables, I want them. The picture business is too pregnant with fine possibilities of inspiration and uplift to be hopelessly prostituted to the production of thrills whose only aim is mercenary. We must have more and more the dramatization of themes with an ethical punch.

After getting these letters we had a talk with Mr. John Pelzer, the sales manager of the Edison Company, and we are very glad to tell not only Dr. Miller and Mr. Daugherty, but also every other person interested that that company has already produced (although not released) under our own supervision two of the parables, namely, "The Good Samaritan" and "The Wise and Foolish Virgins." At present the company does not deem it wise to make these pictures the subjects of ordinary release, but Mr. Pelzer says that if any clergyman or educator wishes to use them for a legitimate purpose and will write to him direct at Lakeside Avenue, West Orange, N. J., he will be very glad to arrange to supply them with a copy through the educational department of the General Film Company. The pictures were made primarily for projection by the Edison home kinetoscope. As to the price of rental we have no information just now.

"Church Vaudeville."

In another part of his letter Dr. Miller says that our lists are "fine" and "all right," and that "all we need now is to get the exchanges to let us have good stuff at a rate that we can afford." He adds:

> I am not using pictures much on Sunday, my church folks won't stand for anything but Bible stuff or something strictly religious. I do run, however, a good show every Friday night of the year and crowd the house to the limits. I have to compete with the theaters and make it a point to give a little more than the theaters do. Admittance is free, and a pastor's box in the vestibule receives offerings for expenses. So far these contributions have met the bills for three reels a week. I also have current topic talks, music, dramatic readings and other "Church vaudeville," which is proving an excellent thing for the church and for young people, especially.

Dr. Miller is the only one we know of at present who runs a mixed entertainment in church or educational work. Won't some of the others who have tried it tell us of their experience also?

THE STANDING OF THE PICTURES IN AN IMPORTANT AMERICAN CENTER.

ASBURY PARK, New Jersey, is second to none among the places considered worthy of special designation as supplying all that is required to attract, satisfy and complete the needs of an all-round summer resort. If to a stranger—how much more to an old visitor—the impression prevails that the moving picture house seems to be the most important form of amusement, the question naturally arises, as to what form of amusement existed before the coming of the moving picture. Truly, here in Asbury Park, the moving picture has filled an "aching void"; there is now somewhere to go and something to see; the otherwise monotonous promenading, and ice cream parlors failed to satisfy even those who, wishing rest and relaxation, tired of the ennui and listlessness of the everlasting donothingness of each day and evening.

As already indicated, the picture places are legion. Out of season three would be too many; during the season all may prove but few. The old Essanay contest for a uniform and universal name has certainly had no effect here, for there is only one "Photoplay" house, so called. There are "Moving Pictures," "Motion Pictures," "Open Air Theaters," "Biograph," "The World in Motion," and similar names without number. Others discarding any picture designation are "Criterion," "Orpheum" and "Lyric," using a second or supplemental notice to assure people that "Moving Pictures" or "Photoplays" always of "the latest and best" are only to be found therein. May the time come when a designating title equally as definite as Theater will dignify all moving picture places, instead of the misleading conglomeration, never more evidenced than in this beautiful town, where the only negative effects of the moving picture are found in this bewildering plethora of commonplace titles, which, being undignified, detract from the exalted stamp which here especially should be upon every place where moving pictures are shown.

Of the picture houses themselves, it would perhaps be hard to find a single town or city where they are so uniformly clean, airy, fresh and attractive; such a thing as a dark, dull or heavy place is unknown. The most particular, fastidious and even those professing an aristocratic delicacy cannot find fault; in this respect at least the owners are to be complimented, for truly the houses are better than their names. There are no "nickelodeons" or cheap sensational places. The minimum charges are ten cents, with higher rates, which in the height of the season should secure the best of music and film service. At present the films are not of the highest standard and the music is only of a medium quality; in some places the old-fashioned military drum is not beaten, but pounded, together with exaggerated mechanical effects, which it is to be hoped may be modified as the season develops and the cultured tastes of such audiences as may be found here are able to react upon those who are in charge of this part of the entertainment. The strong feature films are so far absent; short subjects with an occasional two-reel addition seem to be the rule, with, of course, as a reasonable necessity, an occasional comic.

The moving picture is the standard indoor, evening entertainment; its advent is most welcome, filling as it does an opportunity to pass time in a pleasurable manner. It is also educating amusement, as, given proper subjects, people always appreciate ability on the screen as much as on the stage. The pictures have also prevented the use of less valuable means of passing the time at these great holiday resorts, and in Asbury Park the old visitor notices the absence of any Coney Island kind of clap-trap "fill up" and Japanese methods of getting easy money in so-called boosted "auctions." The large number of picture houses, the large attendance, the general popularity of the cinematograph, all testify to the fact that the standard of the moving picture, as an entertainer in a place where nothing but entertainment is sought, is very complete. Negatively beyond criticism or censure, it is positively one of the most valuable and acceptable additions to the cultured center of summer enjoyment.

Foreign Trade Notes

BRITISH NOTES.

By Our Own Correspondent.

THE "American invasion," as it is termed by one individual, has commenced. It refers to the arrival here this week of Miss Florence Turner, Mr. Brenon, Larry Trimble, King Baggot and other film personalities of note. Not the least amusing feature of the visit is the impression one trade journal tries to give its readers by framing pretensions to the "discovery" of the former artiste.

* * *

Mr. F. J. Brockliss has just reached London from New York and is now exhibiting at his showrooms several of the new short length features of the A & C, Imp, Melies, and Rex companies, for whom he is the British agent.

* * *

To the American mind patriotism may appear to be a peculiar element to infuse into films and film work, but some of the ultra-conservative film producers in this country, fired no doubt with the spasmodic yell for "British films" by a London evening newspaper, are even going so far as to print their monthly release calenders in ornamental red, white and blue decorations. The producers referred to are the Barker Co., the Clarendon Co., Cricks & Martin, and the Hepworth Co.

* * *

The bull-dog has long been the recognized trade mark of the Barker Co., and the animated "barker" at the end of their films is undoubtedly familiar to American exhibitors. Now, however, a new make of films known as "John Bull Films," and presumably of equal patriotic appeal is to be produced shortly from a plant in Buckinghamshire. The releases will be in the hands of the Cosmopolitan Co. of London, who, I understand, also have agents in New York. But if, as one might reasonably infer from the name chosen, this new company elects to decorate the products of its studios with a picturesque representation of John Bull, including, of course, his inseparable symbolical bull-pup, will they be trespassing on Messrs. Barker's rights? It seems a delicate question and English producers in common with their American brethren are particularly protective of their trade marks.

"The moving picture has become so popular an institution recently that the want of a collective noun to represent spectators is becoming more acute," said a theater manager to me one day. "Audience can only be applied to hearers and as yet 'the house' is the term applied to those who see the silent show."

* * *

Harry Lauder, the noted Scottish comedian who returned from the States a fortnight ago, was the principal character in a humorous parody film taken at Hayes, Middlesex, the other day. Lauder spent most of the day recording for gramophone records.

* * *

A rumor is prevalent here, though I give it for what it is worth, that Miss Constance Crawley, a cousin of Lord Kitchener, has been engaged to play for an American company.

* * *

M. Maurice Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" has been produced by a Continental firm, with Mrs. Maeterlinck, formerly Mlle. Leblanc, in the leading role. It is shortly to be screened in London at one of the West End houses.

* * *

A film of the year promises to be that founded on the famous novel, "Lady Audley's Secret," which has been produced on this side by Messrs. Gaumont.

* * *

Kinema matters are occasionally used by writers in some of the weekly journals as suitable material for harmless satire. Vivian Carter, this week conjures up the vision of the arising of a gigantic Kinema trust cornered by some boss, who uses his power to rise to high office. Then he elects that everything that shall happen in the State that he controls shall be reproduced on film or otherwise let it not happen. This boss is described as the great "Kinapoleon."

* * *

The American dances, "The Bumble Bee," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," and the "Model and the Maid," are shortly to be filmed from the original versions by Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Ellaline Terriss.

* * *

Gaumonts have successfully terminated negotiations with Mr. Landon Ronald, the famous conductor, to arrange a suitable selection of music to accompany their film, "The Life of Wagner." Mr. Ronald will personally conduct the first performance at the West End Cinema, London.

* * *

I have received intimation this week, from a newly formed British company, of a remarkable invention for producing stereoscopic effects in conjunction with ordinary monochrome pictures. The invention, which only effects the screen, is as feasible and practical as any I have seen and will lend itself to commercial exploitation on an economic basis. The mechanical side of projection is not affected and pictures are projected in the ordinary way on a distorting mirror with a wonderful lifelike result and with scarcely any perceptible distortion of the image. A peculiar advantage claimed for the mirror-screen is that old films (technically known as "rainstorm junk") can be used without any flicker marks showing at all. New films give, of course, the best results.

Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, one of the principal British syndicates with several exceptionally high class picture houses in provincial cities, are re-issuing shares to the value of nearly a million dollars. The last dividend was twenty-five per cent.

Moving pictures of the notorious Johnson-Jeffries fight were shown in the Strand last week. These were banned from presentation at the time, but are drawing crowds now.

A London newspaper, "The Standard," of protective persuasion, the other day published a lengthy letter from its Canadian correspondent, who states that, "notwithstanding the superiority of the United States dramatic and outdoor action films over English productions, the Canadian public, like the patrons of the moving picture show in England (?), are wearying of the frequency with which the Stars and Stripes and the French domestic scene appear in picture palaces." With the imports of U. S. A. films to England nearly double what they were last year, it doesn't look much like "wearying."

The premier "all-British" film of the summer, as briefly mentioned in my notes last week, looks very much like being Barker's "East Lynne"—a photoplay adaption of Mrs. Henry Wood's famous novel. The production which is just fresh from the studios is 6,500 feet in length and contains 117 scenes. It is predicted a good sale in America as no expense seems to have been spared to obtain realism. In order to get the proper effect the men of the cast refrained from having their hair cut for over nine weeks. The Walturdaw Company has purchased the British rights for £4,000, but up to the moment of writing I do not think that the American rights have been disposed of.

A new objection to film export from this country seems to have been discovered. A prominent film manufacturer tells me that he would sooner send his stock to any country before the United States. "What with the heavy import duties and the essential good quality of the films to compete with those on the American market, all the profit is knocked out of the venture," is his complaint.

Miss Florence Turner successfully withstood her "first night" ordeal at the London Pavilion, where she is appearing as a character impersonator. Both Miss Turner and Jean, the famous collie, have been interviewed repeatedly.

"EASY PAYMENTS."

In this drama, released by Essanay, Miss Ruth Stonehouse as the simple country girl demonstrates her ability beyond question. Julia James (Miss Stonehouse) leaves her country home for the city, to make her way in life. Dabney Briggs (Norman Fowler), from the same town, tries the same thing. Both arrive in the large and strange city, and as luck will have it stop in the same boarding house. Julia tramps the streets for days, in search of employment, and is told that her poor appearance is all that keeps her from securing a position. Julia finally buys some clothes on easy payments. Dabney is successful in landing a job with Mauritz & Rosenberg, clothiers. He is sent to collect the money for the clothes that Julia had bought. Dabney returns to his employers empty handed and is discharged. Mauritz & Rosenberg send another collector, who takes away the clothes from Julia, and also from Dabney, who had been given a suit as part salary.

Scene from "Easy Payments" (Essanay).

Mrs. Briggs arrives in the city, calls on her son and offers him a flattering proposition. Dabney consults Julia about it and she concludes that the country life is better for country people. So with Julia as his promised bride, Dabney returns to his home town with his mother.

Norman Fowler, a newcomer in the world of photoplays, gives a remarkable exhibition of his talent as the country boy in this feature. His mother (Clara Smith) pleases.

NEW QUARTERS FOR ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY.

On July 1 the Eclectic Film Company, over which Mr. K. W. Linn is the presiding genius, will celebrate its removal from the present quarters on 45th Street, and will celebrate the 4th of July in a suite of new and handsomely furnished offices. It was decided that, among other things, the present offices are not sufficiently large to carry on the business of importing film productions on a large scale. Accordingly Mr. Linn went forth on a tour of inspection of all the modern office buildings in the lobster district. After looking them all over he came to the conclusion that the World's Tower Building, situated at 110-112 West Fortieth Street, is the finest business building in New York, and he closed a deal at once for one-half of the tenth floor.

This building is absolutely fireproof and sanitary. It has many new conveniences which most other buildings are without. One of these is the new ventilation system that keeps the building cool in summer. This will be a big feature of the private projection room during the hot days to come. Buyers may sit in comfort while inspecting the Eclectic wares. It is the firm's intention to have the most efficiently equipped private projection and demonstration room in New York, with an entirely new outfit of machinery. The executive offices will be finished handsomely in quartered oak, and velvet carpets. The rear rooms of the floor will be utilized as a laboratory department and for shipping.

Buyers and exhibitors, especially during the coming National Convention and Exposition, are invited to call at the new Eclectic offices, where they will meet with hearty welcome and will be given an opportunity to look at some excellent features, including the "Mysteries of Paris," and the great "Les Miserables."

"THE ZULU KING" (Lubin).

It is almost a shame to take the terrible theme of Cannibal Savage history and reduce it to comedy, but there is a humor in the condition, which may induce a laugh so long as the white man comes out on top. The picture is not intended to horrify the audience, but more to induce a scream of laughter, at the beautiful stupidity of the aborigines and how easily they were conquered by modern tact and wit. The picture is wonderfully true to the atmosphere of the pictorial savage and an excellent example of the Lubin director's thoroughness.

Scene from "The Zulu King" (Lubin).

John Smith is henpecked and forced to wash the dishes, etc., while Mrs. Smith has a good time. He resolves not to stand for it and ships as a cook on board a steamer bound for Africa. It turns out to be from bad to worse. The Zulus take him prisoner and Smith is condemned to death. He hands the king his revolver, which contains blank cartridges, and tells the Zulus that he is bullet proof. They fire at him and finding that he is not hit resolve that he is supernatural. They make him king. Mrs. Smith follows and the Zulus make her queen. She immediately begins to regulate things. She fires all of Smith's brunette wives and makes him the fan boy.

GEORGE KLEINE IN EUROPE.

The American representative of the Eclipse and Cines motion pictures, Mr. George Kleine of Chicago, is at present on the other side of the Atlantic on some secret errand. No doubt he is gathering up valuable pictures for future American exploitation. He makes a specialty of handling scientific subjects that are not released through the regular channels. Most of these pertain to surgery and are bought by colleges for clinical lectures. They would hardly do for general public use, but they have become a part of the business and Mr. Kleine is making a specialty of them. It is also expected that in his absence Mr. Kleine will dig up a worthy successor to "Quo Vadis?."

PHOTOPLAY WRITER JOINS ESSANAY.

Edward T. Lowe, Jr., an occasional contributor to this department, has been engaged by Essanay, his official title being "Reconstructor of Scenarios."

Mr. Lowe is at the head of a new department of the Essanay organization, being engaged to put purchased dramas in perfect technical form for the director, so that the latter will be enabled to give his entire thought to the production without the revision work they have heretofore been required to do. Mr. Lowe's careful study and experience in the past seven years in the motion picture work especially fits him for this work, and the unique compliment has been paid him, "That his scenarios are the only ones that can be put on without the rewriting and revision that is always necessary."

In the new method adopted by Essanay, Mr. Lowe will perfect working scripts of every drama accepted, and after a careful discussion of this by the heads of the different departments concerned, the script and cast will be given to the director who will make the production without deviating from the construction laid down, though any suggestions from the directors will be welcomed.

Some of Mr. Lowe's most notable successes are "Out of the Night," "The Moving Finger," "The Spy's Defeat," "The Virtue of Rags," and "From the Submerged." Others to be released at a future date are "Stone the Woman, Let the Man Go Free," "To Be Seen Of Men," and many others, all of which are radical departures from the ordinary and mediocre drama.

GREAT NORTHERN GOES UP.

Written by Joe McArdle.

(All Rights Reserved.)

The Great Northern Film Company, of which Ingvald C. Oes is general manager, has moved up to its new quarters on the ninth floor of the World's Tower Building, 110-112 West Fortieth Street. The feat was accomplished on Saturday last and was marked by no more serious incident than the breaking of a couple of ink-well covers. The entire office staff preserved its equanimity during the trying ordeal, and by dint of hustling the offices were opened for business on Monday. Of course, there remains much to be done before the new home of the Great Northern is pronounced "spick and span," but this will be accomplished before the end of the week and then we may expect to have a flashlight photo of the new offices and a description of the interior of the new home of the "Polar Bear" brand of moving pictures.

DOINGS AT FAMOUS PLAYERS' STUDIO.

A World man visited the studio of the Famous Players recently, where, under the direction of Mr. Porter and J. Searle Dawley, Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske is working before the camera in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." On Monday, June 16, Miss Mary Pickford began her nineteen weeks' engagement in pictures. Her first production will be "Caprice," one of the early successes, by the way, of the then Minnie Maddern. It is intended to make so far as may be possible two-reel subjects. Bennie Schulberg laments the scarcity of acceptable multiple-reel scripts. He says the Famous Players want high-class stuff and will pay for it, big money. The filming of "The Good Little Devil," which has just been completed, is said to have been remarkably successful. It will not be shown publicly, however, until September or October; its appearance will be simultaneous with the beginning of the road tour of the regular organization. In those cities where the stage presentation will be given the exhibition of the picture will be delayed so that it may follow the portrayal by the company. This will be in one way a novelty. It will give theater-goers and picture-goers an opportunity to compare the relative merits of the two forms of production. It is not a bold utterance to assert that the advantage will not by any means be all on the side of the stage. There are possibilities in a camera directed by a Porter far above anything attainable on the stage even when it is directed by a Belasco—and it is generally conceded that in stage-craft, that's about the last word.

H. C. WALES PROMOTED TO ALBANY, N. Y.

H. C. Wales, former manager of the General Film Company's St. John branch, has been promoted to the position as manager of the Albany, N. Y., branch. Mr. Wales handled the business in St. John during the period the Kinetograph Company had an office there.

PICTURE OF A BUILDING GOING UP.

The accompanying illustration is a fraction of a film that is being taken of Machinery Hall, one of the buildings of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, to be held in California this summer. Exposures have been made at intervals of five minutes since the building was begun and when finished the picture will show the edifice growing as if by magic from its beginning to its completion. The camera is set upon the roof of the already completed Service Building. It is calculated that the picture when finished will run eighty minutes. It is being made under the auspices of the Exposition Publicity Department and will be put into general circulation as a means of advertising the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Machinery Hall when completed will be the largest wooden structure in the world.

BOSTON FILM MAN RETURNS FROM EUROPE.

Prof. S. Jannelli, who, with Frank Boschetti, has several New England moving picture interests, has just returned from an extended tour abroad, having covered a great part of continental Europe and spending considerable time in Italy, where he was in conference with many of the leading foreign film producers. He contracted for many new releases while abroad and they will be shown in this country in the near future.

During the absence of Prof. Jannelli, Mr. Boschetti has assumed the active management of the Majestic Feature Film Exchange in Boston, the Cosmopolitan theater in Lawrence and the Majestic theater in Haverhill, and has proven an astute and careful business manager. The Majestic Feature Film Exchange expect to release in the near future many of the productions which Prof. Jannelli has secured. Several of the films purchased will number among the best imported pictures ever shown on this side of the water.

"WHEN MEN HATE."

A story dealing with feudal conditions in the South has just been completed for Warner's Features by Director Sidney Olcott. Miss Gene Gauntier plays the part of Ruth, daughter of Jim Morrison, at war with a family of Westons. Jack J. Clark plays the part of Donald Weston, a young mountaineer who kidnaps Ruth and forces her to marry him at pistol point to revenge himself for the murder of his father by her father. Weston has already wounded her father and he is helpless to prevent his daughter, who is nursing him, from being carried off. The ending of the feud is brought about in a strange manner by an ordinary house cat. The story is entitled "When Men Hate." It is three reels in length, and was written by Miss Gene Gauntier.

Scene from "When Men Hate" (Warner).

FRED MACE AND THE REAL THING.

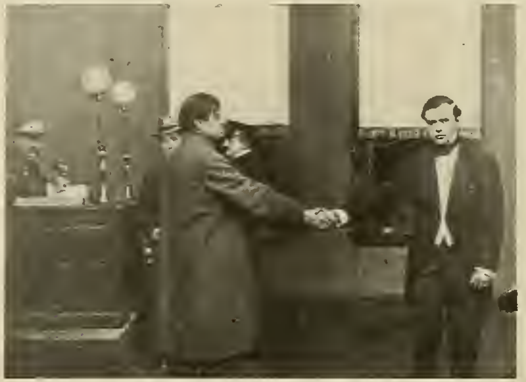
The real thing in this case is a real pugilist who was wheedled by Fred Mace into appearing in a Majestic release entitled "One Round O'Brien Comes Back." Mace is a believer in realism in the ultissimo. Therefore when the script called for a prize-fighter he went out and rounded up a Los Angeles pugilistic celebrity known as "Bull" Young. "Bull" is to be seen in the illustration measuring Fred Mace for the famous Young upper-cut, which is the terror of California white hopes.

MURRAY F. BEIER STARTS FEATURE BUSINESS.

Murray F. Beier, manager of the New York office of the Sedeg Feature Film Company, has resigned to start the Emby Feature Film Company, with offices at No. 145 West 45th Street, New York City. Mr. Beier will give special attention to Itala "Big Films" and has secured exclusive rights for the Itala product for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. Mr. Beier formerly held a high executive position with the Pathe Freres Company.

A FINE BIT OF DOUBLE EXPOSURE.

The accompanying illustration is made direct from a piece of the Edison film, entitled "The Twin Brother." It shows Augustus Phillips in a dual role, shaking hands with himself. Good double exposure work is not at all rare in these days of better films, but, but in this case we have a remarkable example of what can be done by clever manipulation.



Augustus Phillips in Dual Role.

The Edison Company have made a long, patient study of double exposure with some surprisingly fine results, but we doubt if they or any other manufacturer have ever before produced such a wonderful result as that of a man shaking hands with himself in a picture. In another part of the film Mr. Phillips snatches a photograph away from his double, portrayed by himself.

WASHINGTON FILM EXCHANGE MOVES.

A short move will be made by the Washington Film Exchange Branch of the Interstate Films Company, which will vacate its present quarters at 426 Ninth Street, N. W., and occupy larger and better quarters across the street at numbers 419-421. This change of address is due to increasing business, which is attributed largely to the activity of Mr. A. Dresner, the new manager of this exchange. Mr. Dresner has had a long connection with motion picture business. He began with "Pop" Lubin in Philadelphia, twelve years ago, and was sent to open the Lubin house in Cincinnati in 1908. He afterward opened and managed the Lubin Film Service in Cincinnati until it was absorbed by the General Film Company. During his stay in Cincinnati Mr. Dresner did many things to elevate the tone of the business, and left a world of friends in that city when he left it to go to Washington. In his new surroundings Mr. Dresner is building up a new set of firm friends by his understanding of his business and his sqffiuare ways of dealing. The Universal service is handled in this exchange.

RAMO REMARKS.

The Ramo producer, Will S. Davis, has just completed a two-reel feature, with which the entire Ramo organization is delighted. The picture is one of tense human interest, entitled "Man and Woman." The big scene is a court room, where "Jack Hopkins," an innocent man, is on trial for his life.

Ramo pictures are getting to be very popular, due in large measure to the activities of C. Lang Cobb, Jr., who represents the company on the road and has general charge of the publicity work of the Ramo films.

Wray Physioc, the artistic mind of the organization, has been quite busy over at Whitestone, Long Island, photographing the maneuvers of the American Boy Scouts. Three thousand boys took part in the drills. Mr. Physioc is the designer of the Ramo trade mark; the classiest trade mark in the business.

Mary Alden, the Ramo leading lady, is establishing a record as a quick change artist. The other day she changed costume fourteen times. This goes to show that all the work an actress has to do does not appear in the picture. Stage struck maidens seldom think about that part of it.

Stuart Holmes, formerly of the Kalem Company, has joined the Ramo Stock Company, which will give him a wider range of opportunity, and which will be an added strength to the Ramo artistic department.

"THE TANGLED WEB" (Reliance).

The scenario for this picture was written by Garfield Thompson as a vehicle to introduce Rosemary Theby as a Reliance star. Her clever work as "Leone St. Regis" fulfills every expectation. Miss Theby plays a designing woman who weaves a web about a boy when he is still in college; causes him to be expelled, lures him away from his mother's influence and later, when he wants to cast her off she shoots herself, and the shot merely grazing her temple, she accuses him of attempting her life, and he is sent to prison. Escaping from jail he meets and marries a good girl to whom he never tells the story of his past life. Leone meets him again and recognizes him. She schemes to get him into her power again by threatening to tell his wife what he has been. She meets Ruth and accuses him before her. But he tells the girl the truth and she believes in her husband. Leone works herself up into a frenzy and notifies the police, but before she can fulfill her object an attack of heart failure seizes her and, realizing that she is very near death, the good that is in the worst of us comes to the fore and she writes her confession vindicating the young man in the eyes of the world.

Scene from "The Tangled Web" (Reliance).

Directed by Oscar C. Apfel, this picture is a notably strong production, with an unusually able cast, including Irving Cummings, Miss Virginia Westbrook, Ralph Lewis, Sue Balfour and little Elsie Balfour, sometimes known as the child Bernhardt.

PATHE'S WEEKLY TWICE A WEEK.

Pathe Freres wish to thank the exhibitors for their prompt response to the announcement that a Pathe's Weekly would be released every Monday and Thursday hereafter. Quick action was necessary for the best interests of all concerned and the co-operation of the exhibitors, Pathe Freres say, is very gratifying. The aim of the additional weekly seems to be to enable licensed exhibitors to show their patrons the news of the world four days earlier than was possible under the old system. That the exhibitors realized the advantage of this arrangement is proven by the manner in which they replied to the request to book the new release, which makes the output of Pathe Freres seven reels a week. The success of the new Weekly is assured and the exhibitors are responsible.

Another innovation is the scheme for selling the posters for the Weekly by which they are being mailed direct to exhibitors on the basis of a three months' subscription. For a new and untried arrangement this system has received encouraging support, the vast majority of the exhibitors realizing that the object of Pathe Freres in installing a complete printing plant of their own was to get the posters for both Weeklies to the exhibitors in a jiffy, to have them well printed and to sell them as cheaply as possible.

LITERARY NOTE.

Just in from his European retirement for a short United States visit, Edwin Thanhouser spent Saturday evening at the Fairmount Athletic Club, New York City. He is the man who made the Thanhouser Classic famous. Bert Adler, who wrote about the Classic, was with him. William Russell, who played classic roles in these selfsame Classics, was host. All three enjoyed the exercises of the evening, the main feature of which was the classic trimming of Johnny Mayo by Young Kirkwood.

ITALA COMPANY ANNOUNCES FIXED TERRITORIAL APPORTIONMENT.

Itala Features, or "Big Films" as they are perhaps better known, in the future will be distributed according to the following territorial apportionment. This arrangement deviates but little from the former Itala policy except in rare instances where States are divided so as to allow better and wider circulation of the features, the aim being to place the product with as many exhibitors as possible.

Canada will be sold alone.

Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts will be sold together.

New York State, exclusive of New York City, sold alone.

New York City and Northern New Jersey, sold together.

Southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania together.

Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia together.

Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia together.

Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and Florida are sold together, or separately.

Michigan and Wisconsin together.

Ohio alone.

Indiana and Kentucky together.

Illinois, north of Litchfield, sold alone.

Illinois, south of Litchfield, and Eastern Missouri together.

Western Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Northern Oklahoma together.

Southern Oklahoma and Texas together.

Minnesota, North and South Dakota together.

Nebraska and Iowa together.

Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico together.

Washington, Oregon and Idaho together.

California, Nevada and Arizona together.

The foregoing schedule was decided upon after a careful estimate of the population of the various territories had been made and the number of theaters in each. Much of the territory has already been contracted for, covering all Itala releases at the rate of two each month, for periods ranging from three months to one year. The contract system assures the buyer of exclusive control of Itala "Big Films" in his territory, besides offering the advantage of wholesale prices on such time contracts.

AMERICAN FILM AGENCY IN EUROPE.

Mr. E. Seville Williams, of the General Film Agency, Ltd., of London, has been one of our across-the-water film visitors in New York for the past few days. The primary object of his visit has been to secure the agency for a high grade brand of American-made film and he is very optimistic over the market in Europe for our productions. His company has offices in London and Paris and four sub-agencies in Europe and are handling the well-known Milano films in the English market with considerable success. He believes in specializing and has studied the projection end of the industry for several years, consequently our American-made projectors have been receiving some of his time and attention. Conditions in Great Britain and the Continent in the film market are altogether different from what they are here and require direct attention and close application secure a fair share of the business even for the best production. For this reason, Mr. Williams believes his company is well equipped to get the very best results possible for the finest American films he can secure. He will only be here for a few more days and says he has enjoyed his visit exceedingly and has been fortunate in meeting many of our prominent men in the trade who have shown him every courtesy.

PILOT NOTES.

Miss Lillie Barrington of the Pilot Company, of Yonkers, N. Y., who sailed for a four months' tour of Europe, is returning to America on the 17th of June on account of the sudden death, on June 6th, of her traveling companion, Mrs. M. A. Wright, of 12 West 71st Street, New York City, in Berlin, Germany.

J. W. Hartman, who has been playing in an all-star cast at the Lyric Theater in "Arizona," is back again with the Pilot Company. Mr. Hartman was with the Pilot Company prior to the time he played at the Lyric.

The Pilot Company has completed its outdoor stage and already taken one picture on it. The stage was finished June 10, and Director Vale and his troupe were at work turning out a comedy drama the next day.

E. J. Martin, scenic artist of the Pilot Company, is now prepared for summer sport. He has just bought a 22-foot, 5-horsepower motorboat.

HELEN G

In THE WIF

A ROMANCE OF

Copyrighted, 1913, by Helen

Written and Directed by

PRODUCED BY THE HELEN GARDNER

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

Author's Note: Being simply a romance inspired by the statement in Genesis that Cain went out of the presence of the Lord and dwelt in the land of Nod, where he knew his wife, this picture does not aim to accomplish more than your entertainment and amusement. It is neither historical nor theological: it is fanciful.

It is to be remembered that there are two accounts of the beginning of man: one, the Mosaic account, is inspired history; the other is the evolutionary theory based upon the deductions of Darwin and other reasoners. The first account conveys the information that man was created fresh and perfect by God, who blew the breath of life into his body. It would seem absurd to assume that such a being, possessed of all the attributes of man fresh from the hands of his Creator, were so dull of mind and stupid that he would fail to take advantage of the simple principles of material existence. Surely, he must have been as wise as Robinson Crusoe. If an inventor today can invent a wonderful machine before he is thirty years old, is it reasonable to assume that Adam, the very mighty product of God, and his progeny, continued to live naked, and in the dirt, nine hundred and twenty years?

It has been assumed in this story, simply, that Adam and his wife and children were possessed of ordinary common sense, and that the almost obvious necessities and graces of human life were within their knowledge.

Respecting the people of the land of Nod, who are introduced in this story, and, more particularly, their origin, it is enough to say they are purely imaginative. Nevertheless, it is not impossible to deduce from the Biblical context a sufficient premise upon which to contend the existence of other men than Adam and his descendants. It is a matter about which anyone may think as he will, and as thinking persons do.

As stated above, this story does not aim to teach any principle, nor does it pretend historical accuracy even approximately. Its design is to interest and amuse through its poetic beauty and dramatic order. It is merely a fanciful story of the regeneration of the first crime-committer through the charming philosophy of a wonderful woman.

Part I.

This section of the story deals intimately with the first crime—the destruction of Abel by his brother Cain, the sorrow of Adam and Eve, the cursing, branding and driving away of Cain, his heavy sorrow and terror, his wanderings—and finally his meeting with Save, the daughter of Omar, the hunter, in the land of Nod. He is about to destroy himself when Save meets him and says:

"It is no sacrifice to lose thy life which thou lovest not: but find that which thou lovest above thy life, and part thyself from that forever—that is expiation!"

Cain tells her that he loves nothing more than his life,

It would be unfair to judge of the picture merits of a picture story by a poetic nature, but of high dramatic force. It is tragic, and, at moments, and that he hates that. But the woman's wisdom is plain enough to him, and he starts out to find that which he will love more than his life, so that by parting himself from it forever he may expiate his terrible crime. Zeeban, a worker of magic, whom all people fear and obey because of that fear, announces that he will take Save for his wife, notwithstanding he already has one wife, a jealous woman named Januh. When Zeeban declares that Save shall become his wife Cain sees as by a flash of lightning that the thing which he loves above his life is—Save herself.

Part II.

It is shown clearly that Januh, the wife of Zeeban, means to murder Save. Zeeban discovers her intention, and has her put into the Pit of Death, a cave in which those condemned to die are made to starve to death. Cain, unacquainted with the customs and laws of Nod, and equally unacquainted with the intention of Januh, releases Januh by a trick. After the bridal ceremony in which according to the rites of the land Save becomes the possession of Zeeban, Januh sneaks into the nuptual chamber and stabs Zeeban to death. Save, not knowing how Zeeban came to his death, runs out of the chamber, her shriek bringing Cain, who has been in hiding, into the place. He is seized as the murderer, and, believing indeed that Save herself has committed the crime, he suffers himself to be led away and put into the Pit of Death. Save searches for Cain in the wilderness where she first met him. She meets Januh, who tells her that Cain is in the pit, and hastens there. She herself is believed to be an accomplice, and is thrown into the pit. There she finds Cain almost dead of starvation.

Part III.

Loving her with a great passion, Cain steadfastly refuses to take Save as his wife, convinced as he is that only by sacrificing some thing which he loves more than his life can he condone his great crime. Save herself is satisfied that he is right, and they resign themselves to death. Januh, unable to keep from them, climbs out upon a tree branch over the mouth of the pit, so that she can taunt them and watch them die. At a very dramatic moment the branch breaks, and, clutching the leaves to save herself, Januh's hair becomes entangled so that she is caught up, and her neck is broken in mid-air. Over her body Cain reaches the limb, and thence he reaches the outside. It is only a few moments before he has rescued Save. She discovers that the brand, put on his forehead by God, has vanished, and, taking it for a token of Cain's full forgivenness, Save and Cain leave the land as man and wife. Years after, and in accordance with the account by Moses, Cain builds a great city, and calls it Enoch, after his first-born son.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

ON TUESDAY, June 3, Governor Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts, sent to the legislature a veto of House bill 2320 introduced on petition of the American Federation of Labor, entitled "An Act Relative to the Use of the Cinematograph and Similar Apparatus." This bill which had been passed by the House contains the following provisions: first, that nobody shall operate certain moving picture apparatus without a first-class license from the State police, nor obtain such a license without having first held a second-class license; second, that nobody shall hold a second class license (giving the right to operate such an apparatus only in the presence of the holder of a first-class license), unless he has been employed for six months as an assistant, under the holder of a first-class license; and third, that nobody can become an asistant, within the meaning of this section of the act, except upon the endorsement of the holder of a first-class license. People who have operated such apparatus under a license previously issued by the State police, may under certain conditions, obtain a first-class license, and this condition also applies to persons who have operated moving picture machines outside of Massachusetts for a period of six months, providing they pass the examinations of the State police. Governor Foss in his veto, stated that the significance of these provisions is very notable and that the underlying principle of the act, if approved, would be "revolutionary in respect to the industrial future of Massachusetts."

The governor stated that the bill is an infringement of essential personal liberties, and declared in substance, that if the bill should become a law, "no man can possess the right to the particular means of livelihood involved, unless he first secures the permission of the men already qualified and engaged in such occupation." The governor feels that the bill would place the moving picture operators' trade in the control of a few men, and that the legislation would be dangerous in other cases. A part of the governor's veto follows:

> The bill declares that the vocation of operating moving picture machines in this State shall rest only in the hands of persons now eligible to operate them under our laws or of other persons whom they shall specify and definitely nominate and select. The exception noted allows persons from other States to come here and operate machines without having subscribed to the terms of this bill; and conversely it will compel citizens of this State, desiring to enter this line of work but unable to secure permission from those now engaged in it, to go to some other State.
> I trust that the attention of the Legislature will be again given, with deep and earnest study, to the provisions of this bill, and that the entire public of the Commonwealth will also take immediate cognizance thereof.
>
> The constitution of Massachusetts declares in its preamble that the end of government, in its institution, its maintenance and its administration, is to furnish the individuals who compose it with the power of enjoying it safety and tranquility their natural rights.
>
> In this bill the policy of the Commonwealth would be turned directly counter to the fundamental principles of personal liberty and equality of opportunity which are the safeguards of the State, and which it is our duty to maintain.
> If this bill becomes a law, then no man can possess the right to the particular means of livelihood involved unless he first secures the permission of the men already qualified and engaged in such occupation.
>
> This is precisely as if the bill should say that no one could become a farmer in Massachusetts without first securing the permission of other farmers, or that no one could operate a store without the permission of other merchants; or earn his living as a machinist without the permission of organized machinists.
>
> Insofar as the bill provides that nobody shall operate a particular and dangerous class of apparatus unless duly certified thereto by the State police, I am in sympathy with it. In fact, our existing laws contain this requirement. Insofar as the bill requires that nobody shall operate such a machine without the additional sanction of those already interested in this particular business, I am unalterably opposed to it.
>
> The bill, in my judgment, is a dangerous piece of legislation, for if we recognize this principle in legislation then it will undoubtedly form a basis for other repressive measures, vastly greater in their scope.
> (Signed) Eugene N. Foss.

On Wednesday, June 4, Governor Foss was sustained in his veto, when the House took up the measure to regulate the operation of moving picture machines. Mr. Stone, of Everett, urged the House to override the veto, stating that the bill was drafted with extreme care, and was opposed by nobody, during the hearings. Mr. Underhill, of Somerville, opposed the bill, laying stress on the governor's point, that under its provisions, no person can become an operator without the consent of those already in the trade. The bill was favored by Messrs. Carr, of Boston, and W. J. Sullivan, of Boston. By a vote of 106 to 99, a two-thirds vote, being necessary, the House "killed the bill."

The Scenic Temple, Boston, is always on the watch to secure some topical moving picture for its patrons. The "Parade of the Boston School Regiment," showing the school boys in action pulled in good attendance for this house. Lenna Howe's Union Orchestra is still a feature at the Scenic Temple.

The Gaiety theater, Boston, is doing well with its supplementary season of moving pictures. The principal attraction this week is Nat. C. Goodwin as Fagin in "Oliver Twist."

Lexington Park, the well known summer resort near Boston, is again open for the season. At the Rustic theater, the usual vaudeville and photoplay programs are offered. Indications point to a good season's business at this park.

Judge Hardy, of the Superior Court, on June 6, on a bill filed by Harriet O. Cruft, owner of five houses on Haviland Street, Boston, restrains the Mutual Film Corporation of Massachusetts, from operating its machines or burning unshaded lights in its offices in the Walker-Gordon Building, 1106 Boylston Street, and abutting in the rear on the Haviland Street property, between 9 p.m. and 7 a.m. Mrs. Cruft alleges that, by reason of the lights and noises tenants had threatened to leave her house on the expiration of their leases, because they were unable to sleep.

A. A. Ormshee opened the Majestic theater, Taunton, Mass., on May 30, and has found business very good, right from the start. This theater is offering a good grade of moving pictures, and should have no difficulty in getting a share of the trade.

On June 2, Leonard Brothers, reopened their Star Theater, Taunton, Mass., with a big bill of vaudeville and photoplays. The Star has been thoroughly overhauler, and looks very inviting.

The Nickel Theater, Haverhill, Mass., has closed for the season, June 1 being the date of the last performance. The Nickel will reopen early in August, with its regulation programs of pictures.

Manager I. M. Mosher, of Keith's Hippodrome theater, Portland, Me., closed his winter season of vaudeville and pictures on May 31, and inaugurated a summer season of stock company attractions. Mr. Mosher will switch back to the former policy by early Fall.

Greeley's theater, Portland, Me., now boasts of a "Big Musical Comedy Company," as an added attraction. Manager Greely is still showing feature pictures, of course.

Messrs. Spitz and Nathanson, owners of a prosperous string of New England theaters, devoted to the exploitation of vaudeville and moving picture programs, announce that they have decided to erect a new theater in Providence, R. I. The location selected is Olneyville Square. The firm expects to spend about $75,000 on their latest venture, and the plans call for a modern and fire-proof theater. The house should have its opening by November first. The Empire theater, of Providence, is owned by Spitz and Nathanson. It is managed by Mr. Sol. Braunig, and does a capacity business as a general thing. The Empire offers kinemacolor pictures, as a special feature.

H. A. Chenoweth, manager of the Shawmut theater, Boston, is showing what a real, live manager can accomplish with a vaudeville and photoplay house. Mr. Chenoweth is continually offering new "stunts," that never fail to appeal to his audiences. For instance, on June 2, an open piano contest was held, and on June 4, a baby contest was an added attraction. While such things are not desirable for small houses, nor perhaps, for theaters in the busy, business districts of large metropolitan centers, yet these "specials" seem to hit the popular taste in theaters, located in the residential sections. At all events, Mr. Chenoweth is putting the Shawmut theater on the map, and, according to indications, the theater will be open during the entire summer.

James H. Donovan, manager of the Central Square theater, Lynn, Mass., has entered upon his summer season policy, which means the illumination of vaudeville, and a straight program of photoplays and illustrated songs. Manager Donovan finds business to be fairly good, considering the season of the year.

The Lynn theater, Lynn, Mass., closed for the summer, after tempting the public with a week of photoplays and illustrated songs. Business at this house has not been up to expectations during the past season, as the public did not respond to the vaudeville and picture programs. The Lynn theater is controlled by the B. F. Keith interests, and it is not certain what will be done with the house this Fall. Jeff Callan, who managed the theater, has left for New York, taking his regular summer position, with the United Booking offices.

J. R. Crane is now engaged busily looking after his concessions at Riverside Park, near Springfield, Mass. Mr. Crane had been the superintendent of Poli's theater, Springfield, since its opening performance, but was forced to resign, to protect his interests at the park.

Moving picture exhibitors from all corners of Maine met at Waterville, on Wednesday, June 4, and held what was known as the "Maine Moving Picture Exhibitors' first annual convention." The inclement weather on Tuesday and early Wednesday, hindered many from attending, who would otherwise have been present. There were sufficient present, however, to make the affair a great success. The convention opened with a special "run-off" of Mutual films in the Silver theater. Shortly after 10 o'clock, the exhibitors and various representatives of the moving picture machine manufacturers, witnessed one of the best exhibitions of films that has ever been shown in the State of Maine. Several single reel pictures were shown, but the greatest treat was the five reel subject, "The Battle of Gettysburg." Following the display of pictures, which was over shortly before 1 o'clock, the exhibitors went to the local armory, where a delightful buffet lunch was served. At the conclusion of the luncheon, Fred B. Murphy, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's Maine branch, called the exhibitors together, and made an able address, in which he earnestly urged the exhibitors to league together, as have their brother workers, in nearly every state, to protect themselves against unjust legislation, that would be detrimental to their business. The exhibitors were advised what benefits the trade in other states had secured for their business, simply by being banded together for a common cause. C. B. Kelleher, manager of the City Opera House, acted as chairman of the convention. A committee was then appointed, to take steps toward making the temporary league a permanent one. F. X. Cote, a well known exhibitor of Biddeford, Me., was appointed a member of the committee, but withdrew because of the difficulty of getting from Biddeford to the large cities, where the exhibitors will meet. The final committee appointed consisted of Arthur Allen of the Palace theater, Bangor, J. A. Emery, of the Star theater, Bar Harbor and Michael St. Ledger of Skowhegan. Each exhibitor present was assessed a nominal sum, in order to defray current expenses of the committee and to bring M. A. Neff, president of the National League, and his organizers to Maine. The board appointed will confer with the Exhibitors' League of America, and with Mr. Neff, who was unable to be present, on account of sudden illness at Baltimore, and will report at a special meeting of the exhibitors, which will be held in Bangor, in about two weeks. The exhibitors left Waterville well pleased with the cordial reception tendered them and, from indications, Maine exhibitors will soon have a healthy baby in the shape of the youngest member of the Exhibitors' League. Now that such an encouraging start has been made the matter should be pushed right along, and nothing left undone to assure Maine exhibitors forming their local.

The Gordon Brothers Amusement Company, owning a large chain of theaters devoted to the exploitation of vaudeville and photoplays, are reported to have completed arrangements, whereby they have secured ground in Worcester from the Bigelow estate, upon which they will erect a large theater, to be operated along the usual Gordon policy.

Along with this report, it is also rumored that this concern has leased the Lyric theater of Bridgeport, Conn., from William Fox. Both of these statements are as yet unsubstantiated, but it is thought they are very nearly correct.

A. Goodside, of Portland, Me., has secured property on Oak Street, near Congress, of this city, upon which he will erect a theater to be devoted to vaudeville and moving picture programs. The location is a very good one, being near to the Jefferson theater and there should be plenty of business available for the new house. The theater will be modern and first-class in every way, with a seating capacity of about 1500, and should be completed by the last of August, or first of September.

Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston, has a new idea which is to give shows at the various city parks, charging five and ten cents as admission. Corporation Counsel Corbett has advised the Mayor that it will not be lawful to charge admission in the parks, and the Mayor is now trying to overcome this difficulty.

"Mike" Sheedy, well known to the New England trade, has opened a booking agency in the Lawrence Building, Boston in charge of "Jack" Magann. This vaudeville agency is doing business with a number of moving picture theaters that use acts as an added feature of their programs.

The Empire theater, Pittsfield, Mass., has seen the light at last, and is now to be operated as a vaudeville and photoplay theater under the management of Mr. Strong, from Glens Falls, N. Y. The Empire has had a most unsatisfactory season, having been under four different managements, none of which was able to do anything with the house. Now that vaudeville and pictures have been selected as the policy, there is no reason why the Empire should not be able to show a profit instead of the usual loss.

G. MELIES, 204 East 38th St., New York or Santa Paula, Cal.

Manager O. Williams, of the Casino theater, Providence, R. I., reports excellent business, with a straight program of photoplays. Mr. Williams finds it easy to fill his house, without using any vaudeville.

The Providence, R. I., Opera House, secured the five reel feature "The Battle of Gettysburg," from the Boston office of the Mutual Film Corporation, and will show these films for an eleven day run, starting Tuesday, June 10.

Freeman Bernstein, the well known New York vaudeville agent has opened offices at 218 Tremont Street, Boston, under the charge of I. F. Moore, and an effort will be made to book acts in New England vaudeville and photoplay theaters.

William Gane, who was managing the Witch Theater, Salem, Mass., until its career was cut short last April, by fire has returned to New York. Mr. Gane reports that the Witch theater is to be rebuilt.

Five years ago the Columbia theater, Bath, Me., was destroyed by fire, and nobody seemed to think the house worth rebuilding, until Frank W. Burt, looked over the proposition, this spring. Mr. Burt had the Columbia entirely rebuilt and erected a first-class theater, which he is operating as a straight moving picture theater, no vaudeville being used. Last week the house was given its debut, at which Mayor Edward W. Larrabee was present, introducing Manager Burt to the audience. Business opened up in fine shape, it being reported that 1500 people attended the opening.

Manager Fred M. Engley of the New Empire theater, Rockford, Me., is certainly giving a tremendous show to his patrons. Seven reels of photoplays, and a stock company is what the Empire is offering. Good business is the result of this liberal policy, according to Mr. Tngley.

A. Paul Keith and E. F. Albee, were in St. John, Canada, last week, looking over their new Keith theater.

Miss Ruth B. Law, sister of Rodman Law, who does "stunts" for Reliance films, is an expert aviatrix, as she proved to everyone's entire satisfaction after giving exhibitions of spiral flyings at Rocky Point, near Providence, R. I., last week.

Manager W. A. Locke, Jr., of the Columbia Theater, Taunton, Mass., now has a fine, up-to-date theater, as the seating capacity of his theater has been increased by 300, due to the installing of a balcony. Mr. Locke also has increased the size of his stage, and finds that business is responding nicely to the large bills of vaudeville and photoplays he is giving.

The Majestic Theater is the latest house at Taunton, Mass., to enter the field of vaudeville and moving picture houses. The Majestic was formerly known as Odd Fellows Hall. Extensive alterations and improvements were made, and the house at present has a seating capacity of 900, including a balcony. A straight program of photoplays and songs is now being given. Five reels of pictures, changed three times each week, is the present policy although vaudeville acts may be added later on. Manager William A. Ormsbee has great faith in the future of the Majestic, and has no doubt but what the house will prove itself a money-maker. The Majestic is well located, and should not have any great difficulty in securing its share of the Taunton trade, although competition is keen in this city.

A new theater is assured for Lowell, Mass., as Messrs. Harpoot and Topijan have purchased land on Merrimack and Tremont streets, upon which they will erect a theater. Plans have been ordered, calling for a first-class house, with a total seating capacity of 1,250 people. The new theater will be of brick and steel construction, and thoroughly fireproof in every way. Messrs. Harpoot and Topijan state they will spare no expense and expect to have the finest theater in Lowell, to be devoted to vaudeville and picture programs. The location selected is an unusually good one, and it would appear that this proposition is to be a winner for its owners.

The Congress Theater, Greenwich, Conn., is finding business very good, and has installed a Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizer, which has proved very satisfactory to the management.

The Gordon Photoplay House, at Rochester, N. Y., is doing a capacity business, according to Nathan H. Gordon, of the Gordon Brothers' Amusement Company, of Boston. This concern is very enterprising and active, and sees no reason why it should limit the scope of its operations to the New England territory.

Feature pictures are doing very well at the Gaiety Theater, Boston, and the management has decided to continue the policy for a time. The programs are given under the direct supervision of Manager Ripley, who is the business manager of the house for George H. Batchellor.

On Tuesday, May 27, members of the Massachusetts Branch of the Exhibitors' League held a meeting at their Boston headquarters, to take action on the resignation of the president, Joseph Mack, and to choose delegates to the New York Convention. No business of any nature was transacted, owing to lack of a quorum. This is the third meeting that has been held in the last three weeks, at which nothing was accomplished, owing to insufficient representation of members. The Massachusetts Branch seems to be suffering a severe case of lack of interest, following the defeat of the "Low bill" in the Massachusetts Senate. No date has been made at this writing for the next meeting.

Anthony Stern, or "Buck," as he is usually called, is making loads of friends these days at the Boston offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, where he holds forth as "booker." "Buck" is the man that dopes out the programs for many Mutual exhibitors.

A. S. Phillips, attorney for Congressman W. S. Greene, owner of the Bijou Theater, Fall River, Mass., has taken possession of this theater, on account of the lesse, the E. & G. Theater Company, of Providence, R. I., being in arrears in rent.

Harry Morrissey, of New Bedford, Mass., has been elected a delegate from the local of that city to the convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Employes, to be held in Seattle, Washington, during the first week in July.

The Star Theater, Dover, N. H., hit upon a novel scheme to bring in the dimes, when it gave a special performance to about 300 Greeks, showing Balkan War pictures, at advanced prices. Vaudeville and picture programs are doing very well at this house.

Manager Streeter has sold out his interests in the Bijou Theater, Greenfield, Mass., to Mr. William A. Davenport. The Bijou will be operated as a vaudeville and photoplay theater, as usual.

The new Victoria Theater, Greenfield, Mass., will soon be open to the public by Managers McCarthy and Streeter. This house is a first-class one in every respect, and should do well.

Waterville, Me., is to hold a real convention, to start June 4, with the idea of establishing a branch of the Exhibitors' League of America. It is believed that at least 200 exhibitors from the State of Maine will be present, as well as representatives of moving picture machines, etc. Governor Haines and Mayor Pattangall are to be among the especially invited guests, and the governor will be asked to address the exhibitors. Manager Fred B. Murphy, of the Maine branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has arranged to entertain the exhibitors at the Silver Theater, where the five-reel subject, "The Battle of Gettysburg," will be shown. There is no reason why Maine exhibitors should not get together and form a well-knit branch of the Exhibitors' League, and there is every good reason why they should do so. They are just in time to elect delegates to the New York Convention, this July. Get together, all you moving picture people of Maine, for your own benefit!

The Fairyland Theater, Camden, Me., is to have competition before very long, as S. Hansen has secured a site, next to Fairyland, where he will build a first-class theater, to be devoted to a straight photoplay program, no vaudeville to be used. The Fairyland Theater reports very good business.

Cornelius Quinlan has decided to erect a moving picture theater on Main street, Fitchburg, Mass. A splendid location has been secured, near the Fitchburg Savings Bank. Mr. Quinlan's new house will seat 650 persons, and is to be of brick construction. A stage will probably be built, so that vaudeville can be used, in connection with the photoplays.

It looks very much as if Springfield, Mass., is to have another theater in the near future. The Hampden Realty Company has decided to erect a large theater at the corner of Bliss and Main streets, and plans are now being made, which call for a modern and thoroughly fireproof theater, to seat 1,500 persons. The new house will be devoted to the exploitation of vaudeville and pictures. Although Springfield has a number of photoplay houses, yet the proposed theater has an unusually good location, and should get its share of the trade.

At Tremont Temple, Boston, beginning Monday, June 9, the Carnegie Museum Alaska-Siberia motion pictures are scheduled for exhibition. These pictures will be run at Tremont Temple for about one month, unless business should fall off unexpectedly.

George W. Allen, the New Bedford exhibitor, who had an attack of appendicitis, is now recovering, which will be good news to the many friends of Mr. Allen, who is a great favorite with his brother exhibitors.

PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM I. FORREY and M. E. Riebstein, both of this city, recently purchased the Crescent Theater at Reading, from J. G. Wolf. Mr. Forrey will manage the theater and will reside in Reading.

Frank Buhler, manager of the Bijou Dream Theater of 1205 Market street, with Mr. A. L. Boyd have opened the Family Theater at Newark. Mr. Buhler will manage the Newark house for a short time. While Mr. Buhler is in Newark, Mr. Joseph Wallace, assistant manager of the Bijou Dream, will have charge of the local house.

William R. Mack, who has the state-right on "Cleopatra," is working up a great line of bookings in Philadelphia. The William Penn Theater, which has the largest seating capacity of any theater in Philadelphia, has booked the show for an entire week. It is also rumored that the show will be placed on exhibition at the Forest Theater.

The office of the Warner Features, which is under the management of Ben Abrams, has recently been altered and the office force increased. Mr. Abrams now occupies a private office, at which visitors are always welcome.

George Graff, who was formerly connected with the Quaker City Features and later with the Star Feature Film Company, is contemplating opening a feature film service in the city.

Louis H. Choan, a veteran motion picture exhibitor of this city, is about to have erected a new theater at Tulpehocken street and Germantown avenue. Plans are now being made by a local architect.

Adolph Bonner will operate a new theater at Sixth and Pike streets which is now in course of construction.

Peter Maguire is having plans prepared for a moving picture theater to be erected at Sixtieth street and Cedar avenue, which is to cost $12,000. The building is to be one story brick, 75 x 110 feet, with a seating capacity of 975.

The Grand Opera House, at Broad and Montgomery streets, is running a five cent picture show and will continue for the summer. Directly after it is closed alterations will be made to the interior and with the winter season opening, high class vaudeville attractions will be run. Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger is the new manager.

The Mansion Realty Company has taken title to a plot of ground at 32325-41 Ridge avenue as a site for a moving picture house. The theater will be one of the finest in the northwest section and will cost about $20,000.

F. William Kamp was in charge of the display of the Calehuff Supply Company at the exhibit of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Convention.

The Kinemacolor Company of America was on deck at the showing of "La Parisienne Elegante in Her Boudoir," at the Gimble Brothers' Store, this city, and photographed demonstrations of how ladies are to wear the latest style of French lingerie.

The new Plaza Theater, located at Broad and Porter streets, was opened on May 20, and the management was more than pleased with crowds that patronized the house.

J. F. McCartney, owner of the Empire Theater, Frankford, is having the building remodeled and a number of improvements made, which will make the place safer and also increase the seating capacity.

Councilman Wilson, of Reading, has offered a bill to the City Council, which, if passed, will make it unlawful for motion picture exhibitors to show any picture in that city which has not been passed by the National Board of Censors.

Frank Buhler, manager of the Bijou Dream Theater, recently returned from Newark, where he opened a new theater for R. Boyd, owner of a Philadelphia house.

Charles Kaplan will erect a moving picture house at 1426 South Fourth street. The theater will be a one-story brick building, and will cost about $14,000.

The Somerset Amusement Company will operate a new picture theater, which is now in the course of construction at Twenty-sixth and Somerset streets. The theater will involve many new ideas, and will cost $11,000.

Camden, N. J., exhibitors are not very much pleased with an ordinance which was recently passed by the Council of that city. The new law, which went into effect recently, has increased the license fee of all theaters.

Excessive rains recently caused the rear roof of the Princess Theater in Camden to fall, entailing a loss of about $3,000. Included in the wreck was an $1,800 electric player piano. Five rows of seats were also demolished, and much of the scenery and screen was wrecked. The theater is owned by Abe Greenburg.

Reading, Pa., exhibitors have formed an association, which will be affiliated with the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and will hold regular weekly meetings at the Victor Theater. It is the purpose of those back of the association to have every exhibitor in Reading a member.

CONGDON.

PORTLAND.

P. M. STANDISH has been named to succeed O. H. Kerr, as manager of the Circle Theater of Portland.

Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the Peoples Amusement Company, has returned from a three weeks' trip from Los Angeles. In an interview with Mr. Winstock, he said: "Los Angeles is the Paradise of the world in the moving picture profession. Over 5,000 people are employed to produce the pictures through wonderfully organized companies. Over $20,000,000 is invested in this superb industry and splendid salaries are paid their people. Something of interest is the keen rivalry between the companies to see the number of pictures that can be turned out." While at Los Angeles, Mr. Winstock was the guest of the Photoplayers' Club and addressed the members on several occasions. He has several new features up his sleeve which he intends to spring on the public in the near future in the way of some classical features that he has booked outright from the companies while visiting at the studios in Southern California during his stay in Los Angeles.

BUFFALO.

BERNARD VOHWINKEL has filed plans for the erection of a moving picture theater at 1592 Genesee street, Buffalo, to cost $40,000. The building is to replace the present theater on the same site.

A new one-story brick moving picture theater is to be erected at the southeast corner of Broadway and Michigan street, Buffalo, by Charles Farrell. It will cost about $20,000, and the plans are now being prepared by Mr. Farrell, who has promoted nine similar amusement places in this city. He will commence the erection of a moving picture theater in Williamsville. It is understood that Mr. Farrell is preparing to mandamus the Buffalo common council for its refusal to grant a permit for a moving picture show on Kenmore avenue, near Delaware avenue. The petitioner claims to have a majority of the residence within the prescribed distance.

An order has been granted by Justice Marcus, Buffalo, compelling Edward Sperry, as president of the Buffalo aldermen, to show cause why the petition of Max Levine to operate a moving picture show at 345 Elk street, should not be favorably acted upon by the common council. The aldermen denied the petition about a week ago on motion of John P. Sullivan, in whose ward Mr. Levine wants the theater. Alderman Sperry referred the matter to the corporation council, who will argue against granting the petition.

The Shea Amusement Co. has been granted a permit for the construction of the new Gaiety Theater, at 354 Pearl street, Buffalo. The theater will be a most up-to-date and modern fireproof building, and will cost $130,000. Burlesque will be featured. Moving pictures will be occasionally a part of the programme.

A report which reached Buffalo recently from Belleville, Ont., says: "The Griffin Amusement Co., which has been running a moving picture show in the opera house here for three years, will build a modern theater in this city, costing in the neighborhood of $75,000. It is understood that the site is on Front street."

BILLY BISON.

INDIANAPOLIS.

IN the case of Harry Swain, Judge James A. Collins of the city police court has held the ordinance requiring motion picture theater operators to be examined and licensed, invalid. For some years the city has required operators to pass an examination before the city building inspector and pay a license fee of $5 a year. The court holds that the city charter does not give the city council the right legally to pass the ordinance in question.

At a recent joint session of the history section of the Indiana Teachers Association and the Indiana Historical Society in this city, Robert Lieber, agent for the General Film Company, lectured on the educational value of the motion picture and showed a number of historical films. He said motion pictures could be used to excellent advantage in teaching history, geography and other subjects in the schools.

Mayor Jesse Grice of Fort Wayne has refused to comply with a request of the Fort Wayne Ministerial Association that motion picture theaters be closed on Sunday. Mayor Grice says that public sentiment favors Sunday performances and that the public needs relaxation and amusement on Sunday.

The Atlas Amusement Company has taken a ten year lease on property at the southeast corner of College avenue and Nineteenth street, where it will build a motion picture theater. The building will be two stories high and of pressed brick construction. It will have a seating capacity of 700. The company now has a motion picture theater at Columbia avenue and Nineteenth street, which it will continue to operate.

Charles Warren Fairbanks, former vice-president of the United States, is about to let contracts for one of the finest motion picture theaters in the residence district of Indianapolis. It will be at Illinois and Thirtieth streets and will be of pressed brick, trimmed with stone and tera cotta. The building will be a one story structure 93 by 173 feet and in addition to containing the motion picture theater, will provide quarters for a garage and five salesrooms.

P. A. Powers was in the city during the week of May 26, conferring with James J. Corbett, former champion pugilist, who was appearing at the Lyric Theater, in regard to Corbett appearing for a series of motion pictures.

A lease has been taken on the Crump Theater at Columbus by the Cincinnati Amusement Company, which conducts a string of motion picture theaters through Indiana and Ohio.

W. S. Barrett is letting contracts for a new motion picture theater to be built at Thirtieth and London streets. It will be 50 by 110 feet and one story high, with a seating capacity for about four hundred. Construction will be of dark, hard burned brick, with cement floors and a fireproof roof.

An airdome will be established at Elkhart by the newly organized Airdome Amusement Company, which has been incorporated with authorized capitalization of $3,000. Those interested in the company are Ned K. Miller, Metta Timmins and Fred S. Timmins, all of Elkhart.

Union No. 194 of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' League, of this city, has been circulating cards urging people not to attend motion picture theaters not employing operators who are members of the union.

C. L. CUMMINS.

IOWA.

"THE church took hold of literature and music and elevated it to its own purposes; it must now turn its attention to the theaters, the picture shows, dance halls and the game room," said E. C. Wolcott, secretary of the Sioux City Y. M. C. A., in an address before the Iowa State Congregational Association at Tabor.

A thousand feet of film of student life at the State University of Iowa at Iowa City, and a thousand feet of scenes about Iowa City, were recently taken.

Tony Magie has leased the Boe Theater and Summer Garden in Clinton.

Criticism of the films made to advertise the State college, at Ames, has been made, on the ground that the pictures gave too much prominence to athletics, and not enough of the real work of the school. Ex-senator Thomas Lambert, of the finance committee of the State Board of Education, dissents from this opinion, and thinks that the films will show real conditions at the college. A committee was appointed to censor the pictures.

SHENANDOAH (Special, 3 parts, June 4).—Part One.—Constance, the second wife of General Haverhill, befriends the officer's son, Frank, who has been ostracized. On the night of April 12th, 1861, she gives a ball at Charleston, S. C. Frank gets word to Mrs. Haverhill that he is hiding in the city. The father will not be reconciled, but sends the boy a miniature of Constance.

At the ball are Col. Kerchival West and his sister, Madeline, Robert Illingham and his sister, Gertrude. Fort Sumpter is fired upon and Illingham declares his allegiance to the Confederacy. He is deeply in love with Madeline West, whose brother fondly admires Gertrude.

Capt. Thornton insults Mrs. Haverhill and is called upon to fight a duel with West. Through a peculiar circumstance General Haverhill suspects Colonel West.

Frank enlists in his father's regiment under another name. He has grown a beard and is not recognized.

One year later the Confederates make a night attack on the Federals and Frank is made prisoner. Capt. Thornton, in the Confederate service, takes Constance's miniature from the captive at Richmond.

Frank and several companions make a daring escape.

Part Two.—In 1863 the Federal army invades the Shenandoah Valley. Col. West accompanies General Haverhill, who makes headquarters at the Illingham home. Madeline West comes to visit Gertrude. The sweethearts are brought together but Gertrude will not acknowledge her love for the gallant Col. West.

An expedition is sent to capture a Confederate signal tower, with Frank Haverhill in command. He loses his life in the perilous undertaking.

Later Col. Illingham is captured, but is granted parole by his old friend, Col. West.

West secures the miniature from Thornton, when the latter is captured, but later he is wounded by Thornton and General Haverhill is more embittered than ever when he finds the picture on West's person.

Part Three.—The Confederates have planned an attack on the Federals during the absence of General Phil Sheridan. A terrific battle is waged, in which Col. West is taken prisoner. Twenty miles away, Sheridan hears the cannonading and makes a wild dash toward Winchester, to assume command. The Federals are unable to withstand the fearful assault and flee in panic. Sheridan arrives, rallies his men and thwarts the enemy.

Gertrude becomes a second Evangeline in her search for Col. West. She finally locates him just as he is released from prison and they visit a little church near the battle field.

In 1865 General Haverhill visits his wife in Washington, still thinking her unfaithful. Gertrude arrives and delivers to Constance and Frank's widow a message which was written in his last hour. The general is brought to a realization of his wife's nobility.

A FIGHT TO A FINISH (June 30).—Johnson, the owner of fertile Western acres, secures exclusive control of the water supply by constructing a large dam and refuses to allow his neighbors irrigation privileges. The owners of adjoining lands make vehement protest, but to no avail, and Johnson becomes known as "the Water Hog."

Grace Lewis purchases the ranch next to Johnson's land, and arriving on the scene, she finds that the arid tract is practically valueless because of the Water Hog's high-handed control. She, too, makes a protest, but can accomplish nothing.

The spirited girl determines to show Johnson that he has gone too far. Under the cover of darkness, she directs a party of men who destroy the dam. They hide on a hill nearby, and, heavily armed, prepare to thwart the efforts of Johnson's men to reconstruct the dam, which has caused all of the trouble.

But Johnson is not to be dealt with so easily. He declares he will fight to a finish, and, securing arms for his men, he endeavors to drive Grace's party from the hill.

When things are going againt Grace, Ralph, Johnson's son, who has recently returned from college, climbs up the hill to overpower his father's enemy. To his amazement he finds a girl with whom he has already fallen in love, and he hears Grace's side of the story. As a result, he prepares a paper for his father to sign, which forces Johnson to discontinue his interference with the neighbors. Johnson is not inclined to give up the fight, but Ralph's statement that he will tell the whole ranch how one girl held off the Johnson party, enables the young man to carry his point.

THE RAIDERS FROM DOUBLE L RANCH (July 2).—Bessie is visiting her brother Frank's ranch when he receives a message asking him to cooperate in driving the sheep-herders from the country. Frank gathers his cowboys and falls upon Al West, a herder. They mistreat the unfortunate man and leave him with a warning. Later Bessie discovers Al as she rides by. Pride prevents him from telling her the truth and he states that he has been injured by a fall. A few days later Al and his brother sheepmen manage to settle their score with the cattlemen.

Bessie's visit comes to an end and she starts home, riding to the little station on horseback. She is overtaken by a furious forest fire and rescued by Al. When Frank learns of the sheep-herder's bravery, he realizes that Al is not a bad fellow after all.

HISTORIC NEW YORK (July 2).—An interesting visit is paid to the many famous landmarks of American history in Manhattan and vicinity. We see the spot where Hudson landed in 1609; the Bergen Homestead, built in 1655; St. Paul's Chapel, built in 1664, and attended by Washington; Bowling Green, the scene of the stamp riots in 1765; Washington's Headquarters at the Jumel Mansion; Blockhouse No. 1; Hamilton Grange; Fort Clinton Cannon and the Mount Morris Fire Tower, together with many other interesting and instructive scenes.

A VICTIM OF DECEIT (July 4).—Wilbur Emmett, a prosperous young banker, finds that he has made a mistake in asking Beryl Ross, a social butterfly, to become his wife, and breaks the engagement to marry Fern Barclay. The hatred which the disappointed girl bears Fern prompts her to call on the happy couple in the guise of a friend, that she may discover an opportunity to be revenged.

Some time later Beryl invites Fern to a meeting of the whist club and after much urging, the wife consents to go. Fern loses her money and starts home, but Beryl induces her to accept a loan and gives her I. O. U.

Soon afterwards Beryl calls and demands payment of the money advanced and Fern, wishing to keep the affair a secret from her husband, begs for time. She attempts to dispose of her jewels, but meets Wilbur as she is entering a pawnshop and pretends to be admiring some jewels in the window.

Beryl becomes so insistent that Fern takes the money from Wilbur's private safe and endeavors to create the impression that robbers have entered the house. When Wilbur summons a detective, the latter discovers the true situation and is the means of exposing Beryl's true character.

THE HIDDEN WITNESS (July 5).—Gerson Randall, an adventurer, endeavors to win the hand of Isabel Sinclair, a wealthy widow. Howard Allen, Mrs. Sinclair's brother, tries to dissuade his sister from forming an alliance with Randall, but the suave manners of the latter have made a strong impression upon the susceptible woman. Mrs. Sinclair has two young children, Grace and Freddy, whom she loves very dearly, but she becomes remiss in her attentions to them because of the time which she spends in Randall's company.

One day the little ones are attracted by a band of gypsies, who being about to move on, determine to take the children with them. Traveling by devious paths through the country, the gypsies come upon a young artist, Bernice Hamilton, who is sketching. Bernice becomes suspicious of the gypsies, and with the assistance of a number of laborers she secures the children and takes them home. Mrs. Randall is so much impressed with the girl that she engages her as governess.

Both children become very fond of their new governess and Randall, despite his suit for the widow's hand, falls in love with Bernice. Howard Allen, the widow's brother, also admires the girl, and discovers the true character of the adventurer.

Randall secures a valuable necklace from Mrs. Sinclair and makes it appear that Bernice is guilty, but he fails to reckon with Freddy and Grace, who succeed in awakening their mother to an appreciation of Randall's worthlessness.

VITAGRAPH.

THE TIGER LILY (Special—3 parts—July 2).—Thinking that her husband is paying more attention to his work and to their little daughter, Nina, than to her, Cleo Morin runs away with Henri Mordan. On the afternoon of their elopement, Morin, who is a ballet master, is seriously injured on the stage, and the doctor tells him that his spine is so affected that he will never be able to walk again. As soon as he can be moved he goes with his daughter, Nina, to a distant country, where he begins to train her, as it is his intention to have her become a premiere danseuse. Ten years later Cleo, who has obtained a divorce, has become a popular actress. She buys a country home and is attracted by a bevy of admirers, one of whom is Sidney Bretton, who in reply to her inquiry as to what kind of a costume she should wear at a mask ball, tells her to go dressed as "The Tiger Lily." He designs such a costume for her and she goes thus arrayed, accompanied by a Bengal tiger, which she has purchased.

In the meantime, Morin's health makes it necessary for him to go to the same town where his ex-wife is living, and fate has ordained that he take a villa next to that of hers, each, however, being unaware of the identity of the other. Becoming deeply infatuated with the artist, Cleo casts off her old admirer, Elbert Lamoreaux, who vows vengeance on the man who has supplanted him. One night he sees Nina dancing in the moonlight, and leaving Cleo, he becomes acquainted with the girl by performing a slight service for her. Discovering that Sidney no longer loves her, Cleo by subterfuges manages to get Nina, whom she does not recognize as her daughter, to her home, where she begins to caress her in the presence of Prince, the tiger, who becomes jealous of the girl.

On an unusually hot day, Cleo increases the jealousy of the tiger by waving a scarf in front of him, which was left behind by Nina, when Sidney comes to tell her of his engagement to the dancing girl. As he is leaving the house he is shot in the back by Elbert Lamoreaux, and falls wounded to the ground. A thunderstorm is approaching and Cleo lets the infuriated tiger loose. He runs to Morin's residence and as he is just about to enter the house it is struck by lightning and set on fire. Regaining his strength, Sidney goes to Nina, who takes him to her father. Meanwhile, the tiger is rushing from room to room in search of Nina. Cleo enters and finds Nina, her father and Sidney together, but does not recognize her erstwhile husband or daughter. Speaking to the girl, she threatens to have the tiger, which is standing by her side, destroy her if she does not relinquish her lover, Sidney. Morin, recognizing her, shouts: "Do you not know your ex-husband and daughter?" The shock is too much for the overwrought Cleo and she drops dead to the floor. The tiger is shot a moment later by Elbert, who has come for revenge. It is with difficulty that Sidney and Nina get Morin out of the burning house, the flames of which has consumed the bodies of Cleo and Elbert.

ROUGHING THE CUB (June 30).—Clarence Snuggles, a would-be-poet, goes to the editorial sanctum of a daily, where he begins reading his poetry to Gregg, the editor. He is thrown out, but returns immediately and Gregg, seeing that he has at least persistence, decidesto give him a try-out. He is assigned to cover police news. In the reporters' room Clarence reads some of his poetry, written in favor of the staff. The reporters tolerate him for a while, but getting tired of it, they plan to send him out on a fake assignment. They get the captain of a neighboring police station to call up the office at a certain time and tell him a fake story. Clarence answers the telephone call and is informed that a kite factory is on fire. He goes out and rushes up and down the street, but can find no fire. As he is entering a jewelry store to call up his office, he hears news of a great diamond robbery. After getting all the "dope" he calls up Gregg, gives him the facts and a special extra is soon out. Thus he puts one over on his fellow dopsters.

BINGLES AND THE CABARET (July. 1).—Bingles returns home from the office after a very busy day, and seeks peace and quietness in his room. He is soon disturbed by an organ grinder. After the music purveyor has departed, Bingles' nerves are again worked up by the maid ringing a cracked dinner bell. He goes down to dinner, where added torture is inflicted upon him by the diners. Unable to tolerate it any longer, he goes to several restaurants where he hopes to find solitude, but as soon as he has given his order in each cabaret, a dancing girl or something else provokes him and he is compelled to leave. In one restaurant he is bodily put out by the waiters for having disturbed the orchestra.

THE SONG BIRD OF THE NORTH (July 2).—Haywood, a suitor for the hand of Elida Rumsey, is severely reprimanded by her for not enlisting when President Lincoln calls for volunteers. Being deeply interested in the cause, Elida goes and helps Mrs. Pomeroy minister to sick and wounded soldiers. She becomes a favorite with the men, for she frequently sings to them. This attracts the attention of Lincoln, and he introduces her to M. Fowle, a mission worker, who has become a little discouraged by the soldiers' lack of response to his efforts. Elida's singing awakens the dormant spark of manhood, and more men enlist.

In order to stir patriotism, President Lincoln requests Elida to sing at a concert. Haywood comes and is induced to enlist, which pleases Elida so much that Fowle, who has grown to love her, thinks that he is her lover. He keeps his love for her in silence.

Sometime later Elida and Fowle are ordered to the front, where there has been an enormous carnage. Elida finds Haywood seriously wounded, after leading a gallant charge to victory. She does all in her power to save him, but he passes away. Fowle's sympathy is so marked that Elida is lead to believe that he has been under the impression that Haywood was her lover. She tells him that he was nothing more to her than a friend. Fowle seizes the opportunity and tells her of his love for her. They are married in the presence of President Lincoln, the only marriage-solemnized at the capitol.

SWEET DECEPTION (July 3).—Through the persistence of Mrs. Bradley to go out every night causes an estrangement with her husband, who is insistent upon her staying home. They part, but neither is happy. One day Mr. Bradley receives a letter from his mother, which has been forwarded from the old address, saying that she will visit them on her way to Boston. He rushes to the apartment of his wife, who agrees to reopen the old house and not to let the mother know of their trouble. Everything is in good order when the elder Mrs. Bradley arrives. They are so busy talking that evening that the time for the train has gone and Mrs. Bradley is obliged to stay with them that night. After his mother has gone to bed Bradley takes his hat and coat and tells his wife that he is going to spend the night at a hotel. Just as he is about to go out, his wife hears his mother coming downstairs and calls him back. The old lady has come down for her spectacles. They tell her that he was just going to lock up for the night, and their explanation satisfies her. After Mrs. Bradley has again gone upstairs, man and wife look into each other's eyes, and, remembering the unpleasantness of their separation, they agree to live together and be more considerate of the other's likes and dislikes.

AN UNWRITTEN CHAPTER (July 4).—After a long discussion with her collaborator, Philip Morbray, concerning their next novel, Ruth Sterling offers one thousand dollars wager that within a month she will have found a new sensation. Philip laughingly agrees and the bet is made.

She goes away to a small fishing village in Maine and stays at the home of one of the coastguards, David Skelton and his mother. Here she is treated as if she were one of the family, and a bond of affection soon springs up between Ruth and the old lady.

Being thrown constantly into the society of Ruth, David falls in love with her, a fact which is soon discovered by the lady. In order to hasten his declaration of love, she one day pretends to sprain her ankle and allows him to carry her to the house. When he takes her up into his arms he tells her of his great love for her and she replies to him with a soft kiss.

The next day Ruth receives a telegram from Philip asking about the wager and telling her that the month is up. She replies to his message by another telegram, asking him to meet her at dinner the next day. A busybody sees her message at the telegraph office and tells David what is in it. The result is that when Ruth tells him and his mother that she must go to New York, he decides to follow her and find out who Philip may be.

David, watching through a window of Ruth's house, sees her meet Philip Mobray and hears Ruth tell him of how she fooled the coastguard into loving her. He at once enters the room and denounces the young lady in no measured terms as a false and heartless woman. When Ruth sees David she realizes that, in spite of the way in which she has used the man, she really loves him. She holds out her arms to him and begs him to forgive her, but he will not listen to her. David leaves the house telling her that he hopes never to see her again, telling her that his trust in women is forever broken.

After he has gone Ruth tears up the check given her by Philip, who agrees that he has lost his wager, and sinks mournfully upon a couch, broken-hearted because of the wound she has inflicted on the man that she now really loves.

LOVE'S QUARANTINE (July 5).—Cutey is forbidden by the father of his beloved, Dot, to ever speak to her again. A brilliant idea comes to Cutey while reading in the paper of a family quarantined because of small pox. He tells the cook that she is to be suddenly afflicted with a serious illness while bringing the dinner that night; that Dot is to run for him, who will be disguised as a doctor, and that when he comes he will pronounce the case as small pox, and, in accordance with medical laws, will inform the authorities, which will consist of two of his friends dressed as policemen, who will order the house quarantined. His scheme is carried out to the letter and was progressing splendidly until Dot's papa and mamma, sitting by the drawing room window, overhear the two "policemen" talking about the scheme. Papa rushes up to the room where he finds the "sick" cook drinking and Cutey and Dot "mushing." He throws Cutey out of the window and he lands on the heads of his friends. Dot starts in to cry, for she knows it will be a long time before she can see Cutey again.

SELIG.

THE BEADED BUCKSKIN BAG (June 30).—Noel Burton, an adventurous American, falls in love with Annette, the daughter of Don Antonio Nevarro, whose rancho is mortgaged to Don Carlos Morello for $50,000. This individual is also a suitor for Annette, and, finding no favor from her, he threatens to foreclose the mortgage unless the girl is turned over to him. The father informs the American of his predicament and Noel repairs to his old friend, Sutter (the owner of Sutter's fort, who "backed" James W. Marshall when he first discovered gold in California in American rivers). Noel goes on the saw mill building expedition, strikes gold, and sees a way to satisfy the creditor and win the girl. Morello hires an assassain to make away with Noel. The latter makes his escape, but in his flight drops a beaded bag with nuggets and a curl of Annette's hair (which she had given him on parting). Morello takes this to Don Nevarro as a proof of Noel's death. In her despair over his seeming death and the affairs of her father, she concludes to marry Morello. Just as they are about to enter the church door, Noel appears, and with gold pays the father's debt. He then calls for the arrest of Morello, and leads the bride to the altar.

SONGS OF TRUCE (July 1).—Joe Elliot and Duncan Elliott brothers, living in a border state, find their house divided, as one enlists in the army of the North, the other donning the uniform of gray. They part in anger, and when, a year later, they meet on the same battlefield, under a flag of truce, the old spirit of resentment between the brothers grows more acute. Duncan again inside his lines, plays Dixie on his trumpet in defiance, and Joe retorts with "Yanke Doodle." Softly some one breaks this echo of anger and in tones of "Home, Sweet Home." Then the heart of each stern man melts and they cry out, "Not Blue or Gray, but my brother." They do not fight again until the conclusion of the great conflict, when Joe comes home with the laurels of the victor, and poor, broken Duncan, ill in the bitterness of defeat. In the home of his father, with the arms of his sweetheart about him, he finds life still worth living, and Joe comes openhanded to help him carve out a new fortune for their families.

ARABIA AND THE BABY (July 2).—Miss Fay and her horse, Arabia, after doing an equestrienne high-school act, she and the horse go about as comrades on a shopping expedition. The horse follows her mistress down the street carrying a market basket. After purchasing the goods, Arabia helps the shopkeeper out by working the cash register. On the way home, Arabia observes a poor woman leave a basket on the doorstep, abandoning her baby. The horse, with philanthropic intent, leaves the market basket, and takes the one containing the waif to her mistress. There the child finds a happy home. When the house burns, Arabia rings the bell alarming the village fire department, awakens her mistress and carries that blessed baby to safety.

THE SULTAN OF SULU (July 2).—An excellent educational subject of an interesting potentate who has inspired a popular clinic opera.

IN GOD WE TRUST (July 3).—The night before Christmas the child of well-to-do parents, Harry Bewell, received from his rich uncle a miniature safe that contained $5,000, which was to apply toward his education. The cogging butler learns the combination of the safe, and at once tells some of his "yeggmen" friends. They in turn prevail upon Bill, out of work and the head of a starving family, to assist them and do the actual robbery. Over the door of his poor home is tacked a little sign, "In God We Trust," and as he goes forth with malice flaming in his heart, it catches his attention and continues to impress him. When he eventually faces the little safe as an expert steel worker, he observes the same inscription, which checks him in his nefarious task. The child hears the noise, gets out of bed to investigate and discovers the burglar. The father is aroused, phones the police and covers the gang with his automatic gun. They are caught "hands-up;" but the father becomes interested in poor Bill, and stands sponsor for him. He hears his sad story, and remembering the time, sends him home with money in his pocket, a load of toys and an X-mas dinner.

SALLIE'S SURE SHOT (July 4).—Rob Ralston is forced to go to "town" for supplies, and "injun" Jim, a sneaking rascal, announces that he proposes to jump his claim. This arouses the official ire of Fred "the star wearer," and he soundly trounces the half-breed rascal. Now Fred has an intrepid sweetheart, Sally, who is a well-spring of information and is naturally hated by law-breakers. "Injun" Jim gets reinforcements and carries off the girl as a hostage. Fred senses they are making for the mine, so he girds on his guns and goes in the same direction. The desperadoes arrange to "dynamite" Sally, but she cuts the fuse in two by a well aimed shot after they have sought safety at a distance. This saves her sweetheart Fred, who rushes to her rescue, and they both retreat to a cabin. The dynamiters are obstinate and place another cartridge, so that the cabin will be blown to pieces. The daring Fred picks up the keg of powder and rushing out rolls it down on "Injun" Jim and his fellow mischief-makers. They are so dazed from the effects of the explosion that they find themselves in "irons" when they recover consciousness, and Fred single-handed delivers them to the authorities.

LUBIN.

HER ATONEMENT (June 30).—Oceola, an Indian maiden, has been annoyed by the attentions of Black Hawk, a renegade, who makes his home with the tribe. One day Black Hawk forces her to listen to his drunken wooing, but is stopped by Tom Hopkins, a cowboy, who hears her cry and goes to her assistance. Tom beats the renegade and receives the Indian girl's heartfelt thanks. Tom's manly bearing and good looks have made an impression upon the little Indian maid, and she sets to work upon an elaborate tobacco pouch which she intends to give him as a present. One day, the bag being complete, she goes to present it; but is followed by Black Hawk.

Oceola finds Tom talking to Rose, his employer's daughter, to whom he is engaged. The Indian girl presents her offering. Tom, who has no idea of the furore he has started in the Indian girl's heart, is rather surprised, but accepts the gift carelessly, and when Rose expresses her admiration for it, does not hesitate to give it to her. The two then depart, leaving Oceola speechless with mortification that the gift should have been so thanklessly received. As she returns home she meets Black Hawk, who has witnessed the scene. He is eager for revenge upon Tom for the beating he had given him and he plays upon the Indian girl's anger. Oceola finally agrees to aid him in a scheme in which he proposes to abduct Rose. Rose is caught, brought to the Indian village and placed in the Chief's tent in the care of Oceola. Rose pleads with the Indian girl and finally, repentant of her hasty action and filled with pity for the white girl, Oceola agrees to aid her to escape. Taking a ring from Rose, she bribes one of the tribesmen to take news of Rose's capture to her father. Rose's father with Tom and a bunch of cowboys attack the village and rescue the captured girl. In the melee Oceola, while endeavoring to help Rose escape to a place where she will be safe from the firing, is shot and dies.

HER HUSBAND'S PICTURE (July 1).—Bruce Errinton, an artist, is ordered south because of his weak lungs. He finds lodgings with Dave Halsey, a young southerner. It is not long before Errinton becomes interested in Nell, Dave's pretty young wife, and he takes advantage of her inherent artistic talent to persuade her to go north with him. He is confident that when he gets her away from Dave he can win her. After consistent pressing Nell agrees to go north, but strictly to work at her art. Visiting Bruce's studio she comes across a painting he has made from a sketch of Dave. It brings back her love in stronger force than her desire to paint. A friend gives her the money to get home with, and prevents Bruce from following her. Nell returns home and Dave, finding truth and honesty in her eyes, takes her to his heart again.

THE ANGEL OF THE SLUMS (July 3).—Mabel Harris, a society girl, is known as "the angel of the slums." She is loved by Charles Brandt, the doctor of the poor, but already engaged to a wealthy man, Frank Melville, whose office boy, Billy Tanner, is the sole guardian of his sick baby brother. The slum doctor gets Mabel interested in Billy and the baby, but she does not know that Billy is Melville's office boy. She tries to get Frank interested in her work and their quarrels start with his belittling her efforts. Billy returns home from work one day to find Mabel being insulted by a tough young gangster. Billy grabs a chair and would have hit the gangster with it, but for the timely interference of a neighbor. The tough threatens vengeance and leaves with the neighbors while Mabel thanks Billy. She meets the doctor and tells him she thinks Billy will be injured by the man. They both return to find the door locked. The gangster has returned and is in the house with Billy behind a locked door. Billy evades him until he threatens the baby's life and then gives in to him. As he does, the doctor smashes in the door and pounces on the gangster. A fight follows in which the doctor scores a couple of knock downs and finally kicks the bully out of the room. Mabel's warm praise starts the doctor further on the path of love and his face shows so plainly his love for Mabel that she, embarrassed and rather pleased, turns to Billy with an admonition to be careful, then exits with the doctor. Frank has been waiting for her at her home and gets peeved at her long absence. Mabel and the doctor part with regret and the quarrel between the engaged pair is furthered by Frank taking Mabel to task again because of her slum work. The next day Billy stays with his brother longer than he should because the child is too ill to be left even with a neighbor. Mabel enters and when the doctor comes he finds her very maternally attending to the baby's wants with Billy looking on. When they are ready to leave, Mabel exits with the doctor. This time their parting is more difficult and shows increasing love. When Mabel arrives home she finds a note from Frank with a luncheon request and Mabel decides to go. Meanwhile Billy has left for the office. Mabel finds Frank in a grouch at the boy because he is late and she warns him that if he is going to be grouchy that will be the end of the luncheon. Billy arrives and is called upon the carpet. He does not see Mabel standing in the window. Frank scolds the boy. He is discharged and Mabel enters the argument by giving Frank back his ring and breaking the luncheon engagement. She takes Billy home and there finds the doctor. Billy brings about an avowal of love on the doctor's part, which Mabel accepts. Billy is told he and the baby will have a home for life, and the angel of the slums finds her happiness.

THE WAITER'S STRATEGY (July 4).—Jerry, an old waiter, is fostering a little romance between two young people who come every few nights to his table. The romance is progressing nicely when one night Jerry sees the couple get out of an auto and the girl meets an old friend. Tom gets restless because Mabel stays so long talking with the newcomer, and tries his best to break up the conversation and get her inside. His endeavor piques Mabel and she stays there talking longer than she had expected. At last they enter, both in a peevish mood. Jerry does his best to loosen the chill. He takes their order, serves it 'mid silence only broken by his own sallies. Finally Mabel can't stand Tom's nagging, and exits. Tom follows soon after and Jerry is left broken-hearted.

The next night Mabel appears with the chap that caused all the trouble. The only table vacant is Jerry's and much to Mabel's chagrin the head waiter gives them that. Jerry is mad clean through, and does everything he can to make it uncomfortable for the man. Mabel begins to be sorry, and nervously watches for Tom. Jerry serves the dinner abominably and is censured by the man. At last the coffee is ordered by the man, with ice cream for Mabel. It is Jerry's last chance to break the new combination. He wonders what he can do. Realizing that the man has drunk a little champagne and seeing another waiter set down a cognac bottle with his empty dishes, he quickly empties a quantity of the cognac into the coffee pot. He serves the coffee, black, and the man gets one taste of the coffee and immediately has Jerry refill his cup. The man takes cup after cup until he begins to get funny in his talk, and Mabel is getting angry and sorry that she ever knew him. Finally she can stand the smiles of other diners no longer, and Jerry hastens to help her on with her wraps and they get out. Jerry laughs at the success of his jokes. Then he finds Mabel's glove on the floor and at the same moment Tom enters. He starts to order something, but Jerry gives him Mabel's glove and tells him to go to her home and see her at once. Tom's eyes light up with hope and, seizing the glove, rushes to Mabel's home. There he finds her weeping. They become reconciled and hasten back to the restaurant.

THE WRONG HAND BAG (July 4).—Mrs. Hanson reminds hubby that it is her birthday as he is about to leave for his office. On the way, he stops in a jewelry store, and purchases for her a silver mesh bag, which he sends home by a messenger. When Mrs. Hanson receives the bag she cannot resist the temptation to show it to her next-door neighbor, Mrs. Jones, who at once becomes jealous. When Jones returns home she makes him promise that he will buy her one. This promise she persuades Jones into with the aid of a broom. Jones buys his wife a bag exactly like the one which Mrs. Hanson has. Mrs. Hanson mislays her bag, and seeing Mrs. Jones with one, she immediately decides that the one Mrs. Jones has is hers. She attacks Mrs. Jones and quite a fight ensues. The husbands arriving on the scene, become involved. In the meantime the maid of the Hanson family discovers the hand bag in the exact spot where Mrs. Hanson had laid it. Mrs. Hanson, anxious to straighten the matter out, rushes to the Jones home and arrives just as the husbands are about to be arrested. She makes explanation, and everything is satisfactorily adjusted.

HIS NIECE FROM IRELAND (July 5).—Patrick Grady, who came to America when a boy, is now about forty years of age and comparatively wealthy. He has had no communication with his native place for many years, but now receives from the parish priest a letter which, misdirected, has been long delayed, in which he is informed that his sister's child has been left an orphan, and is asked to send for her. With kind-hearted impulse, Grady writes to the girl, enclosing money for her passage to America. When Ellen arrives, she proves somewhat older than Grady had expected—twenty-two or three and exceedingly beautiful. Despite Grady's objections, Ellen insists upon obtaining employment, and upon paying back the money sent for her passage. A suitor soon appears, and Grady to his amazement and horror, finds that he is intensely jealous and that he is desperately in love with his niece. Shortly after, Ellen disappears from the house, and until Mitchell, the suitor, comes seeking her, Grady thinks she has eloped with him. Later Grady encounters the girl by chance. She confesses that she is no relation whatever, though bearing the same name as his niece and that, Grady's letter being delivered to her, she took advantage of the opportunity to get to America, being herself an orphan and miserably poor, and the niece having been, between the writing of the priest's letter and the receipt of Grady's, happily married and with no desire, Ellen is convinced, to leave Ireland. She had not realized that Grady was in love with her, but had run away because she had come to love him, and could no longer endure the false position she held in his house. Ellen's confession opens for both Grady and herself a path of happiness.

"THE PENALTY OF CRIME" (Special—2 parts—June 30).—Ed. Watson and Billy, the rat, crooks, operating in New York, are "breaking in" Nell Forest, who has had the misfortune of being brought up in an evil atmosphere. The crooks spot Maurice Fielding, son of a jeweler, having stores in New York and Chicago, as a victim, and Nell makes his acquaintance. Maurice proves to be a different kind of man than any she has known. He falls in love with her and she with him. With this comes a hatred for Watson, Billy and all that they stand for. Maurice proposes marriage, but she refuses because she knows she has no right to wed an honest man—she wants to break away from her evil companions. Then perhaps she can tell Maurice everything and he will keep on loving her.

But Watson is not to be so easily shaken off. He learns that Maurice is going to Chicago and that his trunk will contain jewelry. He and Billy hatch a plot to rob the trunk. They send for Nell, who is forced to come at their call. They tell her she is necessary to the proposed robbery. Nell refuses to help them and threatens to warn Maurice until they threaten that they can put Maurice wise to Nell's past. She would do anything rather than have Maurice know just yet. Watson also promises to give Nell her freedom after just this one more job. She is to buy a ticket for Valley Springs, a summer resort on the road to Chicago, and to travel on the same train with Maurice. A trunk is secured and lock arranged so that it can be opened from inside. Billy gets into the trunk and it is checked to Valley Springs, to which place Watson has gone the day before. Maurice is delighted that Nell will make part of the journey with him. The two trunks are put into the same baggage car. While the train is going Billy climbs out of Nell's trunk. The baggage man sees him in time to dodge. A fierce battle with revolvers ensues until Billy wounds the baggage man. It only takes a minute to transfer the jewelry from Maurice's trunk to Nell's and when the train reaches Valley Springs, Billy stands at the door of the baggage coach and throws Nell's trunk off. Nell hands the baggage master her check and requests him to lift her trunk on an automobile. (Watson is in the auto.) Nell also climbs in and is waving good-bye to Maurice when the wounded baggage man recovers and spring on Billy. Billy has intended to go to the next station. The recovery of the baggage man spoils everything. Billy jumps out of the car, catches Watson's auto as it is turning a corner and jumps into it. A race ensues between the crooks' auto and pursuers. The road leads to a river. The drawbridge is open and Watson sees it too late to stop, turning the machine it plunges over the cliff into the river. Watson goes to the bottom with the car, but Billy and Nell are thrown out into the river. Maurice, who is in the pursuing auto, sees Nell struggling in the water. Although he now knows her for what she is, an impulse which he cannot resist compels him to dive to her rescue. A row boat picks up Nell, Maurice and Billy. Before he dies, "the rat" exonerates Nell, tells how she was forced into the robbery, tells how she confessed her love for Maurice and fought against the scheme. Well! Maurice does the right thing.

THE STORY OF THE BELL (June 30).—Colonel Fairfax, in answer to his grandson's question as to why he does not like to hear the bell in the old church tower ring, tells the young man that nearly forty years he has ascended the old tower to remove the muffling that had been placed on the huge clapper for a funeral when the sexton began to pull the rope frantically in order to warn the countryside of the approach of British soldiers. Fairfax goes on to tell his grandson how he was imprisoned underneath the swinging bell, the roar of which drove him almost crazy. His cries for help were drowned by the clanging of the clapper, and he lay that way until one of the young girls, who had seen him go into the belfry in the morning, ordered the sexton to stop ringing the bell while she ascended the steps to the bell tower, where she rescued Fairfax, whose hair had turned snow white from fright, rage and exhaustion. In the meantime the villagers had succeeded in routing the Britishers and the countryside soon became as peaceful as it ever had been.

THE PATCHWORK QUILT (July 1).—As grandmother fondles the old patchwork quilt it brings reminiscences of her early life. She met Jim at an old-fashioned country dance and they were soon married. When the Civil War came, Jim went to the front with a uniform made by grandmother, a piece of which was saved for her quilt. She and her son stood by the window waving good-bye. Jim never came back and that is the end of grandmother's story. The son grew up and had children of his own, but life was never so sweet for grandmother as the time when her Jim was alive.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A PORTRAIT (July 2).—Because John isn't soulful and doesn't like the superfluous amount of hirsute appendage of a pianist, the portrait of which is displayed in a window, Jessie, his sweetheart, gives him back all his presents. To show that he doesn't care, John does likewise. They part but are very unhappy, particularly John, as he feels that he is more to blame for his hasty action. At the wedding of one of their friends they meet. Jessie is the bridesmaid and John the best man. After the ceremony the groom invites John to visit his country home. The same invitation is extended to Jessie by the bride. Arriving at the house before the host, they are mistaken for the newly married couple by enthusiastic neighbors and are greeted with a shower of rice. Jesse's icy attitude is thus melted and she decides that John's hair and eyes are very nice indeed.

A GENTLEMAN'S GENTLEMAN (July 4).—Having been informed by his lawyer that he is near the end of his inherited resources, Jardine, a young society man, orders Holmes, a servant who has been for many years in the Jardine family, to sell a part of the family plate. Instead of complying with his young master's request, Holmes hides the golden plates and gives Jardine his own scanty savings. With this money Jardine squares himself with some of his more persistent creditors.

He accepts an invitation to a house party because of his fondness for Lady Sarah. His devotion being not sufficiently strong to subdue his gambling passion, he enters a game of bridge. He loses everything and is compelled to give an I. O. U. As he is leaving the card room he finds a pearl necklace which he appropriates. In his room a realization of what he has done comes to him and he attempts to force Holmes to conceal the necklace. But Holmes refuses indignantly. Having been informed by his daughter of her loss, the Earl goes to Jardine's room where Holmes admits to having committed the theft. But just as the police are leading him away Jardine tells the truth, thus exonerating his servant. After the incident Jardine starts to Canada with his servant, where he begins life anew and tries to make himself worthy of Lady Sarah.

A DRAMA OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION (July 5).—The Royalist Count St. Pierre, concealed in the hovel of a faithful old family servant, manages to elude the Republican soldiers who are searching for him. Realizing, however, that his discovery and execution will only be a question of hours if he remains, he plans to escape to England with his betrothed, the Countess d'Avroi. Accordingly he dispatches the servant with a letter to the countess, begging her to set two candles in her window when she is alone.

The peasant delivers the letter but on his return is intercepted by soldiers under the command of Citizen Bompard. Recognizing him as a servant of the count's and knowing something of the attachment between St. Pierre and the countess, Bompard puts two and two together, and dragging the peasant before the countess commands her to give him the message that the old man has brought. The countess firmly refuses until Bompard begins to torture the old servant, when she attempts to throw St. Pierre's letter in the fire. Bompard intercepts her, reads the letter, and immediately sets the candles in the window. Stationing his soldiers outside the door he commands them to enter and shoot the count when he gives the word.

Bompard himself stays within the room and makes love to the countess. At first maddened by the realization that she has lured her lover to death, she refuses the man's advances furiously. Later, a dim plan forms itself in her mind and she treats the captivated Republican less coldly. Meanwhile St. Pierre has seen the welcome signal and has hastened to the chateau. Climbing up the ivy he enters the room and sternly regards the countess in Bompard's embrace. Broken-hearted at her apparent faithlessness, the count walks slowly to the door behind which the soldiers are concealed. At the moment he opens the door, the countess springs from Bompard's arms. The soldiers naturally mistaking him for the count shoot and kill their leader. In the confusion that follows St. Pierre and the countess escape.

THE RICE INDUSTRY IN JAVA (July 3).—A most complete study of the greatest crop growing industry of the island of Java. The immense rice fields are of two kinds; the "tegal," or dry field, and the "sawash," or wet field, laid out in terraces of different levels for irrigation purposes. After plowing and sowing the terraces are flooded for a period of eight or ten days. At the end of a month or six weeks the rice spikes, having grown crowded, are taken from the limited space in which they are confined and replanted in the "Sawahs" farther apart to allow full, strong growth. At the end of five or six months the terraces are in full growth, and the whole village turns out to gather the harvest.

The rice spikes tied in bundles are then packed and shipped by wagon to the mills, where the primitive method of treading by huge buffaloes is still in vogue. The rice is husked by means of a mortar and hammer, operated by boys. Then it is winnowed—allowed to fall a distance in the air, during which the husks are blown from the rice and pure rice is obtained. This rice is packed and shipped to Cholon to be stored, as very little rice is ever exported from Java. The island yields 40,000 tons of rice a year, consumed entirely by the natives. Making rice liquor, an intoxicant, is another interesting feature of the picture.

BIOGRAPH.

A GAMBLE WITH DEATH (June 30).—The stakes were to go to the one who outlived the other two. In a quarrel one ended the chance of another. In the mountain the two survivors of the bet came together again, one now an outlaw, but through a woman's subterfuge the money fell to the less likely of them all, Reed, declared to be "on his last legs."

FAUST AND THE LILY (July 3).—Mr. Goethe and Mr. Gounod have given the world an undisputed classic in the story of Faust. That is not for the Biograph comedy players to deny. Yet their version is a little more optimistic at least. Faust, as all good people should know, thwarts the Devil and marries Margherita.

AN OLD MAID'S DECEPTION (July 3).—Sim and Sam had never seen Beauty unadorned. That was where she deceived the public. She invited them both to the picnic. Enough said where a fair lady is concerned. Only a duel could settle it. Beauty absent frills and molars and devoid of fine feathers, rushed to the rescue. Sim and Sam sought solace in each other's arms, undeceived.

THE SORROWFUL SHORE (July 5).—There dwelt the widowed fisherman and his indulged son. Then the girl, the sole survivor of the wreck, came into their lives. The father suppressed his own love, realizing the son could offer youth instead of age, but the young woman decided otherwise. It was through the young wife's attempt to make peace without exposing the son that the sorrowful shore revealed another tragedy.

PATHEPLAY.

THE MIRACLE OF THE ROSES (July 1).—Forced to desperation by the hunger of his starving wife and child Hughes, a wildchopper, steals a lamb from a neighboring shepherd. He is arrested and brought before the Margrave of Thuringe. Under the ancient Germanic law he is sentenced to death, but Elizabeth, the wife of the Margrave, pleads so eloquently with her husband that the woodchopper's life is spared and instead he is sentenced to work his own way out of his poverty and his neighbors forbidden to help him under penalty of death. Her heart touched by the plight of Hughes, Elizabeth defies the law and with an apron full of edibles goes to the home of the woodchopper. She has just arrived there when the soldiers of the Margrave enter and demand to know what the apron contains. Elizabeth drops her apron and there falls at her feet a shower of roses.

THE MISSIONARY'S TRIUMPH (July 2).—Into the rough life of a mining camp comes Miss Hazel Meredith, gentle, kind and good and determined to implant religious fervor in the hearts of the miners. Sizing up the situation Miss Meredith realizes that to win she must help the men overcome their passion for alcoholic liquors supplied by a band of Moonshiners. With the help of her beauty and charming personality and the assistance of Bob Fordham she accomplishes her purpose, but the Moonshiners, blaming Bob for wrecking their nefarious trade, plan vengeance. Bob would have been killed, in all probability, but for the quick wit and bravery of the missionary, who summoned Bob's fellow workers. Thoroughly indignant, the miners rise as one man and force the Moonshiners to leave hastily for other parts.

THE JOY RIDE (July 3).—Harry, the chauffeur for James Van Cliff, the banker, while driving over a manhole, spattered Flossie Footlights with mud. He was alone in the car and to make amends he took Flossie for a joy ride. Flossie found Van Cliff's card in the car and asked Harry if he was Van Cliff. "Yes," said Harry, shyly, and Flossie fell in love immediately. So engrossed was Harry that he forgot the speed law. In court the next morning he was sentenced to a month in prison. After getting into prison he got into a fight and then got into the hospital. After getting out thirty days later, Harry met Flossie and Harry's wife met them both. Harry hasn't been joy riding since.

CONSECRATION OF A BUDDHIST PRIEST (July 4).—The strange and rather weird ceremony incidental to the consecration of a Buddhist priest. Preceded by a corps of musicians the future priest marches with his family to the ttemple and there the musicians, personifying the evil spirit, take turns at tempting the young candidate, thus allowing him an opportunity to show his strength of character. Finally, he is presented with his sacred vestments which he accepts after a curious ceremony.

PISA (ITALY) AND ITS CURIOUS MONUMENTS (July 4).—A tour through the city of Pisa, stopping before its landmarks, which are all very old, and culminating with a view of the Leaning Tower, the most famous structure in the world.

A MODERN GARRICK (July 5).—Garrick, in the heyday of his popularity, was a super compared to Hamspiel, the famous matinee idol. Hamspiel, was playing Romeo when first Gwendoline Martin saw him from a box seat. That was enough. Immediately Gwendoline fell in love and a mania for playing Juliet possessed her, leaving no room for affection for her old sweetheart. This young fellow enlisted the services of a hypnotist and with the assistance of the clever Hamspiel himself Gwendoline lost all ambition to be his leading lady.

THE MINER'S DESTINY (Special—2 parts—July 5).—John Crane, a miner, refuses to be cowed by Jenkins, the bully of the mine, but makes the mistake of being seen intoxicated. Jenkins tells the foreman and Crane is discharged. Later, there is an explosion in the mine. Crane, because of his discharge, is suspected of having caused the explosion and on Jenkins's perjured testimony is convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment. Jenkins becomes foreman of the mine. The shock of the sudden turn in fortune is too much for Mrs. Crane and after struggling bravely she gives up the fight and passes away. Her little boy is now homeless, but Vance Wilkins, a kindly neighbor, adopts him. The boy soon becomes known only by the name of his foster father, who, after he has finished his primary schooling, sends him to college to take a course in mine engineering. The young man returns after several years and is appointed chief engineer of the mine by Jenkins, who has secured control of the property. Because of his good behavior during the twenty-five years he has served in prison, Crane, now an old man, is pardoned. But he can find no work and after repeated attempts to be committed back to prison he breaks into a house.

It develops that Jenkins has given Wilkins the position as chief engineer for a purpose because one day while Mrs. Wilkins is alone in her home Jenkins calls. The woman orders him out. He refuses and Mrs. Wilkins secures a revolver. Jenkins struggles with her for possession of the weapon and it explodes. Jenkins falls, mortally wounded. This is the house into which Crane has forced his way and as soon as he hears the shot he hurries into the room. Instantly he recognizes the wounded man. A physician is summoned and the young engineer advised by his wife.

Wilkins and the doctor arrive together and as soon as Jenkins is able to speak he makes haste to ease his conscience and unfolds a story which clears the name of the ex-convict and, incidentally, proves the relationship between Crane and Wilkins. Jenkins begs to be forgiven and after the trio have done so, he smiles upon the reunited family and dies.

GARDEN THEATRE

COLLEGE STREET just West of Spadina Avenue

TORONTO, CANADA LEON BRICK, Manager

A Rendezvous for Particular People

Devoted exclusively to a superior presentation of personally selected MOTION PICTURES

MUSIC OF A HIGH ORDER SYMPHONIC ORCHESTRA (9 Artists)

The Garden Theatre is a favorite resort for those who are fond of Motion Picture entertainment in its highest form. Night after night the spacious auditorium is taxed to its capacity, the audiences representing the most respectable and influential element of Toronto. During the summers of 1911 and 1912 tourists to the number of hundreds bestowed their patronage on this institution. The travel season is once more at hand and to those who may visit Toronto let it be known that we are always glad to greet old friends—always anxious to make new ones.

Let us quote the closing paragraph of an editorial in re this Theatre, which recently appeared in the Toronto Star.—

"Lastly, there is about this theater, the management, the audience, and the arrangement alike, an air of refinement as unmistakable as it is rare, and which cannot fail to impress even the most casual visitor."

The presentation of a moving picture without the accompaniment of appropriate music is like the presentation of Grand Opera without the accompaniment of an orchestra. That is why the Garden Theatre maintains an orchestra of soloists who, with constant practice and rehearsal, are able to interpret and convey to the spectators, the various moods and emotions of the actors in the picture or enliven those scenes of nature or current events where men or women do not actively participate.

The artistic presentation of a moving picture is now conceded to be in importance equal to its original reflection on the sensitive film.

We have and are making this artistic presentation a constant study to the delight of the thousands of our regular patrons.

During the summer months the Theatre will be found delightfully cool; the ventilating arrangements being such that a plentiful supply of fresh air is assured.

Open evenings, 7:15 to 10:40. Matinee, Saturday only, 2 to 5.

BISON.

AT SHILOH (2 parts, July 5).—During a temporary cessation of hostilities below the Mason-Dixon line, Col. Carlton is granted leave of absence, and accompanied by Lieut. Carney, his daughter's sweetheart, visits his Southern home. There Lieut. Carney is honored by Virginia Carleton, accepting his proposal of marriage. At the expiration of their furlough, the lieutenant and the colonel leave to rejoin their regiment.

Strife of war dangerously adjacent prevents the making of a trip by the Carltons to get a new wedding outfit, with the result that the mother unpacks the attic trunk and her own wedding gown undergoes alterations for the happy occasion of her daughter's marriage.

Meanwhile, the opposing armies draw nearer and Grant's force is discovered by the Confederates to be in a weak condition. To enable the strategic maneuver of the Confederates taking advantage of this position of the Federals, Lieut. Carney voluntarily assumes the perilous responsibility of slipping through the Federal lines to warn other Confederates of the contemplated attack, likewise securing their reinforcement. This plan of Lieut. Carney's is thwarted at a crucial period by the Federals detecting his effort to get through their lines. Carney's horse is shot and he is compelled to seek safety in flight. The chase ends with Lieut. Carney fleeing to the home of his sweetheart, hotly pursued by the determined Federals, who suspect he bears important dispatches bearing on the hazardous position of their division. When Carney breaks into the house, Virginia and her mother are draping the wedding dress on an improvised "form" beneath which Carney is hidden as the Federals enter.

Driven to desperation, Virginia is compelled to play the part of an obliging hostess to gain time. The tired Federals succumb to her charms and she is enabled to gain time to assist Carney in escaping. The officer of the squad becomes intoxicated, and Virginia, with the assistance of Carney and two family slaves, has his uniform changed to that of Carney's, and the Federal, in Confederate uniform, is put on a wagon and sent away in apparent flight, which is detected by the Federals, who give chase. Carney then escapes.

With the help of the passport which he finds in the coat of the Federal officer, Carney delivers his message in safety, enabling the Confederates to accomplish their purpose. This advantage is later turned in the opposing army's favor, and the Confederates are forced into the "Hornet's Nest," where lack of water aids in weakening their opposition. Virginia's horse, ridden by Carney, is sent with a note asking for water, and Virginia accomplishes the perilous feat of carrying through the fighting lines of the Federals enough water to enable the hard-pressed Confederates to hold their ground until the Federals, in command of Gen. Grant, decide to abandon trying to gain their place of retreat. Virginia is acclaimed a heroine by the cheering army of Confederates, and she flies, embarrassed, to the eagerly waiting arms of Lieut. Carney.

THE GIRL REPORTER (July 6).—Pearl White, reporter, is ordered by her newspaper to get an interview with the mayor, Frank Brockly. She visits his house just as the mayor leaves it in an automobile. A valise belonging to the mayor drops off and Pearl finds it. She enters the house believing the mayor will return for it. The butler admits her and bids her wait. She enters the parlor. Meanwhile, "Natty" Nixon, a sneak thief, finds the door open and enters the house. Pearl mistakes him for the mayor. He plays the part. Later, he locks her in the room and tries to escape, taking the valise Pearl found with him. The butler sees him and chases him down the street, finally capturing him. Meanwhile the mayor returns and discovers Pearl. He thinks she is a thief and she thinks the same of him. He cows her with a revolver and is about to phone the police when by a trick she wrests a revolver from him. She phones the police and two policemen are sent to the mayor's mansion on the double-quick. They enter just as the butler returns with "Natty" and eventually all entanglements being straightened out, Pearl gets the interview and all ends well.

MUCHLY ENGAGED (July 6).—Richard Hunter is a flighty and evidently a forgetful young man. He calls on Ethel, vows she is the only girl he has ever loved and gives her an engagement ring to bind their faith. He next calls on Gertrude and goes through practically the same performance. He returns home and is informed by his valet that Marguerite another girl friend of his called him up. He decides to visit her, and does. While there, he again falls in love and gives her a ring to bind their engagement. Later, he walks along the street and is hit by an automobile. A great crowd gathers and while he is not seriously injured, still he is hurt enough to have to be carried home and put in bed. Newspaper reporters get on the job and a full account of the accident and the injuries to Richard appears in all the papers. Ethel reads of it and getting some flowers proceeds to pay her fiance a visit. The other girls also read of it and also come to nurse him back to health. The three meet, with the result that a free-for-all fight very nearly ensues when explanations are in order, and results in the throwing of his rings at Richard by all three girls. Later, fulfilling his prediction that the girls like to be fooled, they return, but again they meet and all chances of reconciliation are at an end.

WHO IS IN THE BOX (June 29).—Chester is kidnapped by a jealous rival. Pearl is engaged to find him. A box is bought in which Chester is to be put and shipped back to his lady love. Pearl releases Chester and hides in the box, hoping to capture the criminals. The box is thrown onto a wagon and proceeds on its way. After falling off and badly marring Pearl's neat appearance and stunning beauty, the box is delivered at its destination, where Pearl is released. She is rewarded with a ten-dollar bill by Chester for saving his life, and she determines to give up detecting and engage in something more satisfying.

MRS. SHARP AND MISS FLATT (June 29).—Belmont courts the widow and her friend at the same time. He makes excuses to one and calls on the other after promising to take the first to the theater. Unsuspecting, she calls on her friend and finds Belmont there. She unmasks his perfidy and he is accorded very drastic treatment, eventually getting an unsought for wetting from Miss Flatt. She gets a seltzer bottle and speedily, though vichyously, brings him to his senses.

AN HOUR OF TERROR (July 1).—Ralph, the Doctor's half-brother, is caught in the act of stealing money from the Doctor's safe, of which he had full charge. He gambles it away, and again steals some of the Doctor's money. This time the Doctor loses patience with him and orders him from the house. The Doctor and his wife have forgotten of Ralph's existence. Meantime he has gone from bad to worse and being sadly in need of money, again visits the Doctor's home. Finding Pearl alone, he compels her at the point of a revolver to promise to make the Doctor give him $500. The Doctor returns and overpowers Ralph. He has his wife phone the police. Ralph induces them to listen to his plea and brings in their mother's name. They are touched and help him escape, and when the police arrive they have no one to arrest. Ralph promises to reform and the Doctor, for his mother's sake, resolves to give the erring youngster just one more chance.

JANE MARRIES (July 3).—Jack is a rather gay young bachelor, and it is only the fact that he is at the end of his financial rope that causes him to consider seriously a ridiculous will made by his departed aunt, specifying that he must be married before his twenty-sixth birthday or her fortune is to be used to establish a home for "Indigent Plumbers." The day of the twenty-sixth birthday arrives, and a curt note from his aunt's lawyer notified him that he must be a married man by 4:00 p. m. or sacrifice a fortune to undeserving plumbers.

Jack puts it up to the lawyer to get him anyone that will leave him after the ceremony. He goes into the park for a walk, where he rescues a girl from a pickpocket, and gets a serious knife wound in the arm before the thug is overcome. Jack finds himself in the hospital and only two hours to find a bride. The girl in gratitude hastens to her fathers office and shows him the card of her rescuer. Her father is the lawyer and she learns that Jack must have a wife in a few hours. Jane, without telling her father, promptly decides to save the fortune for the young man, and with her maid procures a license, ring and minister and veiling herself in an automobile veil, goes to the hospital, where Jack is married just in time. The lawyer comes to sympathize with Jack in his loss, and learns that his daughter has become a bride.

Expostulations are too late, and Jane swears her father into secrecy and returns to her home, leaving Jack in ignorance of his wife's identity. However, he soon learns who his wife is.

THE OLD MELODY (2 parts—June 30).—Silas and Maggie reside in the country and are sweethearts. Silas comes courting, bringing his violin. Silas and Maggie marry and go to the city. The story is carried forward ten years and they have a child eight years old, Dora. Silas has become a successful business man and Maggie and he have drifted apart. At a ball at his home Silas shows a partiality for a society woman. Maggie is piqued and in a spirit of revenge allows Hamilton to pay her marked attentions. The next day Maggie becomes desperate in her loneliness and telephones Hamilton to come and take her out for an auto ride. He takes her to a roadhouse of somewhat shady repute. Silas and the society woman come to the same place and are ushered into an adjoining room. In the meantime little Dora finds her father's violin, which has been stored away for years. Silas hears Maggie's voice and she recognizes his and leaves the room, leaving Hamilton there. Silas creates a scene by breaking in the door and attacking Hamilton. Maggie hurries home and is met by Dora, who has her father's violin; they pack and go back to the farm. Silas returns home, sees the violin which has been left behind; it awakens tender memories and he hurries after his wife and child. They are reunited and once more happy.

A SHIFTING FORTUNE (July 4).—Marcus, Gertrude's grandfather, owns a farm adjoining Jim's and the young people are attracted to each other. This feeling is not shared by their respective hired men, Jake and Dick. Dick clears Jim's field of rocks by the simple process of throwing them over the fence, into Marcus's field. Jake throws them back, and Gertrude and Jim have difficulty in keeping the men from fighting. Dick's final act of reprisal is to unload a wheelbarrow of rocks on Marcus's land during the absence of Jake.

Harry, a mining engineer, comes to the country for his vacation, and secures board in Marcus's house. Gertrude is attracted to Harry, and this has a saddening effect on Jim.

While strolling through one of Marcus's fields, Harry finds the rocks Dick has brought there in his wheelbarrow. Harry discovers traces of copper in the rocks, and secretly determines to buy the farm. He returns to the house in time to find an old skin-flint of a squire threatening to foreclose a mortgage he holds on Marcus's farm.

Harry follows the squire home, and buys the mortgage. He then proposes to Gertrude that she become his housekeeper, and makes violent love to her. She and Marcus leave, indignantly, not waiting to be driven out. Jim arrives at this juncture, and Gertrude has difficulty in keeping him from attacking Harry. Jim takes Gertrude and Marcus to his house. Gertrude is thoroughly disillusioned in regard to Harry.

Harry writes to a capitalist, in New York, asking him to come on, investigate the copper property, and advance money to develop it. The capitalist arrives, and Harry takes him to the copper-bearing rocks. Jake, the hired man, arrives. He is very indignant at finding the rocks, and informs the horror-stricken Harry that they belong on Jim's land.

The capitalist goes to Jim, and offers to develop the copper mining possibilites of his farm. Jim, Gertrude and Marcus are happy, and Harry finds himself with a useless farm on his hands.

A WOMAN'S FOLLY (July 3).—Having married a man much older than herself, Mrs. Grayson cannot get over the habit of flirting with young men. She is finally detected allowing a young man to kiss her at a reception which the husband and wife are attending. The husband's anger is so great that he suffers a stroke of apoplexy and falls unconscious at her feet. A doctor is hastily summoned and his final verdict is that the husband will live, a voiceless, helpless paralytic to the end. Brought to a realization of what her frivolous conduct has resulted in, the young wife takes her husband to a far western city, where she supports herself and husband by taking up her old occupation of a nurse.

After two years of this life, she meets and falls in love with a young doctor at the hospital. He returns her love, believing her to be single and urges her to marry him. Naturally she refuses, though without giving any valid reason. Upon reaching home, however, she realizes that the doctor is entitled to know the reason. She writes him a note, asking him to call at her home the next afternoon when she will tell him why she refused.

The doctor comes at the appointed time. Then comes to the woman, who has sacrificed her life to duty because of a moment's folly, a great temptation. The young doctor, seeing a man of fifty a helpless paralytic, jumps to a natural conclusion; and as the words that will drive him away from her forever, tremble on her lips, she hears the doctor say, "How long has your father been like this?" "Two years," is her reply. The young doctor replies: "And did you think I was so selfish as not to be willing to help you bear the burden? I'll go to my office and write Dr. Jackson, the specialist, who knows. He may reverse the verdict, and restore him to health."

Then come bitter hours of struggle for the woman, torn between love and duty. The doctor returns. A letter has been dispatched to Dr. Jackson and in his hand he holds an emblem of happiness—the engagement ring. As he places the ring on her finger, the paralytic husband moves the arm that still retains life and knocks a glass from the table. The crash calls forth from her torn soul and a cry of agony. She realizes what she was about to do.

Honor prevails. The tempted woman pours forth her story. "He is my husband. The fault was mine. I will bear the burden of the end." The young doctor loves her, but he, too, is an honorable man, and he takes her hand and bids her be brave. He then goes out of her life forever. Again the young wife takes up her burden, to bear it as best she can without hope or love.

SUSPENSE (July 6).—A young couple live in the country several miles from town. Their only maid, dissatisfied with the lonely life, leaves the house without any other notice than a note, telling the mistress she is leaving and will put the back door key under the back door mat.

The wife, left alone with her baby, receives a telephone call from her husband saying he will not be home until late and asking if she will be safe. The wife answers that she will be, and later, when she discovers the maid's note, although fearful of being alone, determines not to alarm her husband. She locks the house securely, but afraid to go around the house to get the key, leaves it outside.

A tramp peering through the window sees the wife alone and when she takes the baby upstairs to bed, attempts to get into the house. The wife, hearing the noise, is alarmed and, looking from the window, discovers the tramp. She rushes to the phone and calls her husband, but the conversation is interrupted by the tramp cutting the wires.

The husband, however, has been informed that a tramp is entering the house, and rushes out of the office. In his haste to get to his wife, he enters another man's automobile and dashes away. The man, seeing his machine stolen (as he thinks) gets the police and makes chase. The husband is caught and detained by the pursuers, but makes his escape and dashes on.

In the meantime, the tramp has discovered the back door key and entered the kitchen, where he helps himself to food. The wife has barricaded the bedroom door with furniture and is waiting in terror. Finishing his meal, the tramp goes upstairs, searches for valuables and finding none, breaks down the door leading into the bedroom. Shots are heard and the wife faints in terror as the tramp dashes from the room and upon the steps where he meets the husband, followed by the police. After a struggle, the tramp is secured and bound by the police. The husband finding his wife safe, explains his wild ride to the police and the pursuer and fondly kisses his wife.

NESTOR.

AN INDIAN NEMESIS (June 30).—Billy, a cowboy, sees in Hope, the daughter of Ranchman West, "the only girl." Hope thinks Billy is "just right." Lawson, a cowpuncher and ugly man at heart, is wont to visit the Indian Reservation and does not hesitate to make advances to a little squaw, who loves him heart and soul. One day he visits her and leaves abruptly. She follows him, as she wants to help him from his big weakness—drinking. She catches up with him at with her instead. Angered at her persistency he strikes her down. Looking back he sees Billy come along, pick her up and carry her away. The saloon habitues prevent Lawson from following him. Billy takes the little squaw back to the Indian camp and is shown a little papoose—the door of the saloon and entreats him to come Lawson's child. He talks with the old chief and they smoke the pipe of peace.

Lawson interests some of his cronies in a cattle theft. They cut out the cattle on West's ranch and when they get to a hiding-place, Lawson tells his men to wait. He goes to the ranch and is in time to have West ask him to see Hope on her way to the ranch house. The two ride off together, and Lawson has difficulty in restraining himself from showing his affection for Hope.

Billy detects the cattle stealing and seeks West and informs him that cattle rustlers are at work. He rides off, and on the way meets the little squaw, who has been looking for Lawson and who has seen him riding with Hope. Billy follows them to the ranch house. He is in time to see the frightened Hope suddenly clasped in Lawson's arms. He interferes and Lawson is ordered away, while Billy remains to calm the girl. Lawson, from a window, sees a love scene between Hope and Billy and inwardly rages. He sees Billy take a handkerchief from Hope and put it into his pocket. Outside the men come face to face and Lawson openly taunts Billy and snatches the handkerchief. In a short but fierce fight Billy forces Lawson to put the handkerchief back where he found it, and as the men draw their guns Hope comes between them, and Lawson presumably goes. As the lovers enter the house, Lawson draws his gun. The little squaw comes up behind him and watches tensely. As Billy and Hope are seated at the table, a shot rings out and the lamp which stands on the little table between them is shattered.

Billy begs Hope to go in the other room. He drops on his stomach and crawls quickly behind the open door, gun in hand. Lawson rushes to the window, determined to end Billy's life; seeing nobody, he goes to the open door and the little squaw creeps up to the window. Lawson goes out, mad with rage, and goes to his horse. Billy springs to the window and levels his gun at Lawson. Before he can fire, however, he is shot in the hand, and Lawson, who is mounted, is commanded to throw up his hands. He does this. He is forced to open the window and to open the door. Lawson makes a move toward his gun and Billy would kill him but for Hope's intervention. As Lawson leaves he throws the little squaw aside.

Col. West rides over to visit his neighbor, Carson, who promises assistance to capture the cattle thieves. They arrange their plan of campaign.

The following morning Billy visits Hope. Mr. West comes and tells Billy what they intend to do, and Billy joins them.

Lawson and his pals get away with the cattle. They are seen by one of the scouting cowboys, he locates West, who leads an attack on the horse thieves, who ride away, leaving the cattle. The men are followed and Lawson escapes, with Billy and others hard on his heels.

Lawson reaches the ranch house and goes inside. Billy, not knowing that Lawson is there, goes in and is covered by his enemy, who takes his gun away from him. Lawson is about to kill Billy, when the little squaw shoots, in the back, killing him. Hope runs into Billy's arms.

THE RANGE DEADLINE (July 2).—Dave, the sheriff, with his son looking up into his face drinking in every word, and with his wife, Edna, sewing and watching them both, tells the boy a true story. Ths is the tale:

John Mabery, sheep rancher, comes upon big Dave and his daughter, Edna, in a love scene. He smiles and approves and watches them go with affection in his glance. At the cattle ranch Jim Hall, Tex and other cattlemen discuss the court's decision and decide to take the law into their own hands and establish a range deadline. Jim rides out and puts up some notices, which tell the sheep rancher that any sheep found beyond the line will be shot. John Mabery and Hall meet as the latter is posting the last sign. Mabery tears it down after a heated argument. He is too late to reach his own gun and Hall shoots him, but as he falls he clutches the reins of Hall's horse and the latter, to his horror, is unable to unloosen the grip of the fallen man. In a quandary, he cuts the bridle reins upon either side of the hand and hurries back to his cabin.

Edna, out riding, sees one of the signs and tears it down. She comes across her father's body and when the paroxysm of grief has passed she swears to hunt down the murderer. She seeks out Dave and he goes in quest of the perpetrator of the crime. Naturally, he goes to the cattlemen's ranches and chance leads him to Jim Hall's ranch. Jim has returned beforehand and told Tex of the occurrence and together they agreed to hide the evidences of the crime. Jim replaces the shell with a loaded cartridge in his gun and they drop the incriminating bridle down the well.

At this moment Dave, looking through his field glasses, sees the action. He rides up and sees Jim and Tex quietly smoking. Dave asks for Jim's gun and it is handed to him. He empties it and hands the gun back. He then arrests the surprised Jim.

In court the evidence is all in Jim Hall's favor, as Tex and others swear he never left the cattle ranch. The trial appears to have ended and the men smile when Dave produces the reins and the missing piece bearing a metal clasp with Jim's initials. Hall loses his nerve and it is all over!

The tale is finished and the boy gives a big sigh. "I believe that story is about you and mother," he says, and Dave nods slowly.

HE AND HIMSELF (July 4).—Lee spruces himself up, says good-bye to his friend, the actor, and sallies forth to meet his girl. On the way to her home he meets his little cousin, Gertie, and they chat about family affairs. He says good-bye to her and goes to the door, but alas! Evelyn has seen him, and believing he is flirting, slams the door in his face. Poor Lee wonders what has happened and soon a note is thrust at him, telling him he is a base, deceiving wretch and never to speak to her again. Lee arrives at his rooms in a suicidal condition, but his friend, the actor, is one of those clever persons full of bright original ideas. "That's easy," he says, "Go as a friend of your own and square yourself." The idea sounds well and Lee decides to try it, and his friend makes him up with mustache and beard.

Lee gains admittance and his nervousness changes into cock-suredness when he finds he is not recognized. What is worse, though, Evelyn falls in love with him! Lee departs in a quandary. He consults the clever person, who tells him "Go back as yourself now." He does, and is ignominiously kicked out. Once more the man of ideas tells him to "return as the friend, steal something and then take it back as yourself and the girl is yours."

Lee carries this advice out to the letter and comes away with Evelyn's purse. The theft is discovered too soon, and Lee has to run for it. He drops the purse, but is caught and taken to the police court. Evelyn is telephoned for and so is the actor. They arrive and Lee pulls off the mustache. Evelyn is unforgiving until the Judge sentences Lee to six months' hard labor. Then she shrieks and relents and intercedes and finally takes him away with her.

TO THE BRAVE BELONG THE FAIR (July 4).—Alice's father tells the three suitors for his daughter's hand that the one who brings a Mexican prisoner to him will be given the girl in marriage. Residing near the Mexican border, Hiram, John and Eddie, the suitors, start immediately for a Mexican. Eddie is the first to come near one, but when he gets a good look at him he turns and flees with the Mexican close upon him. Finally Eddie is caught by the Mexican, who asks him for a match. As he is lighting his cigar, Eddie covers the Mexican, who proves to be a general, with his guns and makes the prisoner change clothes with him. Dressed in this fashion Eddie leaves the Mexican behind the bushes and proceeds, only to come upon a band of Mexicans dragging a gatling gun, who, thinking him a general, salute him. As Eddie is examining the gatling gun the disrobed Mexican comes upon the party, who, seeing the true state of affairs, are about to turn upon him, when Eddie orders them to march before the gun.

In the meantime, John has arrived at Alice's home with a tramp dressed in a Mexican Uniform whom he had captured going with the suit to the real Mexican general. He succeeds in making a deep impression upon Alice and is about to be married when he discovers Eddie and the Mexicans coming up the road. With a few leaps he is out of sight and Eddie is given the hand of Alice. Much the same fate happened to Hiram before he discovered John coming up the road.

ECLAIR.

WHY? (3 parts, June 4).—The story of the play deals with the vain attempt of a very wealthy scientist to reform his worthless son.

One day, after Roy's father had been particularly engrossed in his work, and had endeavored at dinner to interest Roy in a discussion of important points, the boy excused himself and made his way to his club, where he had the usual hilarious evening. At daybreak, he managed to get as far as his car, which had been waiting in front of the club, and when he reached home, his chauffeur helped him up to the steps and opened the door. Roy quietly crept to his room without disturbing any one, but when he found his easy chair, the excessive dissipation made itself felt, and he dropped off into a deep sleep, which became troubled with most unusual dreams.

In these dreams Roy saw the death of his father, due to an explosion in his laboratory, the reading of his will, which left his vast estate to the various members of the family—but with the stipulation in the son's case that he, Roy, should travel over the country and investigate conditions, so that he might know a little more about true life and find something more important to think of than wasting his time in idle dissipation.

In the travels which followed, allegorical tableaux are brought out showing in a most forceful manner, the abuses of child labor, the underpaid women workers on finery for the rich, the deadly results of the speed mania, the abuses of the railroad monopolies, the curse of drink, the methods of the wire tappers, who prey on those who hope to win fortunes through race track gambling, etc.

Finally Roy comes to a feeling of sincere sympathy with the poor, and when he attends a great banquet of the magnates, and this feast is interrupted by a shower of missiles through the windows, the party rushes to one large window, and there behold the great city of New York in flames.

The mob then rushes in to demand a place at the table, and Roy takes his place with them—against the trusts. The magnates then open fire—and Roy wakes up. In the returning of consciousness, Roy comes to a realization of the sinful wasting of his intelligence and energy, and he goes to his father's laboratory to ask if he may assist him in his researches.

QUICKSANDS (2 parts—June 30).—Frank, in love with Helen Hubbard, lives beyond his means in order to buy her costly presents. He works for her father. His own father is in danger of disgrace owing to financial troubles, and Frank steals from his employer to assist his parents. Then to recoup, he plays the market with some more ill-gotten money and loses. He thought it was Hubbard's tip that he was playing. He gets work on a schooner sailing for the South Pacific. A mutiny springs up and he is marooned with the captain. After many days of hardships their little boat comes to an island, but too late to save the captain. Frank meets the missionary and his daughter, Ruth. A man plus a girl plus a paradise of an island equals love. At home Helen sells all of Frank's presents and pays her father back all that Frank had taken. Then she waits.

A year passes. The call of the white man is heavy on Frank; the new life is too exotic. Ruth has never known any other life and cannot understand his desire to get "home." The semi-annual boat comes to their island and the call of home becomes a passion. Ruth, seeing this, tells him to return—she will be happy in his happiness. He does, even though her heart breaks. At home he finds his debt squared and Helen engaged to Warren. One night he follows a strange man into his former office. Thinking it to be a burglar, he telephones the police and to Hubbard. Then the burglar's hat falls off and Frank recognizes him as Warren and decides to save him for Helen's sake. Warren was taking the money to cover a defalcation. The police and Hubbard with Helen are heard coming, so there is no escape. Frank makes up the deficit in the safe from his own resources, and then pretends that Warren has captured him. Frank is spared by Helen's pleadings—she guesses the truth, and Warren has been taught a severe lesson. The call of the tropics and an Island Paradise are strong and Frank returns to Ruth.

PRIDE OF LONESOME (July 3).—The cheery smile of big-hearted Ed Daton, a simple Westerner, causes a little girl to sense the thrill of happiness. Her desire for a greater measure of this, to her unknown joy, prompts her to steal away from her abusive parents and wander back to the little station known as "Lonesome." She is taken in by big Ed and the other noble herdsman and develops under the new environment to a bright and cheerful maiden. Out of gratitude she guards the welfare of her benefactors and prompts them to nobler deeds of manhood. Her activity in behalf of her friends causes her to arouse the animosity of the keeper of the one grog shop "Lonesome" boasted of and with the decrease in business he conspires against "Pride," as she becomes known to the people. The plots against her were duly foiled and one would have been disastrous to the perpetrators but for the timely arrival of "Pride," who prevents their untimely demise on the promise never to attempt further molestations.

A TALE OF DEATH VALLEY (July 5).—Lillian Pierce and Jim Wentworth love each other and with the consent of Lillian's parents become engaged. Jim was employed on her father's ranch and was a favorite of the father's. Will Mason was working on the same ranch, but less favored and his proposal was met with the announcement of Lillian's engagement to Jim. Will concocts a plot with Julia Rivers, a dance hall frequenter, who agrees to pose as Jim's deserted wife. The plot works well, and Jim in disgrace leaves the scenes of what had been his paradise. Will presses his suit with a vengeance and still meeting with staunch refusal, he seeks aid from a band of desperadoes in death valley. His mission is fruitless and he succumbs to exhaustion. Later Jim comes upon the bleeched skeleton of Will Mason and the forged marriage certificate. The reunion of Jim and Lillian is a foregone conclusion.

RELIANCE.

THE HOUSE OF PRETENSE (June 23).—Mr. and Mrs. Deacon live together in a beautiful mansion. No childish voice is ever heard in the big empty halls. In his office, Deacon makes a pal of his scrubwoman's little boy and they have a great game together. Beatrice, oppressed by the loneliness of her home, visits an orphan asylum daily where she has fallen in love with little Anna, whom she would love to adopt, but dare not for fear her husband would object. The little boy's mother dies and the child comes to his friend Deacon, who assures the little fellow that "you'll be my boy now." The same day Beatrice brings home Anna. Deacon slips in with Dick and fixes him up so as to make a more favorable impression in Beatrice' eyes. His wife, fussing over Anna, hears a knock. As he enters he sees the child close in her arms and slowly they understand each other. He brings forth Dick and they clasp hands, and into their hearts comes a real feeling for each other for the first time in many days. Later a happy wife and a straight limbed son watch a boyish father and a wee daughter play a rather uneven game of ball on the big lawn.

THE TANGLED WEB (3 parts—June 28).—Hugh Conway, a young college student, takes Leone St. Regis, of doubtful morals, to a fraternity tea. He is requested to withdraw because of Leone. An argument follows and Hugh knocks one of his fellow students down, then withdraws with Leone. For his misdemeanor he is expelled from college. He goes to the home of Leone to say farewell. She uses every art at her command to persuade him to stay with her, but he remains obdurate. A heated argument follows, during which Hugh becomes so furious that he is about to strike Leone when the maid enters with the tea. Hugh orders her roughly from the room, then gives his parting words to Leone—that he is done with her forever—and exits. Leone, almost crazed by his desertion, goes to her room and seriously wounds herself with a pistol shot. A loud report is heard and maid and butler rush into Leone's room. Leone, regaining consciousness, charges Hugh with the crime, to avenge herself for his desertion. The officers arrive, learn the supposed facts of the case, and later Hugh is arrested for attempted murder. The evidence being so strong against him, he is sentenced for seven years. Leone is jubilant over his conviction.

Five years elapse. Hugh escapes from prison. The growth of a Vandyke beard and mustache, together with the prison pallor, effectually disguise him almost beyond recognition and he seeks solitude in his summer home. James Stark, a resident, receives notice that his note for $2,000 and bearing interest is due to Samuel J. Elder. His son, Dick Stark, an inveterate gambler, requires money. His father, unable to give him it because he has but half of the amount required for the payment of the note, is forced to refuse. Stark appeals to Elder for an extension of time, which is refused, Elder even refusing to take half the amount. The evil brain of Dick concocts a plan by which he may obtain the note for a sum of $500, to which his father reluctantly agrees.

Hugh goes out for a ride, dismounts in the roadway near a mansion to remove pebbles from his horse's hoof and is about to remount, when casting his eyes through an iron fence, he meets those of Ruth, the daughter of Elder, gazing upon him. In a shady lane, Hugh hears the approach of rapid hoof beats; he draws in at the side and three ruffians ride rapidly by. Hugh strikes off into the woods. Further on the ruffians dismount. Elder enters the scene on horseback and is waylaid by them. Hugh springs from the side of the road to the rescue and engages in a terrific battle with two of them, the third going through Elder's pockets and taking all papers therein. The three men then escape. Hugh recognizes in Elder the lawyer who defended him at his trial and assists him to his horse and home, where it is discovered that a paper incriminating Elder has been stolen by the ruffians. Hugh makes known his true identity to Elder, who has all along believed in his innocence. Elder introduces him to his daughter Ruth under an assumed name. Thus the lovers are brought together.

In the meantime Dick Stark has received the papers taken from Elder and delivers them to his father, who finds not only the note but the incriminating paper which now gives him the greater power over the man who would give him no quarter. Hugh declares his love for Ruth. It is returned. Elder discovers them in embrace. Hugh asks for his daughter's hand. Elder agrees to give it if Hugh will find the missing papers. Stark calls upon Elder and demands the hand of his daughter for his son, Dick. The scene is overheard by Hugh, who follows them to their home and locates the hiding place of the missing papers. The following day Stark takes his son to see his fiancee. Hugh obtains the papers during his absence and with a sheriff goes to the home of Elder, where Stark and his son are arrested. The papers are safely returned to Elder. Hugh claims his reward—Ruth.

A month later, Hugh and Ruth, now married, attend a dog show, where he again meets his Nemesis—Leone. Upon their return home, he receives a telegram from her, demanding his immediate presence. Realizing that it is in her power to destroy his present happiness, he goes. Upon his arrival, she demands that he leave his wife and come to her. This he refuses to do, ignoring threats made by her to send him back to prison and to tell his wife. Excusing herself for a moment, she phones his wife to come to her home immediately if she would know the whereabouts of her husband. Her jealousy aroused, Ruth starts for Leone's home.

In the meantime, Elder calls on his old friend, Dr. Pierce. Ruth arrives in time to see that which convinces her of her husband's seeming unfaithfulness. A scene takes place, during which, in the presence of his wife, Hugh confesses all. The wife's heart softens, she takes Hugh home, leaving Leone to do her worst. Her final plan having failed, Leone goes mad, writes a letter to the police denouncing Hugh as an escaped convict. The servants discovering her plight send for Dr. Pierce, who responds to the call, taking Elder with him. The doctor, on his arrival, finds the note, calls Elder and shows him. The doctor administers an opiate which quiets the now mad Leone. Elder persuades her to sign a confession which will clear his son-in-law. She does so, then dies quietly. Elder and the doctor go to the home of Hugh, who is about to flee. Elder arrives in time, and, producing the confession which clears his name, quiets Ruth's suspicions and removes the tangle from the web of their lives.

THANHOUSER.

THE EYE OF KRISHLA (June 22).—The police captain had solved a couple of mysteries, and as news was light, the papers had given him much publicity, many of the writers declaring that Sherlock Holmes, Vidocq and William J. Burns were in the infant class compared to Police Captain Smith. It tickled his vanity, and caused him to look down upon the young man upon whom his daughter had cast her affections. In fact he forbade them to marry, announcing that his son-in-law must be "a man of brains."

The suitor seemingly accepts the edict, and as days passed, the captain gradually forgot him. Then another opportunity to distinguish himself came along, and he accepted it with alacrity. A Countess was robbed of a wonderful diamond, "The Eye of Krishla," and the circumstances surrounding the theft were most mysterious. It seemed to be a case calling for personal attention, and Captain Smith plunged into it.

From the Countess he received all the details, which really did not explain anything. The captain, however, picked up several clues, including a glove, which he failed to recognize as his own. Outside the window were plainly marked footprints, and with his faithful police dog, the gallant officer took up the trail. It lead to his own house, and worse than that, to his own room. The Countess had followed him, full of admiration of American detective work. Seemingly by accident, she knocked a cake of soap from the washstand. The dog crossed to it, the Countess picked it up. Then the chase ended, for in the cake of soap was imbedded the diamond which the Countess called "the Eye of Krishla."

The detective could not explain it, but sank helplessly into a chair as the Countess left the room haughtily, the diamond in her hand. Later the detective went downstairs, and was shocked to find the Countess smoking a cigar and talking to his daughter. Then he found that the noblewoman was the suitor he had flouted. He was indignant at first, but when the young man softly said that "your son-in-law can be relied upon to keep the secret of 'the Eye of Krishla,'" he realized that the time had come for him to surrender gracefully unless he wanted the city to laugh at "the famous" detective. So, like Davy Crockett's coon, he crawled down gracefully, and gave his consent to the marriage.

FORGIVE US OUR TRESPASSES (June 24).—The young telegraph operator had for many years been a faithful employee of the railroad, but one day when word was brought to him that his little daughter was dying, he left his post and hastened to her bedside in time to kiss his child before she died.

When the grief-stricken father returned to the station, a stern-faced man sat at the telegraph desk. It was the superintendent of the road. He listened contemptuously to the telegrapher's explanation, then told him curtly that he was discharged, saying that "family troubles" did not concern him.

The other railroads did not care to employ the disgraced telegrapher and the positions he was able to secure did not pay sufficient money to enable him to properly care for his wife. Grief for her child and privation did their work, and the man found himself alone in the world, with a bitter and implacable hatred towards the man who had caused him so much suffering.

Several years after the operator was discharged, a train dispatcher made a blunder which gave the right of way to two trains going in opposite directions on a single-track division. The dispatcher telegraphed to the station where the trains would meet, but received no answer. Finally, after repeated calls, he received a response. The operator was the discharged telegrapher, now a homeless wanderer, who had entered the station to find the operator in a drunken stupor. The superintendent, who had been waiting impatiently, pushed the dispatcher aside and answered the call himself. He instructed the man at the other end of the wire to switch one of the trains on to a siding and avert the collision. To his horror the answer came that his operator was drunk, that the man sending the message was the discharged telegrapher and that he would do nothing to avert the threatened wreck. The superintendent terror-stricken, doubly so because his wife and daughter were on one of the trains, pleaded with him, but the discharged man would not listen. But the memories of happier days came back to him, he seemed to see his little daughter as she said her prayers, and remembered the words "Forgive us our trespasses." His anger and resentment faded away. He ran to the nearby switch, just in time. And many lives were saved because of the prayer of a little child.

THE LOST COMBINATION (June 27).—The young mechanic was dissipated and easily influenced by evil companions. He frequently came home intoxicated and for months his wife patiently suffered ill treatment. Her father finally convinced her that she owed it to her child to bring her up under proper surroundings, so she left her husband, leaving a note in which she said that she and her little daughter had left him forever.

The husband, who was an expert workman in the employ of a large safe factory, neglected his work and finally was discharged. His habits made it hard for him to secure employment. Evil associates contaminated him and he at last joined a band of yeggmen, where his ability as a safe expert gained him leadership.

The wife obtained a divorce from her husband and married a wealthy man. They had one child, a little girl of three, and while she came first in his affections, the husband cared nearly as much for his little step-child.

The children were playing "hide and seek" in their home one afternoon and the elder child ran into a vault, which was built in the library wall, to hide. The steel door of the vault was accidentally locked and the child imprisoned. The step-father had changed the safe combination that very morning and had mislaid the paper containing the numbers. He tried vainly to open the vault, then remembered that several celebrated safe experts were among the convicts in a near-by prison. He telephoned to the warden and a convict was sent, under guard, to rescue the child from her predicament. The convict was the woman's former husband. He recognized her and refused to aid them until he learned that the child that was in such dire peril was his own little daughter, whom he had not seen since she was a baby.

Silently he bent over the combination, his quick ear on the alert to catch the fall of the tumblers as the combination numbers were passed, opened the safe and drew the half-suffocated child to safety.

Later he was paroled and left for the West to begin life anew under another name. The awakened love for his child had regenerated him.

MAJESTIC.

SIDE TRACKED BY SISTER (June 22).—The fashionably gowned woman brought her two daughters with her to the "summer resort hotel." The family seemed happy enough, but there was a skeleton in their closet. There was not a wide difference in years between the sisters, but the determined mother had decided that the younger girl should be kept in the nursery, so to speak, until the big girl was safely married.

The "side tracked" sister mourned in secret, but finally determined to assist fate. The elder girl had a suitor, but he had not reached the proposal stage. Little sister determined to be a cupid's assistant, and arrange things so the young man would have a chance to save big sister's life for, as the junior reasoned, "heroes always marry the girls they save from watery graves."

She scuttled their boat, just like a pretty pig-tailed pirate, but it did not lead to a proposal. The young man couldn't swim, the elder girl could swim, but was a coward, and saved herself, which left it strictly up to "little sister." She rescued the young man and he was grateful, but she never forgave him. He did not marry "big sister," he simply went away and it was lucky for him that he did not come back, for the girl who had saved his life would gladly have drowned him had she been able to put her hands on him.

He didn't really do anything awful, he simply was guilty of a lack of tact, and a weakness of observation which won him the scorn of the woman who had plucked him shrieking from the briny deep.

THE POLITICIAN (June 24).—The city had a mayor and a council, but the one who decided what laws should be passed and those that should be enforced, was the boss. He was not at all "refined," but he had one redeeming quality—no person in want ever went to him in vain.

The boss was a bachelor, and whenever he was asked why he did not marry, he replied, "I haven't any time to bother with women."

One memorable day the boss, while in one of the worst parts of the slums, chanced to witness an eviction. With his characteristic sympathy for "the under dog," he paid the amount the family owed and they were permitted to return to their home. A settlement worker witnessed the affair and she impulsively thanked the boss for his kindness. She was young and pretty and the politician's feelings toward the weaker sex underwent a sudden and decisive change.

As time passed the girl and the boss saw a good deal of each other and became great friends. Little by little, she told him of the misery in the slums caused by corrupt political conditions, and although he knew them far better than she did, for the first time he realized how serious conditions were, and how much he was to blame. He was a strong, resolute man and he acted. In spite of the protests of his political lieutenants, the gamblers and other violators of the law, who had bought protection for years, were raided and many of them driven from the city.

Among the people affected by the crusade was the girl's father. He was a wealthy contractor and had enjoyed many favors from the city administration. He intimated to the boss that it would be to the latter's advantage to give contracts to him, but the reformed politician firmly told him that the lowest bidder would get the work. In revenge the contractor told his daughter that the boss demanded a bribe and the girl believed her father, and told the political leader she never wished to see him again.

The party, displeased at the boss's actions, deposed him. But the boss did not care, for the girl, discovering that her father had deceived her, came to him and humbly asked his pardon for misjudging him. And the boss learned something which atoned for the loss of his political power, for the little settlement worker told him that she loved him.

DORA (June 28).—Dora, the heroine of Tennyson's famous poem, lived with her uncle, Farmer Allan and his son, William. Her uncle had cared for the girl since childhood, and longed for the day when she would wed his son. But William did not propose to the girl, and his father, mistaking his silence for bashfulness, called William and Dora to him, and informed them that it was his wish that they wed.

William, living in the same house with Dora and knowing her since they were children together, did not regard her as a sweetheart, and to his father's surprise and indignation, refused to marry her. The father stormed and threatened, but to no avail. Dora, who had always loved William, was heartbroken at her cousin's action, but generously tried to reconcile the two. But her efforts were useless, for the farmer ordered his disobedient son from his home.

The months passed, William obtained work at a neighboring farm and married a farmer's daughter. Illness and misfortune came upon him, but his father, stern and inflexible, refused to aid his disobedient son. But Dora, the forgiving, secretly sent money to William, contriving it so that he did not know from whom it came.

When William's son was five years old, William was taken sick and died. Dora, determined that the child and its mother should be forgiven by Farmer Allan, came to the little home and induced Mary, William's widow, to let her take the boy with her into the fields. There Dora and the child met the stern old farmer, and Dora told him that the boy was William's child. Allan, suspecting that the child's presence was due to a trick of Dora and Mary, upbraided Dora and ordered her to leave his home, but said that he would take the child.

Dora sadly returned to Mary's home,, but the high spirited mother, when told of the old farmer's action, refused to permit Dora to be sacrificed, and declared that they would take the child away from him, and she and Dora would work for the boy and care for him together. But when they reached the farm house, they found that the child had softened the old man's heart, and he humbly asked them to pardon him for the wrongs he had done to them and to the dead William.

"I'M NO COUNTERFEITER (July 2).—Willie and Hank were entered in the race for Katy's affection. Katy was the sheriff's daughter. Willie was the "pet aversion" of Hank, whom the sheriff thought to be a proper husband for Katy. One night, when the sheriff wasn't looking, Katy did elope with Willie—almost.

General excitement prevailed in Jayville Center. Newspaper rumors had it that right there in Jayville, counterfeiters were at work on spurious coin. Impossible! The only one in the town who believed this was Hank, and he kept a close lookout for suspicious characters. Hank happened happened across Willie and often made Willie mad. Willie proved this more than once with his left foot. In Hank's mind, suspicion pointed her index finger in the direction of Willie.

When Willie was eloping with Katy, Hank hurried to the sheriff and informed him of his daughter's flight with a counterfeiter. The sheriff and a posse pursued. The elopers seeked refuge in a deserted house, which proved to be the real counterfeiters' den. There was a real fight, and a tie up in the wedding business for a while, but Willie won out. The sheriff and his posse arrived. In the glory of his capture of the counterfeiters the sheriff is won over by Willie.

MIXED PICKLES (June 17).—Old Chowchow writes his "friend," telling her that his old aunt, Miss Dill Pickle, is going to take charge of his nephew for a few weeks, and that he will then be at liberty, and that he will come up and have a delightful time with her. He also addressed a letter to his old aunt, asking her to take care of the nephew. He puts the letters in the wrong envelopes. Accordingly, when the young nephew, who is a handsome brute, instead of going to the aunt's, goes to the young lady in whom his uncle is so profoundly interested, he makes a large hit with her. He thinks that he has a kind uncle to provide him with such congenial company. The other letter, of course, goes to the prim old aunt, who is shocked at the tone of it.

Uncle comes to town and immediately goes up to the flat of his dear one. His dear one is having the time of her young life. There is much consternation when the uncle is announced. In order to get the nephew out of the way and avoid suspicion, they dress him up as a maid and put a wig on him. There are complications, which end in the sex of the maid being discovered. The old uncle is very angry at the nephew for disturbing his dovecote. He is about to disinherit the nephew and leave his money to found a "Home for Friendless Fleas," when auntie comes on the scene, pulls the uncle off by the ear and leaves the nephew, who is more suited in age to the young lady's temperament, to live happily ever after.

THE GREAT UNWASHED (June 19).—Mrs. Harrap, a widow, in addition to having a keen eye for dust on the furniture, has a keen eye for gold dust. She seeks a husband with oodles of money and a tendency toward appoplexy. She notices in a newspaper, a story about Baggs, a millionaire, who has disguised himself as a beggar, and who will marry the girl who is most kind to him. The story mentions that his twin brother is also abroad and that there is possibility of the two being confused. Baggs is mentioned as having one pale face, thick hair, frank countenance, tranquil gaze and one beard.

As Mrs. Harrap goes into the street, she sees something, which, on close inspection, proves to be a man. He might have been a "geologist," as he had the soil of many countries on his hands and also on his face. She reads quickly the description in the newspaper. It corresponds with the appearance of the "object." She collects this object and bundles it into a taxi cab and takes it home. It is as dirty as any one man can be at one time. She doesn't like the idea of sitting at the table with him until he has been fumigated. She is "just out" of insectine. She asks him if he will have a bath. He consents to do it, although he says it will spoil his whole evening.

He goes into the bathroom and admires the soap. He doesn't use it, however, to take away the dirt, but to take away his appetite. He sprinkles a little talcum powder on it, to give it flavor.

His table manners are very bad. He dusts his shoes with the celery and drinks the water from the celery vase. He almost cuts his tonsils out eating with his knife. Our widow friend, convinced that this is only a millionaire in disguise, and disgust, stands for it, though she could hardly resist the temptation to turn the hose on him.

She decides that a good masseur would come in pretty handy through the door-way. The masseur is a brunette person, and, although he seems colored, he was born that way.

An admirer of the widow, who, unhappily is not embarrassed by millions, calls. He is jealous of His Ragship, and inquires if the widow dragged him out of the ashpan. He advises her not to let the dog catchers see him. In disgust he starts to go away. To add to the poor widow's trouble, she then is handed a newspaper which contains the following sad story: "The millionaire, W. Baggs, denies the statements made in a newspaper this morning. He has no brother, moreover, he is already married."

"AN UNEXPECTED MEETING" (July 2).—Bob and Jim find the weather very warm and decide the best means of refreshing themselves is to get away to the seashore together, but they have wives and think that alone they will feel the best less. With one of their friends, Dr. Smith, they concoct a scheme. Bob goes home and pretends to have a terrible fit. His wife calls for Dr. Smith, who comes and prescribes "the fresh-air cure" in the mountains with only a male companion, Jim, so our two friends go off and leave their wives behind. They decide, however, that Atlantic City is preferable to the mountains and they are next seen enjoying themselves on the sands. Their wives, however, also find it very warm and decide to go to Atlantic City to refresh themselves. Bob

"TRUE HEARTS" (July 4). — Little Jack, orphaned by the death of his mother, is taken into the humble home of the Simpsons. Jack and Sue grow up together childhood sweethearts. When Jack has grown to manhood they take a comfortable little farm and it is taken for granted by everyone that the two young people will some day marry. Helen Morrison, the beautiful petted daughter of a New York financier, is injured in an auto accident in company with her fiance and father, who escape practically uninjured. She is brought to the Simpson cottage nearby and not permitted to be moved. Sue sees Jack falling in love with the beauty and her gentle heart mourns in silence. But the girl's pretty ways win her friendship in spite of herself. Helen finds herself growing to care for the handsome youth, but when she learns by accident the unhappiness her coming has brought into the life of tender-hearted Sue, she remembers the duty she owes her benefactors as well as her father and fiance and crushes the growing love in her heart. She confides in Sue her coming marriage to Dick and returns to the city during Jack's temporary absence, leaving no message for him. Dick's true devotion makes her ashamed of cherishing thoughts of another in her breast on the eve of her marriage and she resolves to be worthy of his love and trust. Lonely and lovelorn, Jack follows her to the city only to learn of her marriage to another. At home the gentle-hearted Sue waits and prays for his return, and one day he does come back and the realization of her true-hearted devotion brings back the old love to his heart and Sue forgives and forgets.

LUX.

"SAMMY, THE SCORCHER" (June 27).—Sammy is a clerk, and his excess of energy not merely heats his blood, but sets his brain on fire. His fellow clerks make use of this human stove to cook a substantial meal, which is partaken of by the entire party. In the street Sammy attracts attention, and being of a bashful nature, takes refuge in a cab. But alas! the vehicle is soon on fire, and it is only after a long application of the fire engine hose that Sammy is cooled down to normal blood heat. Arriving home dripping wet he begins to feel chilly, till remembering that his head is still warm, he unscrews that useful member, and applying it to a pole, uses it as an up-to-date bed warmer, after which he turns in and enjoys the sleep of the just.

OH! YOU UNBREAKABLE DOLL (June 27).—Professor Slowcoach invents and constructs an unbreakable doll. In order that the secret of his invention may not be betrayed, he does not allow his servants to enter his workrooms. One afternoon, when he is out, the curiosity of the servants becomes too strong for them, and they enter the workroom and set the figure in motion. One of the servants is anxious to know what his master is doing, so he dresses as the doll and takes its place in the workshop. His master returns home with a gentleman who intends to buy the doll. The inventor displays the wonderful figure, and, to prove that it is unbreakable, deals it several hard blows with the hammer. The deal is closed, and the doll purchased. It is then removed to the home of the purchaser by two workmen, who are particularly impressed by the fact that it is unbreakable. Altogether the servant has such an uncomfortable time whilst playing the role of the unbreakable doll that he is not sorry when a loophole for escape presents itself.

PENNSY'S PAGEANT (1st Annual Athletic Pageant of the University of Pennsylvania on Franklin Field, Philadelphia, Pa., April 24).—The spectacle of fully five hundred young athletes, going through a mass drill in gymnastics in perfect unison, is impressive. Opening with a parade including the Track team, Football squad, Baseball team. Crew and gymnastic classes, the film shows sports and contests of all kinds, and amusing relay races. In pyramid building the Pennsy students prove themselves peers of the Arabs, and in one stunt they form a "human fence," which is suddenly flattened to the ground, as if struck by a scholastic cyclone.

COMING CHAMPIONS (Annual Athletic Games of the University of Pennsylvania, Franklin Field, Philadelphia, April 28).—This film opens with a one-mile high school championship relay race, showing the start: second man off; third man off; last man off. The finish shows W. Moore of De Witt Clinton High School, winning, and the Winning Team from De Witt Clinton High School, New York,—time, 3 minutes, 35 seconds.

Second:—Erasmus Hall High School, Brooklyn. Many other races were recorded. Exhibitions of vaulting, high jumping and pound throwing were also photographed.

A NARROW ESCAPE.—Mary had a little Sam, who was always following her about, but was too bashful to propose. Accordingly, in order to encourage him by examples of marital happiness, Mary takes him calling on several wedded friends, to whom she has previously written as follows:

"Sam hasn't proposed yet, and I want you to help me out. Will you and your husband please be extra affectionate when I bring Sam to call this evening? With love—MARY."

The tour is at first successful. Such a circuit of matrimonial dove-cotes, with couples billing and cooing in each, cannot fail to encourage a bashful bachelor, even though he is a little embarrassed by the elaborate displays of conjugal felicity he finds in every home. However, by the time he takes Mary home, he has made up his mind to "pop the question," when she discovers that she has left her handbag at some of the homes they have visited. Gallant Sam volunteers to recover it, if she will wait at the gate for his return. But he comes back "a sadder if wiser man."

For, on his return tour of the domestic circuit, he finds that a change has come o'er the spirit of their dreams. Instead of billing and cooing, as in the first act, every couple is quarreling and bickering over some domestic difficulty. As a climax, Mary's brother-in-law, who is so mad that he must fight somebody, throws the handbag at Sam.

"There was Mary, waiting at the church," but all she gets is the hanbag, and "So long, Mary." Sam beats it back to his bachelor den.

A CHARITABLE DECEPTION.—Bob Ellsworth is accidentally killed; his partner conceals the fact and continues to support his widowed mother and sister. Then comes a letter from the sister, saying that the mother is going blind, and wants to see her boy once more. The partner decides, after tearing up many letters, that he must break the sad news in person, but by the time he arrives the mother's eyesight is gone entirely, and she mistakes him for her long lost son. The sister recognizes the imposture, of course, but as her mother seems so happy in the return of the prodigal, she agrees to keep up the deception. But Bob's partner wants to be more than a brother to her and she becomes suspicious. Writing to the mine agent, from whom she receives regular remittances, she finds her brother left no estate, but that his partner has set aside a half interest in his own mine for the support of Bob's family. After such a kindly deception, there is nothing to do but admit the faithful "partner" to the family as son-in-law,

Motion Picture Rectifier
Set Front View

Better Light for Your Machine

The first requirement of good projection is a powerful steady light.

An arc lamp using direct current from a G-E Rectifier gives the finest light that can be obtained. The light is powerful and does not flicker like the light of an alternating current arc.

The G-E Rectifier not only improves the quality of the light, but at the same time it reduces the cost for current, because the rectifier furnishes current at the exact voltage needed by the lamp. Losses in rheostats are therefore entirely eliminated.

"Used Wherever Tickets Are Sold"

The Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register

is indispensable to all owners of moving picture houses, theaters, amusement parks, baseball parks and all amusement places which desire protection of their box office receipts.

A MARVEL OF SIMPLICITY, SPEED AND ACCURACY IN OPERATION — NO COMPLICATED MECHANISM.

AUTOMATIC REGISTER IS UNDER LOCK AND KEY AND YOU HOLD THE KEY—THUS CASH DRAWER MISTAKES ARE IMPOSSIBLE.

ALL TICKETS SOLD ARE REGISTERED and total sales are checked up in a moment's time.

The Machine is operated by Foot Pedal —One Pressure issues 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5 tickets—The Cashier simply presses a button which designates the desired number of tickets, leavboth hands of cashier free to make change.

The Machine when installed is flush with and becomes a part of the counter Taking up no room; it facilitates making of change and rapid handling of cash.

IN PROTECTING YOUR CASH RECEIPTS YOU ARE PROTECTING YOUR EMPLOYEES FROM TEMPTATION—KEEP AN ACCURATE DAILY RECORD OF YOUR BUSINESS: SELL TICKETS FROM 2 to 5 TIMES AS RAPIDLY AS AT PRESENT, WITH THIS WONDERFUL MACHINE.

Thousands of Moving Picture Houses, Theaters, Amusement Parks, Baseball Parks, Soda Fountains and Department Stores now use this machine with most satisfactory results.

Beautiful EUCLID BEACH, CLEVELAND, OHIO, operates 16 double slot machines.

If YOU want SURE PROFITS, ACCURACY AND PROTECTION, send at once to nearest office for our new illustrated descriptive catalogue and testimonial letters from satisfied patrons—IT WILL POINT THE WAY.

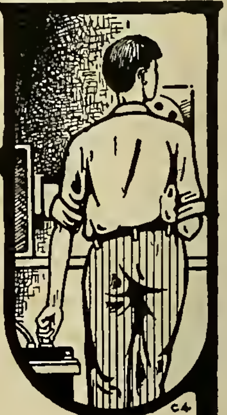
As the Operator Looks at it



As the Operator Looks at It

Just notice how easy this operator takes it. He doesn't have to work over a dangerous juice consuming rheostat at furnace heat any more since the was installed.

He can control the machine perfectly now with one hand--gets a clearer, whiter, steadier light and can adjust it to any of the three intensities without even the faintest flicker.

When we sold this machine we guaranteed it would absolutely

Cut 2-3 from the Monthly Lighting Bill

That sounded almost too good to be true, but they put one in on our 30 day free trial plan.

Did the machine "make good?" Well, the first month it reduced the bill from $22.70 to $9.24 and they operated more hours and got better light than ever before.

We can do just as well for you regardless of what voltage you are using and if you will send for our little free booklet, we'll explain how we do it.

Remember you are paying the Lighting Company 66 2-3 per cent more than you need to every day you wait.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

ONE ROUND O'BRIEN COMES BACK.

Now, Do as We Say and Get "Mutual Service" JUST TO GET NEW MAJESTICS!

Everybody's doing it. And there must be a reason. Fred Mace must be a reason. Billy Garwood must be a reason. Lamar Johnstone must be a reason. So must the New Majestic Girls—Francelia Billington, Marguerite Loveridge and Ann Drew. "Dora," adapted from Tennyson's classic, must be a reason. The other extreme, a comedy one—"One Round O'Brien Comes Back"—must be a reason. New Majestic stories must be a reason. Also New Majestic production. And New Majestic photography. Please swing service immediately just to get those New Majestics!

"One Round O'Brien Comes Back"

POSITIVELY June 29.

BUT Does He Come Back FOR YOU?

This is that second "O'Brien" picture of Fred Mace's that we tipped you would be the genuine comedy hit of the year. Fred Mace's comedy prize fighter—by far Mace's most famous comedy character—comes back especially to fill the coffers of "Mutual Service" exhibitors. Prepare to "play" him again and again! He'll actually improve with repeating. But have you arranged for your first crack at him yet? "One Round" releases Sunday, June 29. WHEN DO YOU GET HIM?
